PARKER-WOODLEE

Last Saturday morning, June 21, in San Antonio, at 11 o'clock Rev. J. Bell of the Baptist church united in marriage at his parsonage on 121 Grove Ave., Miss Ray Woodlee of Floresville and Mr. R. L. Parker of Sanderson.

The bride, a former teacher of the Dryden school, is well known here. Her congeniality and pleasing personality won for her a host of friends who wish her much success and happiness.

The groom, a brother of Mrs. Joel Nichols of here, is an employee of the G. H. & S. A. as brakeman. He is a well liked young man among his large circle of friends.

The happy young couple arrived in Sanderson on No. 109 Monday morning, and will make their home here. Their many friends extend congratulations and best wishes.

SANDERSON SHOPMEN

LOSE TO EL PASO

The local G. H. & S. A. shop team journeyed to El Paso last Saturday to play the first of a three-game series to decide the championship of the Southern Pacific Athletic Association in baseball for this district, against the shop team of El Paso. The game was a one sided affair and the local team met with an 11 to 1 defeat.

P. D. Lowry was in the mound for the local team while D. L. Duke received him. Bernie Gomez twirled for the El Paso aggregation.

The feature of the game was the sensational catch of Minton White on second base and placing his foot on the base making a double play.

The El Paso team expects to be in Sanderson July 12, and the 2nd game of the series will be played on that date. The winner of this district will play Houston and New Orleans teams in the southern champion series.

Those from Sanderson who were in the line-up were: Lowry, Minton and Carlton White, Duke, Bodkin, Stirman, Sharp and Skay and Hebnor of Del Rio.

BRIDE'S SHOWER

Honoring Mrs. Gayle Mussey, a recent bride, Mrs. Chester Smith gave a miscellaneous shower at her home last Saturday night. Many beautiful as well as useful gifts were received by the honoree.

Forty-two was played until a late hour. Mrs. W. H. Savage being the winner of first prize, a vanity case, while a glass jar of candy was the booby prize won by Mrs. W. A. Banner.

A delicious plate lunch consisting of toasted crackers, potato salad, iced tea, ice cream and cake were served.

BAPTIST SERVICES

Presbyterian Church, Sunday morning and evening at regular hours. Morning theme, "The Negative and Positive Fundamentals of Christianity." Evening theme, "Results of Sowing." Everyone is cordially invited to worship with us both hours.

On account of anxiety and over work caring for our daughter in El Paso for the last seven weeks, I shall not be able to visit in your homes as much as usual.

The evening hour we want every Baptist present to help close up the associational year. The association meets July 24th at Paisano Encampment grounds.

D. E. Adams,
Pastor.

FORMER SANDERSON GIRL WINS POPULARITY AT DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION

Following is an excerpt from the San Antonio Express on the doings of the Democratic Convention at New York:

"It turns out that the attractive good looks of a San Antonio girl is responsible for the story about 'flappers' in the Texas delegation, printed in some of the New York newspapers. Miss Georgia English, who is Mrs. Carter's secretary, is the possessor of extraordinary brunette charms and a particularly fetching French bob. Her beauty has completely bewildered New York newspaper men."

Miss English lived in this city for a number of years and she has a large circle of friends who congratulate her on her popularity.

ALL WOOL BIDS REJECTED

The offering of the spring clip of wool to buyers who were present from several large concerns of Boston and Philadelphia was made by the Sanderson Wool Commission Co. Monday.

Those present were a number of ranchmen who have wool stored in the warehouse; over ten wool buyers, several representatives of the Southern Pacific Lines.

Opening of the sale, all of the lots were offered to the bidders who tendered sealed bids. When the bids were opened, Joe Kerr announced all bids were rejected and no sale made. Over 500,000 pound wool is stored in the local warehouse.

Mrs. Druse Entertains in Honor of Mrs. Ketchum

A very pleasant evening was spent at the home of Mrs. Druse June 17th, when she entertained the L. A. to B. of R. T. in honor of our sister, Mrs. Ketchum.

Various jokes were told by way of amusement and along with this a "penny contest" which furnished the necessary stimulant for the brain. Mrs. Surratt received first prize, a beautiful box of handkerchiefs, while Mrs. Crittenden received a large stick of candy for consolation. Mrs. Druse presented the honoree with a salt and pepper of Oakwood China, a gift from the Auxiliary.

Dainty refreshments of cherry loaf, cake and iced tea were enjoyed by all present.

The sisters departed at a late hour wishing our sister much joy in her new home, and declaring our hostess a 100 per cent entertainer.

T. W. DAVIDSON GAVE A SHORT TALK HERE

Lieut. Gov. T. W. Davidson, candidate for Governor, passed through Sanderson Tuesday on passenger train No. 101, enroute to West Texas to deliver a series of speeches.

Mr. Davidson was met at the train by several of his friends and escorted to the depot where he spoke for several minutes on a few of his few of his chief planks in his platform which were: road maintenance, prosecution of mob violence and masked outrages. There was quite a crowd at the depot shaking hands with him and listening to his brief talk.

He was to speak at Alpine and El Paso and circle back to Austin over the T. & P.

Boy Scout Saved Brother

Just as his seven-year-old brother who had fallen through the ice on a pond near Kalamazoo, Mich., was being drawn under the surface by the current, fourteen-year-old Scout Carl Johnson, at peril of his own life, plunged into the icy water and, securing a hold on the little fellow, pulled him to safety. The scout then extricated himself from the water's grip and the broken hole, and promptly hustled his small brother home to recuperate from the ice bath. Application for an honor medal for the youthful hero has been made to the national court of honor by the local council.

PIMPLES AND BUMPS ARE AWFUL PESTS

Girls and women of the most even dispositions are quick to resent direct attacks on their character, or bold advances. But it is hardly explainable why these same folks tolerate disgusting pimples, blotches, bumps, "breaking out," etc., which are even worse pests than that.

These skin diseases quit annoying people quickly after first few applications of the wonderful Black and White Ointment, and the regular use of Black and White Soap. The cost is so small none need hesitate because they can't afford it. The 50c size of the Ointment contains three times as much as the liberal 25c size. WASHINGTON NEWS.

The government's intention to go to the bottom of the whole gasoline price situation, probably through the courts, was indicated Friday by Attorney General Stone.

The treasury has asked Comptroller General McCarl whether it may use funds appropriated for other tax refunds in rebating to those who remitted their full income taxes in advance of the action of congress in refunding this year's taxes by 25 per cent. Under Secretary Winston announced that 1,958,000 persons had paid their taxes in full, aggregating $16,000,000.

Postmaster General New, Wednesday appointed A. W. Orr as acting postmaster at Livingston, Texas.

The American reply to the Japanese protest on the exclusion provisions of the new immigration bill was handed to Ambassador Hanihara Monday by Secretary Hughes.

The treasury received Monday the semi-annual interest payment on the indebtedness of $9,000,000 of the republic of Finland. The payment amounted to $134,325 and consisted of $20,250 face amount of second Liberty loan 4 1/2 per cent bonds with accrued interest thereon, and $114,075 in cash.

C. Bascom Siemp, secretary to President Coolidge, announced in a formal statement before leaving Washington for Cincinnati Tuesday that he had not resigned his present position and would continue actively associated in the republican national campaign.

Provision for federal aid for the fiscal year 1925 which begins on July 1 is made in the agricultural appropriation bill signed by the president on June 5. The bill authorizes the secretary of agriculture to apportion to the states immediately the $75,000,000 authorized by the postoffice appropriation act of June 19, 1922, and appropriate $13,000,000 to be immediately available, the remainder to be made available in later appropriations. The secretary signed the apportionment order June 6, and as a result there will be no interruption to federal aid road work.

Hoarded money in the United States amounts to over $400,000,000, and there are 3000 hoarders that can be classed as misers, with a pile of $44,000,000, according to estimates prepared by Joseph S. McCoy, United States treasury actuary.

STATE AND DOMESTIC NEWS.

Driven to a conclusion in an eight-hour session, the national farmer-labor party convention adjourned Thursday at St. Paul, Minn., after nominating a provisional ticket, adopting the platform advocated by the communists and electing a national committee. The Foster-Reuther cohort were in the saddle throughout the proceedings, voting down all attempts by Minnesota farmers to change the nationalization plank in the platform and booting down those who attempted to do so.

After electing Alfred Henry Luker of the Grapevine Messenger to its presidency and choosing Tyler as the 1925 meeting place, the Texas Press Association closed its forty-fifth annual convention at Amarillo, Texas, Friday. Other officers elected were: Vice president, Bill Smith of the San Saba News; secretary, Sam F. Harben, treasurer, C. F. Lehman; attorney, Clarence E. Gilmore; assistant attorney, Tom Pollard; essayist, Arthur Lafevre; historian, E. G. Senter; orator, Ben Harigel; poet, Dr. E. H. Andrews of Amarillo; flag custodian, Henry P. Edwards; members of the executive committee, Sam C. Holloway, Sam Miller and E. A. Carlock.

Suit was filed in federal district court at New Orleans, by the State of Texas attacking the proposed merger of the International and Great Northern railroad with the New Orleans, Texas and Mexico (Gulf Coast lines) on the ground that such merger would be in violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas. The court is asked to prevent the sale of stock and permanently to block the merger. The suit was filed by Frank Kemp, assistant attorney general of Texas.

Drugs valued at more than $2,000,000 were seized Saturday on a truck coming off a pier at Hoboken, N. J., it became known Monday. H. D. Esterbrook, chief of the special agents of the treasury department, who conducted the raid, said the seizure uncovered one of the most elaborate and effective schemes ever devised for smuggling narcotics into the United States.

Ten persons were named by the federal grand jury Friday at Chicago, Ill., in an indictment charging them with participation in the holding June 12 near Chicago of a Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul mail train by bandits, who secured more than $2,000,000 in cash and securities.

Horace A. Greer, former chauffeur for Mabel Normand, the screen actress, was acquitted Friday in superior court at Los Angeles, Calif., on a charge of assault with intent to murder Courtland S. Dines, Denver oil operator.

Evelyn Nesbit, former wife of Harry K. Thaw, Friday at New York City was divorced by her second husband, an actor and dancer known on the stage as Jack Clifford.

An award of $7,500 has been made by the Texas industrial accident board for the death of Miss Martha Mansfield, moving picture actress, who was burned while making a picture at San Antonio several months ago. The money is to be paid in 360 weekly installments of $20 to the mother of Miss Mansfield. The first installment was sent this week.

As a result of the finding Tuesday of approximately 200 cases of liquor in an improvised camp on the gulf side of an island directly across San Luis Pass on the Velasco, Texas, side, customs officers declared that a thorough search of all islands and passes in that vicinity would be made in the near future.

The death of Horace M. Sweetland, president of the United Publishers' corporation, and the National Publishers' association, at his home in Upper Montclair, N. J., was announced Tuesday.

An intra-coastal canal 9 feet deep and 100 feet wide, extending from New Orleans, La., to Corpus Christi, Texas, should be completed by January 1, 1925, according to Roy Miller, active vice president of the Intra-coastal Canal Association, who returned to Houston, Texas, Friday after several weeks in Washington, D. C. Mr. Miller based his prognosis on the assumption that congress at the December session would pass the rivers and harbors appropriation bill which includes $16,000,000 for completion of the Texas-Louisiana project.

Galveston's famous Seawall boulevard will be doubled in length by the filling operations now going forward behind the new east end seawall extension, which takes that protective wall as far east as the south jetty. When this fill has been completed the Seawall boulevard will extend along the gulf from Fort Crockett in the west end to Fort San Jacinto, which protects the entrance to Galveston harbor in the extreme east end of the island, a distance of five miles.

The Houston, Texas, school board, in a special meeting Saturday, canvassed the returns of the bond election held last Tuesday. The results showed a total of 12,179 votes polled, 5852 being for the bonds and 1613 against the bonds, with 684 being discarded on account of being mutilated.

Reports from twenty-six counties in the best corn producing areas of Texas indicate that while dry weather and hot winds of the last few days have begun to affect the condition of the crop in most sections, the crop would be saved by rain coming at any time within the next six or seven days. Corn, however, is at a critical stage in its development, the reports say, and the weather of the next few days will determine whether Texas is to have a corn crop this year.

The Brazos River Harbor Association hearing held at Angleton, Texas, Tuesday was attended by about 600 people. The hearing was held by Major Brown of Galveston and Colonel Hoffman of New Orleans, United States engineers, and the purpose of the meeting was to get a favorable report on the matter of securing federal aid for the port at the mouth of the Brazos river.

William P. (Bill) Brennan, heavyweight boxer, was shot and killed Sunday in the Tia Juana Cabaret, New York City, of which he was the proprietor. James Cullen, a state trooper, was shot in the neck as he ran to Brennan's rescue. James Hughes and Frank Rossi, believed to be two of a band of five who committed the killing, were arrested.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Notwithstanding protests by foreign governments and foreign oil companies, the Rumanian senate, Friday passed the mining law under which Rumanians are permitted to acquire control of foreign oil properties.

Sir Francis Younghusband, president of the Royal Geographical Society, Friday informed the London newspapers that a telegram had been received by the Mount Everest expedition committee in London to the effect that the attempt to scale Mount Everest had ended in disaster, involving the death of two members, George Leigh Mallory and A. C. Ervine.

Prime Minister MacDonald in a statement to the house of commons in London Friday said the United States had made arrangements by which the withdrawal of Herbert C. Clemens, the British charge des archives in Mexico City, from Mexico would be effected.

Miss Helen Willis, American woman tennis champion, was defeated in straight sets Thursday at Wimbledon, England, by Miss Kathleen McKane, ranking British woman player, 6-2, 6-2, in the British vs. American women's team match. This victory gave the British team four victories and the match.

Public opinion in England is alarmed at the number of skilled men emigrating to America and other countries. According to information given in the house of commons by Sidney Webb, president of the board of trade, 29,509 skilled workers in the building, metal and engineering trades left England for America in the first nine months of last year. Of this number 12,807 took up permanent residence in the United States, according to Webb. Giacomo Matteotti, rich socialist member of the chamber of deputies, was mysteriously kidnaped while walking in the street of Rome, Italy,

AMERICANISM does not consist of pretense and protestation, rather of action whenever patriotic duty points the way. Such Americanism would, if displayed by citizens generally, quickly find solution for many perplexing problems that confront us today.

Worthy of Honor With Paul Revere

History Slow to Record the Deeds of Tom Bernard and John Pulling.

In Boston the 18th of April is celebrated in memory of that first spectacular step in the Revolutionary war when, at the signal from the tower of old North church, Paul Revere made his famous ride through the night, apprising the countryside of the coming of the British soldiers to seize the military stores at Concord. The actual facts in that memorable event leave Paul Revere a dashing and picturesque hero, but there is no good reason why he should have the center of the stage to the complete exclusion of others who played their parts equally well. Longfellow's poem, "Paul Revere's Ride," not only carried the story as he told it far and wide, but it set the pace for a great many school histories, till it now seems fixed. He is as much as admitted that he had selected Revere because his was a poetical name.

The scheme to frustrate the secrecy of the British in their night march to Concord was carried out by a group, several of whom did their part at imminent personal risk. Every citizen of Boston suspected of being a mischief maker was under close surveillance by the British and the learning of the secret plans and flashing of the intelligence by lanterns from the church tower to the waiting messenger across the river was a dangerous undertaking. Tom Bernard and John Pulling, acting as spies, obtained the information and communicated it to the sexton, who was to hang the lanterns in the belfry of the church. Robert Newman, whose name has not been transmitted to posterity by any of the histories, was held a prisoner in his house by British officers who were billeted upon him. While these officers were asleep he climbed out of a rear window of his upstairs bedroom to a sloping shed roof and thus reached the ground, where

As History Shows Revere.

Bernard and Pulling were waiting for him with instructions to hang up two lights. That task performed he regained his room the way he came, but his lodgers, hearing sounds overhead, were astir. It had been raining and Newman's garments were wet. These he cast off in a pile on the floor and jumped into bed. This would not have saved him had not his wife hidden the clothing in a closet and substituted for them dry clothes. These were accepted as evidence that he had not been out of the house.

William Dawes, as well as Paul Revere was instructed to make the ride to Concord and rouse the farmers on the way. They seem to have ridden separately, but they came together at Lexington and were joined there by Samuel Prescott, whose lateness abroad was due to a visit with his sweetheart. Instead of riding alone into Concord at 2 o'clock in the morning, Revere did not reach Concord at all. After leaving Lexington the three men met a mounted patrol of the British, who tried to capture them. They took Revere, but Dawes and Prescott escaped. Dawes it was who first reached Concord and spread the news that the soldiers were coming. It was not until 1880 that the Massachusetts Sons of the American Revolution paid tribute to William Dawes by placing over his grave a tablet commemorating his part in the historic ride of April 18, 1775.

Love of Country

Love of one's nation is a newer growth, for nations in the modern sense are a product of the recent centuries. But love of one's own people, one's community, one's soil, one's speech, is as old as man. All these loves are fused in modern patriotism, the broadest, the most altruistic, the noblest emotion civilized man has yet achieved. It is a deep, abiding growth upwelling within man, and the world would be infinitely poorer were it to fall or weaken.

Swamp-Root a Fine Medicine

Thousands upon thousands of women have kidney or bladder trouble and never suspect it.

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease. If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition they may cause the other organs to become diseased.

You may suffer pain in the back, headache and loss of ambition. Poor health makes you nervous, irritable and may be despondent; it makes any one so.

But hundreds of women claim that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, by restoring health to the kidneys, proved to be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.

Many send for a sample bottle to see what Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder medicine will do for them. By enclosing ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., you may receive sample size bottle by parcel post. You can purchase medium and large size bottles at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

Couldn't Find the Boxes

"Will you please tell me where the boxes are?" was the question propounded the pastor's secretary of the First Baptist church, Vermont and Meridian streets, as she stepped out of her office the other day.

It was a bewildered colored man who asked. Evidently he had been wandering about the church for some time.

On being asked what boxes he wanted, the colored man said: "Why, land, ain't dis yere de pos' office?"—Indianapolis News.

"Confound a cuss that'll leave his cistern uncovered, so's another feller falls in!" yelled (Gabe) Aggrey, who at that moment was in Mr. Johnson's cistern. "As soon as I get out I'll whip you on less ground than a two-dollar bill will cover!"

"Good thing for me, and mebbe you, that you mentioned that fact before I fished you out," replied Gap Johnson of Rumpus Ridge. "I'll just let you stay in there till you don't."

Sherman Man Says Tanlac Made Him Feel Like New Man in Short Order.

"Almost from the very first dose of Tanlac I began to feel better, and less than three weeks of the treatment left me feeling just like a new man," is the statement of W. H. Cooney, 720 S. Cemetery St., Sherman, Texas, pioneer resident of that city.

"Last year I broke down completely and could not work for two months on account of stomach trouble. Indigestion, with gas and a burning sensation, kept me feeling miserable. Nothing seemed to help me, and I did not think I would ever be well again.

"In almost no time after starting on Tanlac I was eating heartily without any after trouble, and now I feel like working, and have plenty of energy to look after my truck garden and cows, even though I am over 72. I still take Tanlac whenever I happen to feel run down. Tanlac is the best medicine I know of."

Down in the Cellar

Sweet Pickled Pineapple

6 lbs. of pineapple
5 lbs. of Diamond Star Sugar
3 pts. of vinegar
1 tablespoon of whole cloves
3 inch stick of cinnamon
1 teaspoon of allspice

Peel and cut the pineapple into small pieces, removing the eyes, boil the sugar, vinegar and spices together for 15 minutes. Add the fruit and cook until tender and clear, but not broken. Lift out the pineapple and place it in jars and continue to cook the syrup down until thick, then pour it over fruit.

The spices should be tied in a cheese-cloth bag during the cooking. Canned pineapple may be used, in which instance less cooking will, of course, be required.

She broke off then, thinking if she waited she could make him ask, but he did not speak. The silence suddenly took on the quality of granite.

She uttered, at last, a forlorn laugh. "Trix won't ask about you, either," she explained. "She is like you, Joe. Getting more like you every day—Oh, it's a crime, that's what it is! When two people adore each other the way you do." She turned on him with an impetuous gesture of appeal. "Joe, she isn't far away. She'll come to you like a—like a bird if you'll just let me send her a two-word telegram."

His response to this was a veritable snarl of anger, like that of a wounded beast. "None of that, Jennie. Drop it, and drop it quick. Ask her to come and see me like this! I'll see her again some time. But it'll be when I'm up; not when I'm down like this. I'll be sitting on the world again some day, Jennie, and then we'll see what Trix has to say. She had her last shot at me when I was flat on my back, and what she did to me was apienty. Next time it's going to be different."

This brought him round to the old refrain, his defeat by Williamson's crowd and how it came about.

"I've been wondering," he said, "what it was gave me the idea of selling out in the first place. I suppose they must have got on, somehow, back in August or so, to the fact that I controlled the majority of the stock, and that made 'em think about getting from under. Well, they know how to keep their faces that bunch!"

"They'd know it longer than that," she told him. "Since before the April meeting."

He stared at her. "What makes you think so?"

"Oh, Henry made it pretty plain from something he said the other day." She wished, uneasily, that she hadn't started this, but it was too late to stop now.

"Do you mean Henry himself knew about it then?" he persisted, and she nodded a reluctant assent.

"Henry Craven," he repeated blankly. "Henry Craven—Why Jennie, I've sworn I know everything that went on behind that little man's eyes. And he's known, you say, ever since way back last winter what that bunch was cooking for me? He liked me, too. He liked both of us. And he never cared a d—n for them. I know he didn't."

"He's loyal, though," she said. "He's the most scrupulous man I've ever known. His duty was to them, of course."

"They're a different breed, Jennie," he said at last. "They're a herd. Locking horns and showing another themselves until an outsider comes along, and then they all face the same way and put down their heads. They know how to wait, too. Wait for him, that's all they do. I made good on my process, made thirty million pounds of valuable stuff out of something that had always been thought worthless, but they got me. This time."

Nathan came in about then with the power of attorney, and by the time it had been read and talked over and signed, Doctor Bennett appeared and made no secret of his disapproval of their business with his patient. So Jennie, as soon as it was possible, took her leave.

Joe stopped her on the way to the door with a last reminder. "Don't forget that errand I gave you. And be sure and come back first thing tomorrow morning and tell me about it."

"I won't forget," she promised, but she went away with a sadly divided mind. He had made it plain that the hundred and fifty dollars he had asked her to get him was not going to be mentioned to Doctor Bennett.

There has not been, and of course there never will be, a "next time" for Joe Greer, if one means by the phrase a return-match with John Williamson and his allies. This story, which began—if a story can be said to begin—on the April day in 1919 when they organized the company, ended on the Friday in the fall when Jennie went to Williamson's office and signed, under Joe's power of attorney, the contract the financiers offered her. They were completely and finally the victors. The spoils of Joe's process for making linen from the straw that had once been burned in the fields belonged to them, not to Joe, whose imagination had conceived the process; not to the small, careful, modestly prosperous folk who built the mills; nor to the farmers who grew the flax.

Reluctantly one concedes the improbability of any other outcome, even if Joe had never summoned his disturbing daughter from California to live with him, nor sustained a condemnation of the brain and resorted to alcohol as a cure, nor fallen in love with his antagonist's wife. Unimaginative, soft, irresolute, kindly, as these stall-fed folk seemed to him to be, their qualities are more than he can cope with. They are truly gregarious; they are, by tradition and temper, collectors, harvesters, stowers-away; and a man like Joe, who had no real interest in property beyond the dynamic use of it as a part of the processes of getting something done, stands little chance against them.

There's another side to the thing, though. If John Williamson's jolly little daughter Dorothy is ever swept from her moorings by some storm of passion, as Beatrice was swept, into an alien world, that experience will be determinative for the rest of her life. And if ever you find John huddled under a rug, shuddering from the exhaustion of alcoholic excesses, defeated, abdicating under the broadest power of attorney his lawyers know how to draw, you will be safe in prophesying that this is the end of John Williamson. But Joseph Greer and his daughter are actuated by a livelier principle—kinetic, not static; the river, not the reservoir. They may come crashing down over the falls—but they make their way.

Something about like this, though not formulated in quite these terms, was the conviction Henry Craven found Jennie abiding in when he talked with her about Joe for the first time after the capitulation. This was not until the very end of November. He'd been seriously ill with bronchitis—and glad to be—for three weeks. It was not upon Joe, however, that their conversation began.

She had greeted him with a double handshake and a spontaneous revelation of her pleasure in seeing him about again, and her concern over his illness. He flushed at her friendliness and said as he took the armchair she pulled up for him, "I ought to have said my say before I let you shake hands with me. Before I've finished you may want to take it back." He wouldn't be laughed out of this, either.

He took three envelopes from his pocket; one of them, he told her, was his resignation of his office as treasurer, and one his resignation as director. These he passed over to her. The third he kept in his hand. "About the directorate, I don't care," he said. "I'll leave it with you, and if you want to keep me on for a while, to avoid having only a minority of the board left, why, I'll be glad to serve. Whenever you want to make up a new board, you can just fill in the date. But the other resignation, as treasurer, I've dated as of November first, and that you must accept. I'd have got out before if I'd been free to do so."

Really there was no room for argument about this; the company in its dip-wagled condition couldn't afford a treasurer at a thousand dollars a month. She was horribly unhappy about it, all the same, and after a troubled moment of hesitation she broke out:

"Henry, don't mind, please, but—what are you going to do?"

He smiled rather dryly after telling her he didn't mind. "I thought for a while that I was going to have the satisfaction of doing something decent at my own expense, but it doesn't seem to be coming out that way. Mr. McGregg—he's the president of our bank, you know—came to see me on his own hook night before last to see if I wanted to come back to my old job with them. Mac's just a professional banker, and he'd never come to me unless he'd thought I was—as good as he could get. So I said I'd take it, then and there."

"John was surprised—and seemed a little annoyed—when I told him about it. He said their idea had been to give me the same job I'd had here, in the new company. I guess I made it plain to him—though it's very hard for me to say some things to John—that I didn't want anything to do with the new company. Anyhow, he asked me, with that smile of his, you know, if that applied to owning stock in it. I—I suppose you'll find it hard to believe, but I had to ask him what he meant by that.

"He said he'd put the proceeds of the sale of my stock in the old company—all but five shares so that I could stay on here as director—into the new, but that of course I needn't go unless I liked. I told him I didn't, and thought that was the end of it—at least—"

"Jennie, when a man's been kind to you for half your life—the kindest person you've ever known, and that's John, you can't say things to him as you'd say them—on general principles,

I tried to make myself believe he understood. But this morning, in the mail, I got John's check for thirty-seven thousand dollars, with a letter from Rollie Mill saying it was what was due me from the sale of my stock in the Greer company. I went around to John's office, but I couldn't even see him. All I could get out of Rollie was that it was perfectly straight book-keeping; he'd figured it out himself.

"Well, that's what's in this other envelop, Jennie. I feel as if it was—blood-money. Something I'd sold Joe for. And if there's any way it can be used for him, I want you to take it and use it."

She told him, terribly embarrassed by a fear she'd break down and weep over him, that there was no such use for it. "Joe isn't broke," she assured him. "He'll even get quite a decent little income out of the Greer company, and he's got more or less besides in various things. You take that check, first thing tomorrow morning, and buy Liberty bonds with it!"

"And don't go on feeling guilty about it, either. You didn't sell him out. He said to me, when I saw him last, that he had never expected you to tell him anything." And after spending a few minutes more upon him in argument and reassurance, she exclaimed, out of a full heart, "Oh, Henry, I'm glad you're back in the bank! It makes one less person I have to worry about, anyhow."

He had begun to smile over the touch of exasperation which was unmistakably unmingled with her good-will for him, when he saw in a flash that she was seriously worrying over some one else.

"I'm going to have dinner tonight with Trix and her husband. They're in town and it's their wedding anniversary. I've got to make up my mind what to say to her about it, or whether to say anything. Of course he's her father, and—"

"You see, Joe's disappeared from that place, Doctor Bennett took him for his cure. Just—vanished. Without leaving a trace—Well, of course, that's the way Joe would do it if he did it at all."

"How long ago?" Henry asked.

"Tuesday, after breakfast, some time. They notified Doctor Bennett that night, and he came straight around to me. Four days ago, that is, you see."

"Four days," Henry repeated, soberly. "He couldn't vanish, could he? There's a lake right near that place, isn't there, Jennie?"

"That's what Doctor Bennett is nearly out of his head about. That's one of the things. He never killed himself, Henry. I'm perfectly sure he didn't. No, that isn't feminine intuition. I always knew he meant to run off. He had me bring him a hundred and fifty dollars in currency that morning on the quiet."

"It strikes me as rather funny you did that," Henry remonstrated.

She gave a short laugh. "It didn't strike Bennett as funny. He pretty near took off my head. But I'd like to know why I shouldn't have done it. Joe's not a criminal nor a maniac. He wouldn't have gone to that place if he hadn't been too tired to argue about it. He can cure himself in his own way. Why, Henry, he quit drinking for a whole week down there in New York, right in the thick of everything. Then something happened to him—he didn't tell me what—and he began again. I think he's gone away to cure himself now. Anyhow, he'd never have taken a hundred and fifty dollars if he'd meant to jump in the lake. You can see that."

"What's being done to find him?" Henry asked.

The muscle in Jennie's jaw defined itself. "Not a thing," she said. "That's what Bennett and I have been fighting about. I won't have it, Henry! If he wants to disappear it's his own business. He can go where he likes, and come back when he gets ready. Of course it's hard for the people who are fond of him, but he never did think much about things like that. For all I know, there may be a few people that he wouldn't mind having believe he'd drowned himself. But it would never occur to him that you or I or Trix would think he had done that; and the only thing for us to do is to wait until he comes back."

"What does Beatrice think about it?" Henry asked, dubiously. "Of course if she agrees with you, there's nothing to be said."

"Well, there you are," Jennie confessed, miserably. "That's why I hate to go to dinner with them tonight. You see, Trix doesn't know. She doesn't know anything, I mean. Doctor Bennett would tell her in a minute, of course. And she could give him all the authority he needs for starting a search. But he doesn't know where she is. That made-up name she uses when she does exhibition-lying at fairs and things wouldn't mean anything to him, if he happened to see it. And she's going to California in a day or two. She's got a contract to do some stunts for the movies, but if she got the idea that he was down and out—wandering around, like a lost dog—she'd drop everything and try to find him; and the worst of it is she'd most likely succeed. It would be about the worst thing that ever happened to Joe if she did. She drew a long breath and leaned back in her chair. "Well, I have talked it through, anyhow, Henry," she concluded. "Much obliged."

She came back to Henry's own affairs when he rose to go, gave him both hands again, and wished him luck. "This office won't seem the same place without you," she said.

That was a dreary winter for Jennie, and would have been hardly endurable but for the companionship, out of office-hours, of Henry Craven.

They were much together, especially after Margaret returned to Italy in January. They went to most of that season's plays; dined together at least as often as once a week, sometimes in one of the little restaurants, sometimes in Jennie's flat. They talked life over endlessly; ideas, people, their own experiences and states of mind. Sometimes, but not often, they talked of Joe, of whom in all those months nothing had been heard.

Finally, along in the spring, Henry asked her to marry him.

He did it out of a clear sky rather, a little desperately (perhaps the expectation of his sister Margaret's return from Italy within a fortnight nerved him against further procrastination), one night as Jennie was driving him home in her car from a play. It was a comedy which Jennie hadn't enjoyed very much—her sense of humor was not her strongest point—about an abnormally stupid woman who by dint of industrious meddling and doing everything wrong, miraculously brought everything out right for her distracted husband.

"I suppose," Jennie said, indignantly, as they drove over the bridge, "there are plenty of successful business men who would be just as infatuated over a fool of a woman like that as he was."

"Well," Henry said, "I'm not a successful business man. You've got to admit that. So I ought not to be suspected." He didn't say another word until after they had crossed Chicago avenue. Then he declared, "You know what I'm trying to say, Jennie. I want you to marry me. Do you think you could make up your mind to that?"

"Oh, wait!" she cried, with a gasp. And, indeed, it was not the sort of question to ask a lady who was driving through that peeling traffic.

He told her in his kindest way not to mind. There was no hurry.

She threaded the little car through the southbound stream at the mouth of his street, and pulled up at the curb before his door. Then she folded her arms over the wheel and for a moment put her head down upon them. "That's all right," she told him. "Only, you gave me sort of a shock, Henry. Why, I've been getting around it for months." He protested. "You must have seen that!"

She owned she'd thought of it once or twice. "But only as a thing that couldn't possibly happen. I guess I'm as great a fool about this sort of thing as that."

"As I am about business. Well, then, that's all right."

She said indignantly this wasn't what she meant. It was the woman in the play she had been thinking of. "All the same," she went on, getting herself together, "I think I'm right about this. You've never had much—well, romance. You've had no chance for it. Not since you were a boy and fell in love with your cousin Violet. Now, with your own income, and your job at the bank, you're free. You ought to fall in love with somebody ten or fifteen years younger than I am; pretty and mysterious and exciting and all that."

He laughed. "When it comes to mystery for me—you leave this crop of peppers nowhere. You're the most wonderful person I've ever known, Jennie."

She caught her breath at that, and laughed in turn, but he did not continue on this tack. His own feelings were clear enough, he said. He knew what he wanted. But the point was, what did she want? How did she feel about him?

"I don't know," she said soberly. "I like this pretty well as it is. I don't believe I could ever want anything very different unless—well, unless I was sure you did. Unless you wanted something different—terribly."

"I don't believe I'll have any trouble convincing you, Jennie," he told her. And then, with his familiar consideration, since he saw she was shaken and distressed by doubts, he covered her hands with his, and said she wasn't to worry about it, anyhow. She could have all the time she wanted for making up her mind.

"You're a dear, Henry," she said, with a catch in her voice. "If I ever marry anybody it will be you."

He was well pleased with the beginning he had made, and he looked forward to going up to her flat to lunch with her the following Sunday. In the fearful hope that the matter might be explicitly and finally settled after all, before Margaret got home.

But on Saturday afternoon, within a few minutes of his homecoming from the bank, she amazed him by appearing, in a radiance of unexpressed excitement, at his own door.

"I couldn't wait for tomorrow," she said. "I could hardly wait to get here. I almost spoiled it by telephoning Henry. I've heard from Joe—a long letter. He's all right again; just as I've always said he'd be."

It was strange that Henry's heart should have sunk at that, but it did. "Oh, that's wonderful," he said. "Come in and sit down, and tell me about it."

"I don't believe I can sit down," she confessed. But she made him do so, in an easy chair, and light his pipe. Impatiently, she squeezed the tears out of her eyes. "I don't know if I can talk either. You see, he's the old Joe again, as he hasn't been—oh, hardly since you've known him, Henry. That letter, it was like a boy's letter—a schoolboy's. Some of the things in it, you don't know whether to believe or not. He never cared whether you did believe him or not. Only laughed."

"He told me the way he disappeared from that place where Doctor Bennett took him. He was walking around the grounds, thinking he would just walk away as he was—he had that money with him, of course—when he heard a couple of men on the other side of a clump of bushes talking Spanish—a sort of Spanish—and he sat down and talked with them. They were part of a gang that was building a road, a concrete road, right by the sanitarium. They were being worked awfully hard, trying to finish that stretch before frost."

"One of them didn't like it and said he was going to quit. Joe gave him some money, and promised him some more, to go to the village and buy him some common clothes and a razor, and things, and bring them back there. And then he shaved off his beard and dressed in the working clothes, and went and got a job with the gang, having everything interpreted for him into Spanish before he would understand it. He was right there through all the excitement over his having disappeared. He must have enjoyed that—though the work pretty near killed him, he said."

"It only lasted three or four weeks before they had to stop on account of the frost, but he got interested in roads by that time. Thinking about them. Thinking about getting something that would be better than concrete. So he went down to New Jersey to some of the big chemical plants there, and looked around and asked questions. Joe can get anybody to tell him anything of course. And then he began to get an idea."

"He has set up a little laboratory of his own—I don't know where he got the money, but he always kept some handy—and he thinks he's on the trail of what's he's looking for. Something that will be cheaper than concrete, and just about as easy to lay—when you know how to do it; and as good for horses as it is for motors. He's almost ready, he says, to go at it in a big way. If he gets it, it will be about the biggest thing there is. He says his name is going to be spelled with a small letter some day, just the same as Macadam's was."

"You don't suppose he has got hold of a thing like that, do you?" Henry asked.

She turned upon him sharply. "When he says he has it he'll have it," she retorted. "It will be all there, from beginning to end—and it'll work. His flax process worked, didn't it?"

Henry blinked, and acknowledged that it did. Then he laid down his pipe and clasped his hands. Jennie was no longer looking at him.

"Oh, I don't care whether it works or not, as long as he does—his mind. I mean—in the old way. If that doesn't turn out right he'll find something else. He says that by fall, he thinks, he'll need me down there. He will when we really get going, anyway."

It was then she looked around at Henry Craven, sitting very still in his easy chair, his hands between his knees. She uttered a little cry of dismay, stood gazing at him for a moment without moving, and then as the tears came she went over to him without a word and kissed him.

"Oh, I understand," he told her. "Please don't feel unhappy about it. I haven't a doubt you're right. And nothing is spoiled that we've got."

"I love you better than I do him," she said, turning away again. "At least I think I do. I've never dreamed of marrying him, and never would—even if he wanted me to. But in another way—a sort of office way—I've been married to him all along. And now he's coming back, and wants me again—"

Once more he told her in his kindly, reassuring voice that it was all right and that he understood, but something in his look filled her with panic, and she said with great emphasis that she must be running on at once. He made no effort to detain her, but at the door, as he held it open, he asked:

"How about lunch tomorrow? Am I still invited on the old terms?"

"Of course," she said, and he shut the door behind her rather quickly.

[THE END]

No Genius Without Pessimism.

Schopenhauer, in his doctrine of the futility of life, emphasizes the fact that genius suffers more deeply and feels more intensely just because of its abnormally developed will and intellect, and that, therefore, genius without pessimism is unthinkable either in the field of poetry or philosophy.

The placing of Shakespeare and Buddha in juxtaposition is quite in line with the trend of modern thought. Buddhism, like the Tagore cult, is at present in the forefront of interest, and it is safe to say that during the entire century preceding the war there was less written and said on the subject of Buddhism than in the past year. The most widely divergent intellectual currents are being traced back to the Buddhistic source, and every new system of philosophy and all modern historical researches are built up on Buddhistic foundations.

PRETTY DRESS FOR SMALL GIRL; BONNET BRIMS FRAME THE FACE

TO SUCCESSFULLY design clothes for the little folks, one must possess natural genius in that direction. Just as there are artists who excel in painting children's portraits, there are stylists who have the gift of expressing the spirit of youth in the apparel they create.

Surely it is the inspiration of an artist, gifted in catering to children's fancy, to conceive of a cunning basket-pocket, its handle suspended from the standing note in the realm of children's fashions. Petal pink is another shade which is very popular.

As if to challenge the wide-brimmed hat of which Paris tells us there will be many this season, the little cloche elects to take on picturesque ways of its own which shall defy competition from any source. Bonnet brims that frame the face with bewitching grace are among the temptations the hitherto modest little circle of a little girl's frock, just as you see in the picture. This quaint wee basket is conjured of gold braid and tiny flowers of gay-colored silk. The pocket is such a fascinating subject one almost forgets to say that the dress itself is of tangerine crepe de chine. It has fine shirrings in the skirt about the waistline just below the girle of self material.

Among the "ideas" exploited in children's frocks this season is the ingenious use of ribbon as trimming for the front of a straightline dress. The ribbon starts at the neck in front, and is run in and out of slashes which appear as huge buttonholes traversing the gown from top to bottom. Sometimes the ribbon terminates in loops and ends, or it may finish in a single streamer with fringe, hand-knotted, in cloche offers the summer girl. Nor are these oh-so-becoming bonnet brims always of the same kind as their crowns. What if the crown be of the Tuscan braid severely row and row, the brim is very likely to be of exquisite sheer fabric, as the bonnet at the top of this picture shows. "It's a dream of a bonnet in its alluring drape of rainbow tinted chiffon, the roses being in the new petal pink, a color of which we are hearing much this season. A leg-horn crown, or one of the latest tinted transparent hair, with corn-colored brim and roses of sunset glow, would be equally as effective.

The piquant charm of the other bonnet is at once apparent. Its ultra simplicity is its master stroke of effectiveness. The fan of fine plaiting arranged, as you see, at the back is one bright-colored floss. Again, if the ribbon used is three inches wide or more the flowing end drawn through the last slash may be decorated with a bouquet of little flowers done in gay wool embroidery.

A lovely June filly party dress which sets forth an unusual color scheme, is composed mainly of flounces, each of these ruffles being a different pastel shade. The entire resolves itself into an exquisite rainbow effect.

Specialists in children's frocks use very narrow black lace insertion on delicate volles and tinted organdies or chiffons with most charming results. Also it is the fashion to stitch row and row of tiny black ribbon on sheer materials. The ribbon rows look especially interesting on gay flowered fabrics.

of the most popular trimming ideas of the season. The coloring also speaks the mode, as it carries out the tones of tangerine in its exquisitely fine milan crown with the plaited brim fashioned of ribbon in a deep nasturtium shade.

Some of the prettiest summer bonnets have leghorn crowns or transparent lace brims. The dainty hair-crowns are usually accompanied with lace dyed the exact shade. Cocoa brown is an outstanding color for lace and it is especially attractive when used in conjunction with flowers the same shade.

Bonnet and scarf sets made of hand-colored chiffon or georgette, or printed in flowers, which look as if hand-painted, are a picturesque item which promises a widespread vogue.

Many Things Have Been Subject to Tax Levies

Carriages were the first subject of a tax levy by the federal government, according to the researches of the congressional library. Snuff and refined sugar came next, followed by sales at auction. By 1813 retailers of liquor were made a source of governmental revenue, and retailers of foreign merchandise as well. In 1815 unmanufactured iron, candles, hats, umbrellas, and shoes, were taxed along with playing cards.

Helpful Advice to Overworked Women DAY in and day out, week in and week out the tired, over-worked housewife and mother toils on, sweeping, dusting, cooking, cleaning and mending. Is it any wonder that after a time a weakness, such as Mrs. Chapman had, develops and the wife and mother pays a toll in physical weakness and pain for her efforts of love, the natural result of overwork? Women who find themselves afflicted with weakness, pain, headaches, backache, nervousness, irritability and melancholia will be interested in Mrs. Chapman's letter, and should realize that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is especially adapted to overcome such conditions.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Newberry and children spent the latter part of last week here visiting relatives. They left Monday accompanied by their son, Clyde, who has been attending the State University.

Citation By Publication

THE STATE OF TEXAS, To the Sheriff or any Constable of Terrell County—Greeting:

You are hereby commanded to summon Lee Hinton by making publication of this Citation once in each week for four successive weeks previous to the return day hereof, in some newspaper published in your County, if their be a newspaper published therein, but if not, then in any newspaper published in the 63rd Judicial District; but if there be no newspaper published in said Judicial District, then in a newspaper published in the nearest District to said 63rd Judicial District to appear at the next regular term of District Court of Terrell County, to be held at the Court House thereof, in Sanderson, Texas, on the 2nd Monday in July A. D. 1924 the same being the 14th day of July A. D. 1924, then and there to answer a petition filed in said Court on the 3rd day of June A. D. 1924, in a suit, numbered on the docket of said Court No. 1661, wherein Dora Hinton is Plaintiff, and Lee Hinton, is Defendant, and said petition alleging that Dora Hinton who resides in the county of Terrell, State of Texas, hereinafter called plaintiff, complaining of Lee Hinton, whose residence is to this plaintiff unknown, and after diligent inquiry cannot be ascertained, hereinafter called defendant; and for cause of action, plaintiff represents to the court that she is and has been for a period of more than twelve months prior to exhibiting the petition herein an actual bona fide inhabitant of the State of Texas, and has resided in the County of Terrell for more than six months next preceding the filing of this suit; that on or about the 2nd day of August 1924 plaintiff was lawfully married to defendant; that they continued to live together as husband and wife until on or about the 1st day of June 1917, and that unexpectedly and without any cause or provocation whatever known to plaintiff, defendant on said date abandoned plaintiff with the express intention to never again live with her; that the defendant has not communicated with plaintiff since the day and year last aforesaid, nor have they lived together as husband and wife since that time. That plaintiff is desirous of having said marriage relations between herself and defendant dissolved by a decree of this court. Wherefore plaintiff prays the Court that defendant be cited by publication as required by law to appear and answer this petition and for judgement dissolving said marriage relations, for costs of suit and for such other and further relief, special and general, in law and in equity that she may be entitled to.

Herein Fail Not, but have before said Court, at its aforesaid next regular term, this writ with your return thereon, showing how you have executed the same.

Given under my hand and the seal of said Court, at office in Sanderson, Texas, this 3rd day of June A. D. 1924.

(Seal) Luella Lemons,
Clerk, District Court,
Terrell County.
