AMERICAN EDUCATION WEEK NOVEMBER 17-23

November 17 to 23 has been designated as American Education week, and the public schools of the nation have been requested to observe it with appropriate programs.

I sincerely urge that all of our citizens in some way observe this week. Visit the school, encourage regular attendance of the pupils. Help your child and encourage him to get all he can out of his school that will help later in life, as well as now.

Do you know this? There are 730,000 teachers in America.

One-fourth of all our people are in schools (pupils, teachers and administrators.)

One-fifth of all pupils are in the first grade.

It is the business of the schools to produce "good citizens."

Schools are the nation's greatest asset.

The schools need better daily attendance, adequate buildings and equipment.

Let all go into together, and make Education Week in Sanderson the best yet, not only that week, but every week in the year educational week.

G. J. Henshaw,
Ex-Officio County Supt.

RATTLE OF THE RAIL.

The annual inspection party consisting of four cars with officers from the various points of the System passed through Sanderson at 9:30 Tuesday morning. The train consisted of four cars and was hauled by engine 766, tying up at Marathon the previous day.

Engineer Petersen, brakeman Lewellen and yardmaster Hicks attended the Bi-Monthly safety meeting in El Paso Thursday.

Engineer Lase of Del Rio has been assigned to a freight run out of El Paso.

Engine 934 has been received from the Houston division.

Engineer Morris of the Del Rio division has recently returned from a trip north.

Fireman D. L. P. Duke on work train at Haymond went to El Paso Thursday on committee business.

Fireman T. B. Moseley of the Del Rio division has recently resumed his passenger run after over a month's lay off on account of an injured foot.

Fireman E. H. Sterrett made a trip down from El Paso on passenger this week.

T. R. Kaykendall of El Paso was in the city several days this week on legal business and also visiting friends and relatives.

Mrs. M. Savage returned from El Paso Wednesday morning from a visit with her daughter, Mrs. H. P. Stanton, and Miss Ella Savage.

W. L. Erwin was called to El Paso Wednesday on account of the death of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Basnett.

PLANS MADE TO RAISE MONEY TO COMPLETE ATHLETIC FIELD

Last Wednesday night a mass meeting was held for the purpose of planning ways and means to raise money to finish building the Athletic Field. It was decided by those that were at the meeting to have a Thanksgiving dance on the night of Thursday, November 27th. It was also decided to stage a beauty contest of the girls, and will start immediately and continue up to midnight of the night of the dance when the winners will be announced. The girl receiving the highest number of votes will receive first prize and also she will have the privilege of naming the athletic field. Voting boxes will be found at the Elite Confectionery and Bohman's Confectionery and each day the votes will be counted and the returns thrown on the screen at the Princess Theater. Five girls have been entered in the race and each have 100 votes apiece, they are as follows: Misses Louise Wood, Jack Banner, Evelyn Goode, Nynah McDonald, Ruby Mansfield.

CARD OF THANKS.

I wish to thank each and every voter who voted and supported me in the general election, November 4.

Sincerely,
Tom Parsons.

SANDERSON WINS OVER MARATHON

The boys' basketball team made a trip to Marathon Saturday to play a game with the high school team of that place. The Marathon people showed their usual hospitality by taking the team and coach out for dinner. Some of the boys claimed a "frame up" on the part of the Marathon boys, for they were afterwards too heavily laden with various good things to eat to make any show of speed on the court. However, it was unanimously agreed that Sanderson will do her best to return some of this cordiality when Marathon gives us a return game here, which they have agreed to do.

The heavier Sanderson team was able to win from their lighter opponents by the score of 25 to 1. The score, however, is no indication of the kind of game (Continued on last page)

Mrs Rowena Basnett.

Mrs. Rowena Basnett, 71, died Tuesday night in the home of her daughter, Mrs. L. W. Erwin, 1214 Circle street. She is survived by her husband, A. Basnett, one daughter, Mrs. Erwin, of El Paso, and one son, C. C. Chapman, of Los Angeles, Calif. Mr. and Mrs. Basnett came to El Paso more than seven years ago from Austin, Texas, to make their home with their daughter. Funeral arrangements, in charge of the Peak Hagedorn company, are pending arrival of the son.—The El Paso Herald.

Mrs. Erwin's many friends here extend to her their sympathy in her hour of bereavement.

If you're engaged to be married to the only girl in the world, you'll do well to see that she doesn't embark on a long airplane journey with a stranger as pilot. For more, read "Sinners in Heaven," starting in the next issue of The Sanderson Times.

TO MY FRIENDS AND CITIZENS OF TERRELL CO.

Having again been re-elected to the office of Treasurer of Terrell county, I am indeed grateful to those who so loyally supported me, and for which I desire to express to each my thanks and deep appreciation.

I will always be at your service in the future and gladly serve you as I have in the past. Again I thank you, I am,

Very sincerely yours,
Frank K. Harrell.

C. D. Strange returned Tuesday morning from San Antonio where he has been with his son, Charlie, who was injured in an automobile accident Halloween night. Mr. Strange reports that Charlie is well on the way to recovery, and was doing fine when he left.

The gossipers were buzzing over their teacups. The latest sensation of the small town was the return of a young woman from a tropical island, where for two years she had lived the life of a castaway. But the greatest shock was yet to come. Read "Sinners in Heaven," by Clive Arden, beginning in the next issue of The Sanderson Times.

HOUSEWORK NOT DRUDGERY

For Women In Good Health

Read How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Changed Conditions For These Housewives

Back Don't Bother Me Now

Lincoln, Nebraska.—"My back would bother me so and when I had to do any heavy lifting it made me sick to my stomach with the pains in my back. I have my housework to do and four babies to take care of so when I heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I took it and I feel better, my back don't bother me and I can eat more and work. I do all my housework and washing for six in the family. I will tell other women to take the Vegetable Compound and you may publish my letter."—Mrs. CHARLES F. DOLZEL, 1201 Garber Ave., Lincoln, Nebraska.

Felt Better At Once

Voiga City, Iowa.—"I will tell you what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me. I was all run down and could hardly be on my feet. I was so cold I could not keep warm. I had numb feelings and then heat flashes would pass over my body. I had severe pains in my sides and was very nervous. I saw your advertisement in the newspapers so I thought I would try your medicine. My husband got me a bottle of the Vegetable Compound and I began to feel better as soon as I started taking it. I have taken it off and on for three years now. I keep house and do all my work for my husband and two little boys and make my garden. I feel fine and I tell others what the medicine has done for me. I think it is the best medicine in the world for women."—Mrs. THOMAS GRINDLE, Voiga City, Iowa.

Can Do Any Kind of Work

Fouke, Arkansas.—"I had the 'flu' and after that I had a pain in my side and was not able to do my work I was so weak. I found an advertisement in a paper and it told what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound would do, and I took it. Now I can do any kind of work I want to. I think every family ought to keep it in the house all the time and I intend to do so."—Mrs. DORA PHILLAW, R.R. No. 2, Fouke, Arkansas.

Over 100,000 women have so far replied to our question. "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?"

98 per cent of these replies are "Yes."

This shows that 98 out of every 100 women who take this medicine for the ailments for which it is recommended are benefited by it.

This goes to prove that a medicine specialized for certain definite ailments—not a cure-all—can and does do good work. For sale by druggists everywhere.

NEWS HAPPENINGS

What Has Transpired This Week the World Over.

AT THE NATIONAL CAPITAL

Short Mentioning of Interesting Happenings From Day to Day Throughout the World.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

President Coolidge does not contemplate, at least for the present, calling the new congress into special session after next March 4, nor does he now expect to present any comprehensive plan of tax reduction to the present congress at the short session which will begin next month. White House spokesmen in outlining the president's views, Friday indicated that farm legislation and the annual appropriation bills would comprise the principal subjects of congressional action at the approaching short session.

Tax reduction, a welcome subject to millions of Americans, bids up again, with the elections over and the lineup in the new congress settled. Talk of further reductions than those made last session has begun already. There were two starters Thursday, coming almost before the final returns had trickled in. 1. A plan whereby surpluses in the treasury would be applied immediately to reduction of taxes whenever they occurred was suggested by Representative Madden of Illinois, chairman of the house appropriations committee. 2. Word came from the treasury that Secretary Mellon will include a recommendation of the tax plan which bears his name in his annual report to the president.

Calvin Coolidge was the nation's choice for president of the United States in Tuesday's election.

Public lands disposed of by the government reached a total at the end of last fiscal year amounting to 1,048,278,230 acres, or more than 60 per cent of the entire land surface of the country exclusive of Alaska and other territorial possessions. The remaining unappropriated and unreserved public land amounts to 186,694,733 acres.

STATE AND DOMESTIC NEWS.

Funeral services for Colonel John L. Wortham, prominent Texas, who died Wednesday in Houston, Texas, were held Thursday.

Fort Worth Ku Klux Klan hall, recently completed at a cost of about $50,000, was destroyed by fire Thursday. Origin of the fire is unknown.

Grain exports from Galveston, Texas, for October totaled 6,686,200 bushels, according to figures given out at the office of H. A. Wickstrom, chief grain inspector of the Galveston Cotton Exchange and Board of Trade.

Mrs. Miriam A. Ferguson, democrat, was elected governor of Texas in Tuesday's election over George C. Butte, republican.

Plans for the entertainment of members of the Texas Editorial Association, to convene in Galveston December 4 and 5, and in Houston December 6, are being made by the members of the association.

Mrs. Warren G. Harding, widow of the late President Harding, was reported Monday to be ill at the home at Marion, Ohio, of Dr. Carl W. Sawyer. She is suffering with kidney trouble.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Moscow, Russia, will soon rival in beauty and civic modernity any European capital, if present plans of the municipal authorities materialize. Preparations are being made for the construction of a subway on the American plan and the establishment of omnibus systems, taxicab lines, new tramways and other improvements. The present sewerage and canal systems will be entirely remodeled.

Stanislas Petakovsky, soviet union minister to Mexico, presented his credentials to President Obregon Friday.

Egyptian cotton crop has been estimated at 5,379,862 kantars, of which 2,497,648 are seedling and 2,882,214 other varieties.

George Tchitcherine, commissar for foreign affairs in the soviet government, Saturday dispatched notes to the foreign powers formerly announcing Russia's claim to all the Arctic islands off the northern coast of Siberia. Russia threatens "demand satisfaction" from all governments supporting claims in opposition to those of the soviet.

Ringleader of Mob Executed.

Washington.—Execution by Persian government of Seyid Hussein, ring leader of the mob which murdered American Vice Consul Imbrie in Teheran, was reported officially Monday to the state department. Another man was executed for the crime at the same time. The death sentences were carried out after the Washington government had insisted that the two men must receive the extreme penalty despite a decision by the Persian cabinet to commute their sentences.

Chicago, Ill.—Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson Friday upheld the contention of the United States railroad labor board that it has authority to compel persons to appear before it to give testimony in matters being considered by the board. His decision was given in a suit brought by the board against D. B. Robertson of Cleveland, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, and J. N. Maguire, general chairman of the Chicago & Northwest section of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

Radio Cheats Arctic Night and Keeps Explorers Normal Human Beings

By DONALD B. MACMILLAN, Polar Explorer.

THE radio gives us food for thought and topics for conversation. To men isolated in the cold regions the radio serves as the daily newspaper which every one knows is the source of conversation in civilized countries. When people are isolated, as an exploring expedition must be, it is bound to come about, in the course of time, that the members of the party cease to be interesting to each other. In a few months we have pumped each other dry. I know all about every man in the party and he knows all about me. All we have to discuss is personalities and past experiences. If we are given to imagination and even the dramatization of our experiences when hard pushed for conversation we even run out of that material. It is a fact that almost every expedition ends by each one hating every one else, though I must say I have been rather fortunate in my own personal experience. But I use the utmost care in selecting my crew. From the many applicants I choose the men I feel will wear the best with me and with each other.

During the months we are icebound, waiting for the long night to pass, it is, or was until the radio came to our relief, the habit for each man to stay by himself as much as possible. We might meet only at meal times, and perhaps not then, for we would take our dogs and go off alone on long journeys to visit our Eskimo friends to get away from each other.

The radio made us quite normal, happy human beings. For one thing, we were all anxious to keep in touch with the news from home. We waited around for the radio programs. We also enjoyed the music and waited for that. No longer were we cut off from the whole world and our temper was much better than in the pre-radio days. The radio companies all over the country were wonderful to us, as were the amateur operators. Being off in the North is very different these days from what it was when Peary made his courageous and lonely journeys.

Loss of Religion Leaves Gap in Personal Lives and Community Morals

By JUDGE ALFRED J. TALLEY, New York General Sessions.

It's neither heredity nor environment that's responsible for this wave of youthful crime. It's the only other influence besides heredity and environment that has come into the lives of these children—it's our boasted schools. The only way to form character is through religion, and we've been so much afraid one religion would get the jump on another that we have adopted the cowardly course of eliminating all religion from our schools.

These boys and girls with no moral sanctions instilled into their make-up by proper instruction are the mothers and fathers of the next generation. They are pagans. And paganism has always spelt national disaster, as it spells personal disaster to these young criminals. I am not attacking the public schools as such, but that style of education is hopeless, unrounded and incomplete which trains the mind and excludes the training of the heart and will. The loss of religion has left a gap not only in personal lives but in the moral life of the community.

The state is responsible for the conditions, and it is the state's duty to make the deficiency in training good. Otherwise those who will raise the next generations of Americans will be not only fathers and mothers indifferent to morality and religion but fathers and mothers who are criminals. I speak not as a theorist, but as an expert. Every day, every hour, I am faced with the facts here in court.

Only the other week I tried a murder case in which the defendant was twenty, the victim nineteen, and the witnesses ranged from sixteen to nineteen. Not a single person in the case had obtained legal majority.

What We Need Is Not More Prisons for Criminals, but More Hospitals

By MRS. MARY HAMILTON, New York Policewoman.

What we need most of all, is an awakening on the part of officials—an awakening on the part of the public as a whole—to the fact that crime is a manifestation of disease, that criminals are sick people, and that most of the crimes now being perpetrated would, under a more intelligent organization of society, be partly or even entirely preventable. Will we ever learn that what we need is not more prisons for criminals but more hospitals? If we were intelligent enough, first of all, to work for better social conditions and then to treat diseases in their incipient stages rather than in their final ones, we would not have the revolting crimes that are now shocking our society—crimes that are an indictment of the very foundations of our so-called civilization.

We have one hundred young women on our police force in New York city. We need a thousand. The call is to the capable young woman of today, especially to the college woman. Will she respond? Once there is the general understanding of these facts—that crime is disease traceable to unfavorable social conditions, that criminals are nothing more nor less than sick people—there will be as many applicants for the profession as there are now places in the schoolroom, the office and elsewhere. And the money that is now being spent in the stupid punishment of crime will be used in its intelligent prevention.

Kansas Must Go East to Meet Boston Coming West for Meat Products

By C. D. HARDY, Swift & Company.

Seventy per cent of the live stock produced in this country is raised west of the Mississippi river. Seventy per cent of the consuming population lives east of that river. A connection must be made between these sections.

The state of Iowa, for example, has four and one-half times the production of live stock that the state of New York has. The state of New York, on the other hand, contains approximately four and one-half times the population of the state of Iowa. Obviously you cannot transport the surplus number of consumers out to Iowa to procure their portion of the surplus production of food. The problem is to get this surplus production of the raw material of meat food in Iowa reduced to a manufactured form and transported to the consuming centers of New York.

Boston requires 200,000 head of cattle and 1,000,000 hogs annually. Boston has to go outside to get most of her meat supply. Kansas contains about 2,900,000 head of cattle, 330,000 sheep, 1,750,000 hogs, and has a population of only 2,000,000 people. Kansas produces each year about three times the amount of meat food that can be consumed within the borders of the state, and must go East to find a market—goes East to meet Boston coming West. So these sections are dependent upon each other.

GENERAL FARM NEWS

(By S. C. Hoyle, Editor of Extension Service Publications, A. and M. College of Texas.)

Building Terraces

In building terraces it is well to begin at the top of the hill on the upper terrace. It is best to finish this one, too, before starting on the next lower terrace, if possible, because it might rain over night and ruin a great portion of the work already done. If this precaution is not taken, the terraces are supposed to handle but a small amount of water each, and if a break should occur on the upper terrace, the terrace just below would probably also give way due to the fact that the water and the mud will soon fill it up. The crest of the terrace and the water course of the terrace should both have a uniform grade and a difference of at least 18 to 20 inches all along its course after the terrace has settled. A well built terrace requires a lot of team work to make 20 feet wide at the base, but at the end one will have something worth while.

The first year the terraces should receive careful attention. After the first rains they should all be examined carefully and if any breaks are noted they should be repaired immediately and all weak places reinforced with a few scrapers full of dirt.

The first hard rain is usually pretty severe on a loose, soft terrace bank, but after the first year a large, strong terrace will require little attention other than that of beginning the plowing at the center and throwing it toward the center of the terrace each time the land is plowed for three or four years.

Some of the best terraces which have been built in the state of Texas were built by using nothing more than a plow. This system of building terraces simply requires that the terrace be replowed a sufficient number of times to bring it to the required height and width. The size of the plow, the condition and type of soil, the depth of plowing, the kind of plow and the speed of the plowman determine the number of plowings necessary to put up a good terrace. The terrace line is used as a center line and the furrows are thrown toward this center line from both sides until a land 24 feet wide is plowed. The center line of the terrace is again used as a beginning point and the land is replowed in this manner from four to six times, or until a terrace of the required height and strength is built. The ground after the second or third plowing may be very loose and in that case farmers sometimes wait and allow a rain to settle the terrace. This is quite risky because a heavy rain may not only settle the terrace but it may ruin and undo some work which required a lot of hard labor.

The use of the home-made V-drag and plow is the most common method of building terraces. This method eliminates the difficulty in building a terrace with a plow alone, because the terrace can be completed whereas with plow alone it is rather difficult to plow the loose ground after two or three plowings. The use of the home-made V-drag is an economical method of building terraces because the drag can be made by anyone in about an hour or less time.

The Steel Ditcher

The steel ditcher, when used in connection with a plow or by itself, is one of the best machines that can be secured for building terraces. In terracing large areas, it will pay to use one of these ditchers. They are also very fine for cutting small ditches, two or three feet deep.

The Road Grader

The road grader is occasionally used to put up terraces. If the soil is in good condition, they work splendidly and when eight good mules are hitched to a small reversible road grader probably no better outfit can be secured for putting up terraces. A plow is usually good to loosen the dirt ahead of the grader.

The Fresno and Slip Scraper

To make fills at the gullies, the fresno is the best implement to use. A slip scraper is often used, but it is a slow, hard and tedious way to finish the terrace at the high and low places. The fresno is easy to fill, dump and handle, and the four horse fresno will move about three times as much dirt as the ordinary scraper.

Waste Feed Fattens Lambs

Lambs and ewes may find profitable grazing in the aftermath of weeds and grasses growing along the fence rows after the harvesting of farm crops. Aftermath and the late growth of alfalfa, after the last cut, makes a very palatable and nutritious food for lambs, and one on which they will put on considerable weight. Alfalfa stubble, or a heavy growth of grasses and weeds, should furnish ample grazing for lambs at the rate of one hundred lambs to every thirty-five acres. However, grasses and weeds should be grazed while they are still green and succulent and before they become unpalatable.

Feeder lambs for grazing purposes should weigh from 25 to 40 pounds intelligence basis of Successful Farming

In the final analysis the ideal farm—the truly successful farm—is the one which yields to the farmer and his family a living—full, adequate, complete—liberal in material rewards, but not lacking in the social, aesthetic values which make for character, contentment and genuine happiness. The soil has the capacity to produce these returns if the hand which tills it but knows how best to bring it about.

"I—I— Mrs. Archman's eyes widened and her lips quivered. "Oh! What shall I say?" she cried. "You don't know—you don't understand. I've got to tell you," she went on desperately. "Nellie isn't my own daughter, though I love her as if she were. She—she—Nellie! Hasn't your father told you anything?"

Nellie's lips were white. "My father?" she echoed. "Who is my father?"

"I can't tell you. Henry never told me. It wasn't his secret. But I suspect—I suspect—"

"I do, too," Nellie nodded slowly. "I've suspected for some time. Father said something. Mr. Dorth said more. And Captain Strindberg—but that's got nothing to do with Jim." She stretched out her hand to the young man. "We'll let it go for the present, but I'm going to marry Jim. Come on. I want to see the scene of the fight."

Van Kull shook his shoulders as if tossing off some heavy load. "Come along, then," he said. "But prepare yourself. I guess some of the minutemen are pretty badly wounded. The sight won't be a very pretty one."

Every one of the women caught her breath. "Oh! How wicked of me!" gasped Nellie. "I—I didn't realize that men were dying out there. We must try to help."

The debris of the fight was being rapidly cleared away. Half a dozen dead were laid out on the banks, but nearly all the prisoners, both those who were wounded and those who were not, had been put into the boats under guard, ready to be sent out to the destroyer.

Only Price remained on shore, watched by two sentinels. Clearly he was being reserved for some particular fate. But he met Nellie's eyes undauntedly as the party passed near him. "Well! You beat me," he gritted. "They're going to string me up out of hand, I reckon."

Nellie stepped back uncertainly. "I'm—I'm sorry," she said faintly. "You ain't got any cause to be sorry," returned the man grimly. "I was going to do for you, all right, and for all the rest of your folks, too. And I'd ha' done it if it hadn't been for these Danes. D—n 'em! What on earth brings a Danish destroyer over here, anyway? I wish I could get some more of 'em before I croak."

His eye followed Strindberg's form maliciously, as the latter passed to and fro directing the movements of his men.

"Say, lady," he went on. "I don't bear you no malice. I don't bear none of your crowd no malice. It's only those crazy Danes, butting in where they ain't got no business. I don't bear you no malice and I'll tell you something. That there woman's playing dirt on you." He gestured toward Miss Denslow. "I reckon she's the one that did that signaling. Anyway, she's disguised, and—"

For a moment the man glared at Miss Denslow; then his hand shot out and caught at her white hair. The guards caught at him, but they were too late. The hair came away, exposing beneath it a pile of closely bound chestnut locks that crowned a face that had suddenly become twenty years younger.

As Miss Denslow shrank back with a cry, drowned in a chorus of exclamations, Price burst out into a cackling laugh. "I thought so," he cried. "You're Edith Grant."

"No, she isn't," young Archman sprang to the girl's side. "She's Edith Archman."

"Well, I'll be hanged!" The exclamation came from Van Kull, who was staring at the girl in amazement. "I thought you looked familiar, but I never saw you clearly since."

Nellie broke in. "Yes! I remember!" she exclaimed. "You were at Miss Grant's cottage that night. You knew her—"

"Knew her? Of course, I knew her! She's my sister, Edith Van Kull. She wanted to be an actress, and father wouldn't have it and so she went ahead on her own. Well, I guess that's over now. Congratulate you, brother-in-law." He held out his hand to Harry Archman.

Lord George stepped forward. "May I also offer good wishes?" he asked. Then as Edith took his hand, he turned to the others. "I had the pleasure of seeing Miss Grant—"

As he pulled the trigger the other guard struck at him and the bullet went wild. But it did not miss altogether. Lord George whirled half around and staggered back, clapping his hand to his left arm.

Before he could fall, Bess caught him. "He's killed! Oh! My G—d! He's killed," she shrieked. Her tones told a story all their own.

Lord George read it. Catlike he caught his footing. "Not a blooming bit of it, Bess," he said. "The beggar only got me through the arm. What? For half a second he hesitated, then before them all, he kissed her squarely on the lips."

As he did so Archman ran up. "Hey! What's this?" he cried. "What's all this men?"

Bess snatched at him. "Don't swear, pops!" she counseled innocently. "Save your cuss words. You've got worse shocks than this coming." She glanced at Edith and then at Nellie. "However, we won't talk about that now. Just shake hands with Lord George and—"

But Strindberg broke in. While the others talked, he had been acting. Crimson with rage he had sprung toward the guards, who, too late, had fallen upon Price like thunderbolts. "Fools! Dolt! Blockheads!" he cried. Then he spun round on his lieutenant, who came running up. "Take that man out of sight and hang him to the nearest tree!" he ordered.

The lieutenant saluted, gave a brisk order, and the men closed in around Price and marched him away up the slope of the ravine. Then the captain broke in on Bess' words. "Mr. Archman," he ordered sharply, "be good enough to lead me to his highness!"

For perhaps ten minutes Archman's boat, with its lantern gleaming at the bow, pushed on through the darkness, following the convolutions of the stream. At last a gleam of daylight appeared ahead, evidently shining in through some opening in the rocks. Close to it Archman's boat stopped, and its passengers clambered out.

"This is as far as the boats can go at this stage of the tide, captain," he explained, as the latter's boat came up. "At high tide we can row through, but at present the channel beyond the opening is practically dry and we have to walk. If you will follow—"

Strindberg bowed. "Lead on," he said. The distance to be traversed was not great, and luckily so, for unaccustomed adventurers the surroundings were terrifying. Geyserlike bursts of steam puffed up again and again in their faces; the crust on which they walked was hot to their feet, and almost continual tremors ran through the earth. When at last they pushed through the final curtain of mist and came out close to a house, there was not one of the party but drew a long breath of relief, even though they all knew that the crater had long been occupied by men and must be perfectly safe.

In front of the building Archman halted. "Friends all," he said. "Captain Strindberg! The time has come to lift a curtain that fell more than twenty years ago, when one whose name I will not mention, even now, quit his great place in the world to marry the woman of his choice. He sailed away with her to conceal himself so that he might live in democratic freedom from the restrictions that hedge about a court. Here he came and here he has lived since, and here his wife is buried."

"He did not live idly. He had already won a reputation for chemical research, and here he broadened and expanded his knowledge. He called to his aid the heat and gases that alone survived of the mighty forces that once filled this place. Many inventions he made and marketed through me, his servant. Many secrets of nature he discovered, among others the secret of the diamond. He harnessed the volcano and bent it to his will."

"One lot of diamonds he made and sent to me by the hands of his servant, Morbach. Most of you know how Morbach was robbed and murdered. I do not know whether the criminal has been discovered—"

"Not the murderer, father." It was Nellie who interrupted. "But the man, Henry Harrison, who picked Mr. Morbach up after the auto accident, has confessed that he came back to Miss Grant's cottage in disguise and got the map and the diamonds from Mr. Morbach. Later he shipped on board the El Rio under the name of Price and led the mutiny."

"Humph! That explains much! I will say here that his highness has made no more diamonds and will make no more. The secret is lost. And now perhaps Captain Strindberg will explain why he seeks his highness—why he has sought him so desperately that he or his friends corrupted my secretary and bribed him to play traitor—"

"Akin?" The exclamation came from all.

"Yes! Akin was the traitor. I suspected him before I left New York, but I thought that once I had gotten away he would be harmless. But Captain Bunker and I are now satisfied that it was he who signaled to the pursuing ship and—Archman broke off—"I will ask Captain Strindberg to remove him from the El Rio. He turned to the officer. "Captain," he finished, "perhaps you will explain."

The captain shrugged his shoulders. "His highness is needed in Denmark," he said. "Our secret service knew he would be needed sooner or later, and when he disappeared we tried to find him. Little by little we picked up the trail. We learned of Archman and of Morbach and of the existence of children." His eyes wandered to Nellie. "And now we have found him. In the search we have had to do things that we regret; but one cannot be squeamish when kingdoms—even small ones—are at stake. Success excuses all!" He shrugged his shoulders. "Enough!" he snapped. "Lead me to his highness."

Archman bowed. "Come!" he said, and turned toward the house. Side by side the two mounted the stairs and entered the door. Behind them came the rest of the civilians. The sailors, under the command of the lieutenant, remained outside.

Archman threw open the door of the room to the right of the hall and ushered in his companions. He took off his hat as he entered; and the others, after a gasp of comprehension, did likewise.

In the middle of the room, on two trestles, surrounded by flaring tapers, rested a coffin draped in black, whose open glass front revealed the figure of a huge man whose waxen features bore, even in death, an ineffable air of majesty and mastery. Archman looked at him reverently. "This is his highness," he said.

The officer blinked. "I recognize him," he said, after an instant. "He is not very greatly changed since I knew him."

"I, too," Lord George stepped forward. "I knew his highness years ago. That was why I was selected by my government to follow a crew associated with Mr. Archman and try to find him. I recognize him. He was a real statesman—one who gave promise of being a powerful figure in Europe, captain. Naturally my government, like many others, was interested in his strange disappearance. There have been rumors of a great war, you know."

Strindberg bowed. "I thank you, Lord Caruthers," he said. "His highness' death will be a great blow to Denmark. And his sons and daughters? What of them?" he looked at Archman.

"He leaves no sons!" Archman spoke deliberately.

"Perhaps it is as well. The marriage of his highness was morganatic and a son might complicate matters. But a daughter would be different." The captain's eyes wandered to Nellie, who stood hand in hand with Van Kull. "His majesty instructs me to say that his feelings toward any daughter are of the kindest. He offers her a title, great wealth, and a noble husband—everything that the customs of our country permit." The captain turned to Archman. "You can, of course, furnish proofs as to her identity?" he questioned.

"Yes!" Archman rose from a safe into which he had been diving and came forward. In his hands he held a sheaf of folded papers. "Yes!" he repeated. "The proofs are all here and are in due order. His highness meant to give them to his daughter yesterday. Unfortunately he decided to wait till today, hoping to be stronger. But last evening he died. I was with him when I received the news of the arrival of the El Rio. That was why I delayed. But the proofs are indubitable. I hand them to her who is more concerned."

With a sudden gesture he placed the papers in Nellie's hands. "Take them, my dear!" he said, his voice breaking. Van Kull dropped the girl's hand and stepped back. His face was very white.

Nellie glanced at him. Then her eyes fixed on the room, and she shrank back slightly as she met the eyes centered upon her. Then with a quick indrawing of breath she spoke.

"Captain Strindberg," she said clearly, "let me understand. Would the daughter of his highness have to give up her Americanism, her home, her lover, her all?"

The captain bowed. "Madame," he said, "it would be almost impossible for her to avoid doing so."

Nellie nodded. "And in return she would get—what? An introduction to a court of strangers, a sum of money, a husband picked out for her by someone else? I'm sorry, but the price is too high!" With a sudden movement she thrust the papers into the flame of one of the tall tapers that burned at the dead man's head.

As they flamed up Strindberg made a sudden movement to snatch them. Then, as abruptly, he desisted and stood still while the papers burned. With fitting ceremony, they buried the dead statesman that afternoon.

In the evening, when they were all gathered together, Nellie again addressed the Danish officer.

"I understand how seriously you who love your country, Captain Strindberg, take this matter. I have a natural affection for your country—the country of my poor dead father. But—can't you see? Your proofs and summons come a generation too late! I'm an American—a Yankee clear through and proud of it. And so is Henry Archman, though he loved and respected his old friend, my father."

"Surest thing you know!" roared Archman. "You're all right, Strindberg, but the girl's her own boss! Captain Bunker, we sail for New York tomorrow morning!"

SEPARATED MILK IS VALUABLE FOR PIGS

The Michigan experiment station has recently reported an interesting experiment in growing pigs on corn and water as compared to corn and separated milk. Two pigs that got milk gained 221 pounds each in five months. Those on corn and water gained only 95.

At the end of five months the milk-fed pigs were marketed and the two stunted pigs put in separate pens. Pig No. 4 got shelled corn, water and a good mineral mixture. Pig No. 3 got corn and separated milk and though he only weighed 43 pounds at seven months old he weighed 350 pounds at a year old, a gain of 307 pounds. Number 4 gained only 28 pounds, weighing 70 pounds at one year. Then No. 3 was marketed and No. 4 got separated milk and corn for five months. At the end of this time he had gained 274 pounds, weighing 350 pounds, showing that separated milk can bring out even a stunted pig to make good gains. The gains with separated milk cost 6.7 cents per pound, with skim milk at 35 cents per 100 pounds. Gains without milk cost 10.7 to 30 cents per pound.

Although separated milk contains valuable mineral matter this was evidently not what was lacking in the corn. The main deficiency was in protein and in the growth-promoting vitamins, both of which were supplied abundantly by the separated milk. Many people try to feed pigs on corn alone, while others who have dairy cows separate the milk and throw the skimmed milk away. Both are making a serious mistake. If separated milk is not available one should use alfalfa pasture, tankage or some other protein supplement along with corn.

Some will say that get better results on corn alone than were obtained by the Michigan station. This is probably true where pigs are getting some grass or weeds to supply them with mineral matter and vitamins and with some of the supplementary proteins. The main thing to remember is that corn is not a complete feed for growing animals.

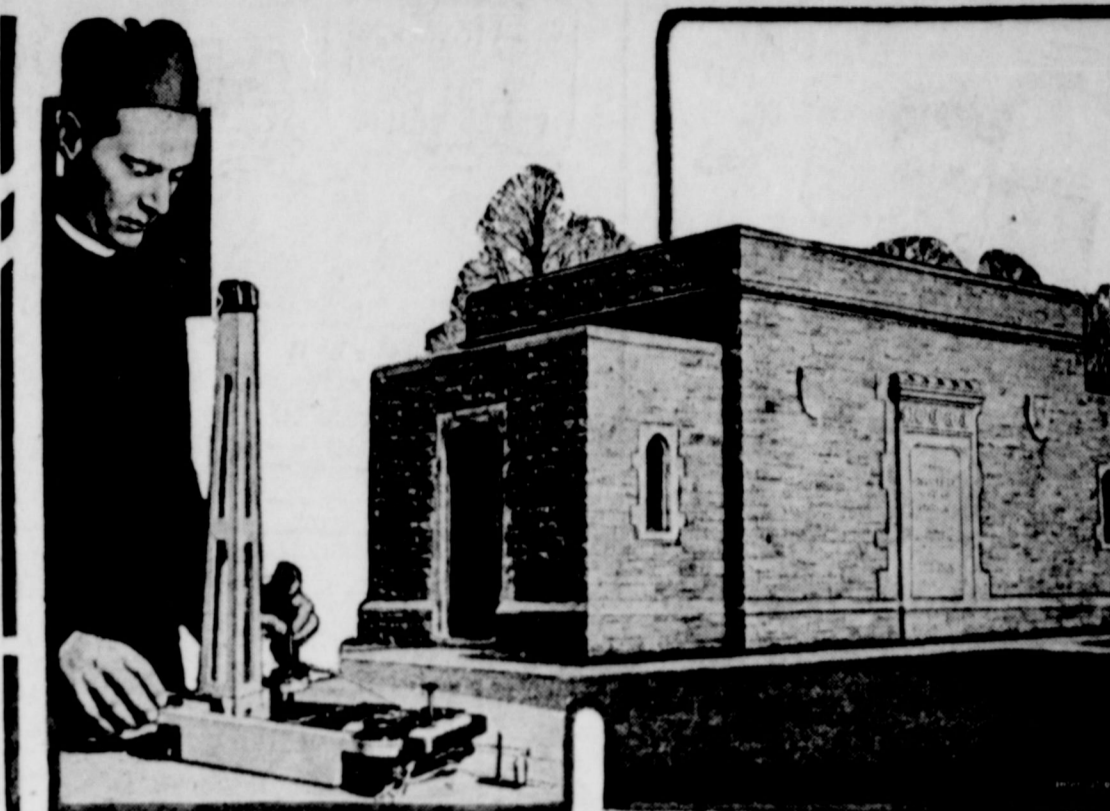

Separated milk should be considered as a supplementary feed, not as a complete feed in itself. Where fed in moderate quantities, two or three pounds of separated milk may take the place of one pound of corn. In large amounts count eight or ten pounds of milk equal to one pound of corn. A good rule is to count 100 pounds of separated milk worth half the price of corn per bushel.—Charles I. Bray, Colorado Agricultural College.

Worm-Free Pigs Bring Top Prices on Market
Hog raisers of Clay county, Nebraska, have built more than 1,000 movable hog houses during the past two years, according to reports to the United States Department of Agriculture, in order to keep their herds on clean ground and prevent roundworm infestation. Farmers of the county became interested in hog-lot sanitation in 1922, when the county agricultural agent arranged with two hog raisers to carry on demonstrations of the method and the results obtained by following the system. The litters which were farrowed and kept on clean pastures were in both cases much more thrifty than those kept in old, infested quarters. In one case, where 35 litters were farrowed in clean quarters and kept on clean pasture, 228 pigs were weaned without a runt. These pigs topped the market in six months when they averaged 185 pounds each. Litters on the same farm which were kept in old hog lots soon developed runts. A farmers' automobile tour was organized to visit the demonstrations and a number of individual visits were also made by farmers from all parts of the county. The economic advantage of hog-lot sanitation was so evident that farmers throughout the county are successfully following the practice or are building movable hog houses and completing other arrangements to adopt the system.

Live Stock Notes
The market docks the lambs when the sheepman doesn't.
Pure bred live stock on every farm will add millions to the value of the agricultural output and increase the prosperity of the individual farmer.

Mineral for Hogs
The Iowa station, as a result of several years of experimenting with mineral mixtures for hogs, suggests the following as good: Two parts common salt, four parts ground limestone and four parts ground phosphate. In addition to this, it may be advisable to add one part of sulphur, and to every one hundred pounds of the mixture one ounce of potassium iodide. Acid-phosphate or bone meal may be substituted for the rock phosphate.

"40 and 8" Outfit Built by Legion Post

Members of the American legion post of Jacksonville, Ill., have completed the construction of a replica of a French box car and locomotive, which they will take to all state and national encampments. These box cars were used largely during the World war and had a capacity for 40 men or 8 horses. The figures "40 and 8," painted upon each, gave the returned service men an idea in the formation of an auxiliary to the legion known as the "Forty and Eight."

Painting Brooklyn Bridge Again

Painting the Brooklyn bridge is an annual affair, yet every year when the painters are making their way through the great network of cables the crowds gather to watch them at their hazardous work. This picture was made from one of the towers.

LAMP POSTS OF OLD TINS

Beautiful ornamental lamp posts are being made from old tin cans and concrete by Ray Lambert, park commissioner, San Antonio, Texas. Mr. Lambert sends men to the city refuse heaps to collect discarded tin cans, which are hauled to an incinerator where the paper is burnt from them and the cans are then pressed in a form to make the skeleton or frame of a lamp post. Around this form wood is placed and then the skeleton is filled with concrete.

The Deacon's Wooing

By H. IRVING KING
(Copyright.)

"I DON'T know what you are thinking of," said Mrs. Marsden Ives to her daughter Katherine. "You know we haven't a cent of money. If your Uncle Amos didn't give me a small allowance we should both be in the poorhouse. And here is Mr. Reuben Schofield, a most estimable man in every way, deacon of the church, and you won't think of him as a husband when you know he is crazy to marry you."

Kate had no objection to the deacon as a family friend. He had been a friend of the deceased Ives, had continued his friendship with his family, and had, of late, been a constant caller at the Ives homestead—the said homestead, with a mortgage on it, being all that was left of the late Mr. Ives' estate when his affairs were settled up. Kate Ives, a strikingly handsome girl, listened, as she always did, to her mother's lecture until it ended, as usual, by Mrs. Ives bursting into tears and sobbing. "You never think of your poor old mother; all you think about is yourself and that Roger Capron."

"Mother," said Kate, when the storm had subsided so that she could speak and be heard. "I do think of you and of your welfare. But you must see that a marriage between Deacon Schofield and myself would be ridiculous. As for Roger Capron, he is no pauper. If we were married, do not think your children would see you want for anything. And besides, I love him, and shall never marry a man I do not love."

"All very pretty and romantic," returned Mrs. Ives, "but Roger has only a small income at best, while everyone knows that Deacon Schofield is very wealthy indeed. Never in all my life have I had the luxuries which I have always longed for and to which I feel that I am entitled before I die. If you would marry Schofield I might have them. But you only think of yourself!"

Later that day came Deacon Reuben Schofield. Mrs. Ives looked forty instead of fifty while the deacon looked to be sixty. The gold he had accumulated seemed to have tinged his complexion. But no man was more respected in the community. He had a bouquet of flowers in his hand and a box of candy in his coat-tail pocket, both of which, after greeting the Widow Ives, he laid on the table, saying diffidently: "I brought these for Kate. Do you think she likes me any better than she did?"

"My daughter," replied the widow, "cannot help but admire a man possessed of the excellent qualities of Deacon Schofield. But she is young—you must not take the whimsies of a girl for her real mind. If I could see Katherine settled in life I think I could die happy."

"Yes, yes," replied the deacon, "that's what I want. She ought to be married. By the way, I have bought that mortgage—you need not worry any more about the interest. Take your time, take your time. So you are sure Kate doesn't dislike me?"

"I am sure she does not," returned Mrs. Ives; "very sure."

"I am glad of that," said the deacon, "because—because—well, the better she like me the happier I shall be. The knowledge gives me courage to say something I have long wanted to say. So you think Kate would not object?"

"She might—at first—for form's sake," replied Mrs. Ives. "You know the ways of silly girls, deacon."

"Yes, yes," went on the deacon; "just so. Let me see, that young Roger Capron is rather sweet on Kate, isn't he?"

"A mere childish affair, not to be taken seriously, deacon," said the widow. "Kate has, I trust, come to her senses with regard to that matter long ago."

"Let me see," said the deacon. "I have been coming here pretty frequently for some time now, haven't I? And I have always brought candy and flowers for Kate, haven't I? I thought that might win her good will."

"Kate," declared Mrs. Ives in a stately manner, "would make an excellent wife for somebody—and you, deacon, would make an excellent husband for somebody."

"Do you really think so now, madam? Do you really think so?" said the deacon, chuckling and laughing. "Well, I am glad enough to hear you say so. You encourage me greatly, you really do. I came here today prepared to ask an important question—one upon which I feel my future happiness depends. Where is Kate?"

"In the kitchen, probably," replied the widow eagerly. "Shall I call her?"

"No, no, not just yet," cried the deacon. "Wait awhile."

Now Kate had left the kitchen and, hearing the deacon's voice in the parlor, had stopped at the door to listen—which was very wrong of her, but excusable on the ground that she felt that the conversation concerned herself. All thought of sacrifice vanished from her mind. She was about to break into the room and declare herself, but restrained her impulse. And the deacon went on: "As we agreed not only Kate ought to be married, but I ought to be married. What I need is a helpmate, and if you are quite sure that Kate would accept me as a stepfather, I ask you, madam, to be that helpmate." As Kate, with a laugh, burst into the room she heard her mother say, "Oh, deacon, this is so sudden." And it was.

Guard Against "Flu" With Musterole

Influenza, Grippe and Pneumonia usually start with a cold. The moment you get those warning aches, get busy with good old Musterole. Musterole is a counter-irritant that relieves congestion (which is what a cold really is) and stimulates circulation. It has all the good qualities of the old-fashioned mustard plaster without the blister.

Just rub it on with your finger-tips. First you will feel a warm tingle as the healing ointment penetrates the pores, then a soothing, cooling sensation and quick relief.

Have Musterole handy for emergency use. It may prevent serious illness.

To Mothers: Musterole is also made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole. 35c and 65c, in jars and tubes.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

RAINBOW JEWEL COLORS

Mother Rainbow was talking to her children. "My loves," she said, "we must always keep our jewels and our beautiful colors fresh and pretty and new. Of course, they aren't really new, but if they're kept pretty and fresh they will look new, and they will look new, too, if we all keep our smiles."

"It would make a great difference with many if they only kept their smiles new and bright. Perhaps you don't understand that, my dears."

The Rainbow children, in their beautiful gaily colored home, looked a little puzzled. "Smiles are always new," Mother Rainbow said. "And they make people look so nice, too."

"Of course, there are such things as familiar smiles. We may say that some one has a nice, familiar smile—that person's own smile. But it is always a new smile. It may be the same kind of a smile—the kind that person is most apt to smile, but it is always a new one, too."

"You can't get old or worn-out smiles. A smile, you see, is never worn out. Now, our smiles are much the same at all times, but they're always new and gay and bright."

"And that is the way we must keep them. The Rainbow family must never have frowns, you know. Then there are our jewels—our jewels which shine through our smiles as we join Mr. Sun and the King of the Clouds in a pretty shower party."

"There are always plenty of family jewels for us to wear, but we must always keep them looking well. There is a lovely pot of gold and we can dip some of the gold from it to make our costumes shine through the sunshine. And there is the pot of rainbow rubies and rainbow emeralds and rainbow jewels of every kind."

"Some of you wear one color and others another color, and so on, and then we all stay arranged so that to the earth people it seems as though we were long strips of color—they don't know it is because we arrange ourselves this way."

"Nor do they know that it is because many of us are wearing one color and stand together, and many of us are wearing another and stand together that we appear to them as we do."

"But smile your prettiest at all times, my dears. That is why people love to see the sun and the rain together. They know they will see our smiles—our golden, sunny, sparkling rainbow smiles."

"You never heard of being able to get second-hand smiles, or second-face smiles, as perhaps they should be called were there such things. But there aren't!"

"And now let us set to work and polish up the jewels." So the Rainbow children helped Mother Rainbow and they sat up in the sky on soft rugs of green and pink and blue.

They dipped their jewels in the gold and-jewel polish jar and they polished them so that they shone. They had little rags of the stuffy ends of clouds with which to polish their jewels.

And they freshened their cloths and made them look so pretty and bright. Then came the word that the King of the Clouds and the Sun were having a little afternoon tea party, and that they would be honored to have Mother Rainbow come and bring the children.

So along went the Rainbow family to the party, while down on the earth people called to each other and said: "Oh, see the Rainbow! Isn't it beautiful? And how the colors and the sunshine all seem to dance in the golden sunshine-rain."

But it was all because the Rainbow family always kept their pretty dresses and jewels in the best of order, and because they always had new smiles for every occasion!

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It
Applicants for Insurance Should Use Swamp-Root

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview of the subject, made the following statement: "The one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large. However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing, be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement."

Rich Preserves
Before the invention of self-sealing glass jars there was a way of keeping air from preserved fruits so they were made by the "poultice process" rule gives below. Many of these preserves were very delicious though too rich to take the place of fresh fruits in the daily diet. They are particularly nice to serve with hot muffins or biscuits.

Weigh the fruit carefully and allow an equal weight of Diamond Star Sugar. Dissolve the sugar in water, allowing one cup of water to four of sugar. Bring this syrup to a boil and drop the fruit in gradually. Cook gently until the fruit is soft and the syrup thick and rich. Berries should be cooked whole, but peaches, quinces and the larger fruits should be sliced. Cook very gently so that the fruit will not go to pieces. These rich preserves do not require sealed jars but may be kept in stone jars, cups or jelly glasses. Any kind of fruit may be put up in this way.

50,000 IN LIFE-SAVING SERVICE OF RED CROSS

Additional 50,000 Water Safety Experts Probable Gain of Summer Campaign.

A boy watched an expert give a class a lesson in the way to revive a person unconscious from water immersion. The next day the boy tried it on a bathing companion and saved his life. Such a boy justifies all the effort and the cost of the Life-Saving Service. American Red Cross officials declare. The Red Cross method of restoring partly drowned persons is so simple that the continual large sacrifice of life must decrease as an informed public insists upon general instruction in proper pressure practice to induce respiration.

The Red Cross Life-Saving Service in every part of the country, summer and winter, is engaged in teaching this method as an integral part of swimming and life-saving. This service has grown from a single expert in 1914 to a corps of almost 50,000 active life-savers. In this tenth year of the work it is predicted that fully 50,000 more experts will be eligible for membership in the corps. This large accession in a single year is confidently expected as the result of the campaign among 22,000 troops of Boy Scouts under a plan to qualify at least two life-guards in each troop.

During the past year 4,746 men, 2,374 women, 9,731 boys and girls successfully passed the rigid tests of the Red Cross—an increase of 5,231 over 1923. Intensive instruction is developing hundreds of qualified examiners for the Red Cross Life-Saving Corps, who supplement the teaching staff maintained by the national organization. The cause of water safety is therefore penetrating to new sections and eventually will cover all American territory.

Recognition of this Red Cross service for humanity is growing apace. At the request of the War Department every military training camp had life-saving instruction last summer. Municipalities have adopted the Red Cross course, public and private schools are offering it to students, business, civic and athletic organizations are promoting campaigns, and police departments are making it a part of the conditioning process for their recruits.

Volunteer life-savers throughout the country, the American Red Cross reports, are eagerly advancing the cause of water safety. 338 volunteers receiving medals for giving from 200 to 300 hours' service in two or three years. In addition 35 rescue bars to medals were awarded members of the Red Cross Corps who saved one or more lives during the year.

It is for the work and extension of life-saving that continued support through memberships is sought, and the American Red Cross urges all persons to join or renew membership during the enrollment campaign opening Armistice Day, November 11.

Red Cross Invites All Into Neutral Army of Service
 There are 2,000 counties in the United States and more than 2,500 Chapters of the American Red Cross. The chapter is the local unit of the national organization, formed to carry out the program, services and policies of the Red Cross. The industry of these 2,500 local units is a voluntary and steady outpouring of well-doing and sympathy which softens human suffering and distress wherever it arises. This work is absolutely neutral for the Red Cross knows no race, no creed, no color.

The strength of the American Red Cross being in its Chapters, the organization annually invites the people to join or renew their membership during a Roll Call which always begins on Armistice Day, November 11. "It is this annual enrollment of millions of Americans under the banner of the American Red Cross which makes possible the continued work of this great and democratic legion of mercy," says Judge John Barton Payne, head of the national organization. "Membership in the Red Cross is a privilege within the reach of everyone. The need for service grows more insistent each year. To keep pace with the demands which come from every section of our country, we must have the people's loyal support. Our capacity for service in the year to come will be limited only by the extent to which we receive support for our work in the coming Roll Call."

 Marathon put up. The game was hard fought through out. Coach Warren deserves no little credit for the improvement he has brought about in this team with so little material.

Another thing we especially noticed in Marathon is their fine school spirit. The crowd never ceased yelling encouragement to their team even after defeat was inevitable. School spirit is a great thing, and nothing encourages a team more than to know that their friends are backing them to the limit.

 There will be preaching tomorrow, Sunday, at the Methodist church by the new pastor, Rev. F. W. White. Everyone cordially invited to be present. Services at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m.

Rev. J. A. McMillan preached two excellent sermons last Sunday. Morning service was the Matt. 17th chapter, subject "The Indispensable Jesus." Evening service Phil. 4th chapter, subject "The Cure for Care." Quite a large congregation at evening services.

The Presbyterian Sunday school opened with 102 in attendance last Sunday and class reports all good. A number of Bibles in evidence, well studied lessons and good memory work.

The senior and little tota classes each numbered 19 present last Sunday with their friends.

The W. M. U. will not meet next Monday account of their president, Mrs. T. L. Williams, is away from home.

The Ladies Auxiliary to the Presbyterian church met with Mrs. Lee Van Zandt last Monday for Bible study with nine present. The Auxiliary have taken up the study of Home Missions, also Mrs. McKee read the first chapter. The hostess served angel food cake and hot chocolate. A profitable and enjoyable evening was the unanimous report.

NOW DOCTORS TREAT COLDS AND THE FLU

To break up a cold over night or to cut short an attack of grippe, influenza or sore throat, physicians and druggists are now recommending Calotabs, the nameless Calomet tablet, that is purified from dangerous and sickening effects. Those who have tried it say that it acts like magic, by far more effective and certain than the old style calomet, heretofore recommended by physicians.
 One or two Calotabs at bed time with a swallow of water—that's all. No salts, no nausea nor the slightest interference with eating, work or pleasures. Next morning your cold has vanished and your system feels refreshed and purified. Calotabs are sold only in original sealed packages, price ten cents for the large family package, thirty-five cents for the vest-pocket size; thirty-five cents for the large family package. Recommended and guaranteed by druggists. Your money back if you are not delighted.—adv.
