AGED MEXICAN FOUND DEAD IN BED

Francisco Hernandez, an aged Mexican man, was found dead in bed Monday morning at the home of Louis Martinez. The corner's inquest was that he had died of old age and pneumonia. The Mexican was blind and had been feeble and helpless for a number of years. He was buried Monday afternoon.

MRS. FERRIS RESIGNS

Mrs. Berta Ferris, principal of the Mexican school, resigned the first of the week and she will teach in the Mexican school at Alpine after the holidays.

Announcements have been received of the marriage of Miss Carrie Haynes of San Antonio to L. Julian LaCrosse, of Del Rio in San Antonio, Saturday, December 27, 1924. A host of friends in Sanderson wish the young couple much happiness and prosperity in their path through life. They will be at home in Del Rio.

A Christmas present received by Mrs. McLymont which she considers worth its weight in gold, (indeed it is to be considered quite an heirloom,) from the Edison Company in the way of a record wherein the Company and Mr. Edison himself wishes her a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year in 1925. Mr. Edison still takes an active part in the Phonograph Department and a dealer as well as an owner of a New Edison during his lifetime and supervision are to be congratulated.

Chas. E. Franks, of Dryden, was here on one of his infrequent visits last week. He declared while a caller at the Herald office last week-end, that his health for the past several months has subjected him to no end of annoyance and inconvenience, but expressed the belief that the stomach trouble with which he has previously been pestered is going to cause less trouble in the future. —Val Verde County Herald.

Mr. and Mrs. Noah Allen are the proud parents of twin girls, born Sunday night, December 28, 1924. One weighed 6½ and the other 7 pounds, mother and babies doing well.

Church News of Sanderson

Tomorrow being the first Sunday of the month there will not be any preaching.

Rev. D. A. Adams filled his regular appointment last Sunday, preaching two fine sermons.

Sunday school at the Presbyterian church numbered 100 in attendance last Sunday. So very cold several of the little tots were absent.

There were 30 members of the S. S. who filled every requirement for the honor roll for the past 3 months, so they will receive the silver button. The names will be given in the next issue of this paper.

The Christmas Tree and exercises at the Presbyterian church Christmas Eve were a success. Everything passed off nicely. The children were all duly impressed with "jolly old Santy" receiving their gifts from his hands with smiles.

So cold last Sunday evening the junior League did not meet. Let us all start the New Year with the determination to make the League a success with every officer being in his proper place.

We are all glad to know that Mrs. J. A. McMillan is back home from the hospital after her operation and doing nicely.

A Happy New Year to you

NEW YEAR OF PROSPERITY IS FORECASTED FOR SANDERSON

Sanderson will start the New Year with utmost confidence for one of the most successful years of prosperity. Merchants have added to their stocks after a great Christmas shopping revival and many improvements to be made in businesses as well as civic affairs.

Many new homes have been completed in the past year and others now being built. A number of new ones planned are to be erected this year.

The wool and mohair industry the past year has been one of the best, and prospects are brighter for a larger increase in production and value the coming year.

The Sanderson Ice, Water & Light Company installed new machinery worth about $15,000 the past few months.

Business with the Sanderson State Bank was very satisfactory during the past year, with earnings increased over 1923. In view of the fact of the increase in earnings during 1924 the Capital Stock has been raised from $25,000 to $50,000.

Business in general is in a prosperous condition and 1925 promises to surpass all other years in offering our citizens and business men an opportunity to enjoy a most prosperous business year.

W. B. A. of M. Meet

The W. B. A. of M. held a very interesting meeting last Saturday night. At the close of the meeting the members and their families gathered for a social hour. Santa Claus appeared giving each member present as well as the officers a gift, telling each one it was from Commander Margaret Pollard, who in return received several nice gifts from various members. Delicious hot chocolate, sandwiches and dates were served by Mrs. Pollard.

Mrs. J. E. Carter had as her guest during the holidays her son, Lawrence Carter and family, of Marathon.

Mr. and Mrs. Jim Mason and baby, of Cleburne, visited Mrs. Mason's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Harrell, during the holidays.

Mrs. W. F. Bohlman and children spent the holidays in El Paso with friends and relatives.

Mrs. M. Hatcher, of St. Louis, is visiting her sisters, Mrs. Ray Caldwell and Mrs. L. H. Lemons.

Dr. and Mrs. S. B. Hudson, of Sabinal, spent several days in the city the past week visiting friends and relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry B. Nutter of Girvin spent Christmas in the city with home folks.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Daugherty and baby of Alpine spent the holidays with Mrs. Daugherty's mother, Mrs. J. E. Carter.

Miss Ailene Beck returned to Marathon Sunday after spending the Christmas holidays with Mrs. M. A. Boling.

Mrs. E. G. Rienke, of San Antonio, is visiting her parents, Dr. and Mrs. P. F. Robertson.

Dr. Layton Cochran returned to San Antonio the latter part of last week after spending Christmas with

S. P. BRAKEMAN DROPS DEAD AS HE STEPS OFF PASSENGER TRAIN

Wm. M. Jourdan, 62, a veteran brakeman on the Southern Pacific, dropped dead here Sunday just after he had stepped off of passenger train No. 101 at the end of his run. Mr. Jourdan had started to hand Mr. Neal, car foreman, his train orders when he staggered and fell. At the corner's inquest a verdict was rendered that the man died of heart failure.

Mr. Jourdan had been an employee of the Southern Pacific for 40 years. At one time he was an employee of the S. A. & A. P. Railway, being one of their first brakemen.

He made San Antonio his home. He leaves his widow, Mrs. Minnie Jourdan; one son, Arthur; a daughter, Mrs. Eleanor Schodt, all of San Antonio; two brothers, John Jourdan, New Braunfels and I. R. Jourdan, of Colorado Springs; one sister, Mrs. John Patterson, San Antonio. He was a member of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen.

The body was shipped to San Antonio Sunday on passenger train No. 102. Chester Spratt accompanied the remains.

Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Doak were visitors in the city Tuesday from their ranch.

of something almost yearning, which she felt unaccountably.

"It's no worse for me than for you," she replied, responding to his tone in the natural generosity of her heart. He made no reply for a moment. Then, gently, he pressed her shoulder with his hand.

"Come and tell me when the loneliness is too bad."

And he was gone, his footsteps dying away upon the loose twigs of bamboo.

She understood and stood, fair and free, as Psyche, beside the water, a fresh interest awakened in her countenance. As she lowered herself into the shimmering ripples, she resolved to show up this talk, to press through the thin piece of wall; and, by a press of subtle siege, win the friendship which all at once seemed extremely desirable.

But, as usual, disappointment met her efforts when next she assailed the wall. The gap proved to be firmly closed, and she was barred across. It was impregnable. Barred, she could engage the bars and wonder.

The old chief appeared, keeping a distance, soon after receiving the man's message. But an outbreak of sickness was raging in the hut; therefore, much to the relief, their visit was postponed.

She ascertained from him that no canoe was carried on with other islands. The ships came to the south, Croft himself with renewed zest into building of a new hut. As if to himself all thought, he worked incessantly, sometimes moodily silent, sometimes seemingly keenly to enjoy the new friendship that had established itself, little by little, between them.

The morning after the war chief's wrinkled black face appeared again, two warriors in attendance.

She asked earnestly, "What is it?"

"That's what it is," he replied, "I've been up here. What are you doing here? Going to bath?"

"I was," she replied, hesitatingly. "But—don't go. Can't we sit down and talk? It—it's so lonely."

Again he looked down into her eyes, almost hungrily. Nothing she could have said could have hit the mark with surer aim. But he clenched his hands and put them behind him.

She gave a quick look at his gloomy face, threw pride to the winds, and plunged with her old impulsiveness. "Can't we be—friends?" she asked.

He remained silent, with hands still clasped at his back, watching her curiously.

"I thought you did not wish it," he remarked at last.

She sat down upon a rock, abstractedly picking out bits of the moss which covered it.

"I've—forgotten that—"

She paused, flushing. "If—we shared our thoughts more, things might not seem quite so bad," she suggested.

The ghost of a smile moved his lips. "You shall have more company soon. We are going to visit the natives. I have sent a message to the chief."

"About what?"

"To come to see me and be prepared to conduct us back to their settlement. To make friends."

"Friends? Those savages—"

"It's necessary. They leave us alone now through fear, which probably won't last. They will hate what they see; and in time only the hate may die. That's not the right keynote. So happy life here; is it?"

He looked up at her, with a smile meaning.

"A—little; but I can't act in these circumstances."

Strangely embarrassed, Barbara started uncertain whether to go on or retreat. She was in the act of turning when he lifted his head and saw her. For a moment both were silent. Then she was the look she had given the morning after the war chief's wrinkled black face appeared again, two warriors in attendance.

She asked earnestly, "What is it?"

and curiosity formed the chief of the unusual animation in the settlement. Great bustle of action was in progress—spearing, gathering of fruit, by men; smoke of many fires, ascending like willow, indicated the occupation of the women.

But the chief ordered unlimited feasts to pacify the stomachs, music to soothe the senses of the Terrible One-thuska, the stone god, looked inconspicuous among garlands of trailing vines and the feathery leaves of trees. Before him stood the sacrifice—a massive tree trunk stripped of its bark, upon which was piled a heap of dried sticks and undergrowth.

Balls of ever demanded a sacrifice at fall, and the moon was now at the full, and the people trembled, for the gods had been reserved for the Great White Chief, and who could tell what fates awaited he might not exact?

Mourning by her sick child and wept, she shunned her hut, although has not yet proclaimed tabu. She knew well what was in their minds. No superficial civilization causing to hide their natural instinct of protection, they openly hailed the substitute for an offering, some of her friends even taunted her with their hopes, if she appeared beside.

"A—aa!" Weep, Meama! The little one, with thee for the day; but, as at the setting of the sun he shall become as the smoke curling up to the nostrils of the Great White Chief! Wee, Meama!"

Yet she was one of themselves, and the child a favorite. She thought none the worse of them; they knew not the art of woe's double-faced masks.

Meanwhile, the dreaded visitors were being escorted, with some dignity through the intricacies of the thick inland vegetation. Although obviously terrified, the old chief bore himself well, maintaining a natural dignity with his humility.

Chimabohol, emboldened by a friend's overture, prompted words a question which had long troubled him. "Where doest thy tribe, O Mighty Chief?" he inquired, with some trepidation.

"No white warriors were visible doing Tehuacal and dwelling upon the coral Mexico! Do they, perchance, live in the times, or in holes deep within the earth?"

and when a moment the other was mystified. Then, remembering the natives' instinct, he seized this advantage rather than food up, waving his arms as if he had the universe.

"I'm not sure," he replied equivocally, "for these presents, it ever surrounds us! They are ed and ready at any moment to do to our aid. It waits, though, in the eye of mortal eye. Earthly halitum is not necessary for the White Chief's warriors."

The old native glanced about unobtrusively, a look of alarm overspreading his face. His sense of drama rising with the situation, Alan stretched out a regal hand.

And thee here, Great Chief, so that they might slay thee?"

A smile lit up Croft's face. If not strictly accurate, this surmise would suit his so! And seeing the tribe of a different hue, they were filled with fear and cried, saying 'Let us slay them'—he had a vague impression of Biblical eloquence, but it translated very well—"And they slew all thy sons in their fear; then ran to their boats. For their hearts are as the fermented breadfruit long stored in a pit."

Pausing to refresh his oratory, he proceeded to picture their mutual enemy in lurid colors, assuring the chief of their downfall. This gave him another inspiration.

"The gods sent us hither to tell thee that thy Vow of Vengeance had already overtaken the tribe!" he announced coolly. "But, because thou camest against us, we could not carry out our mission. The gods were angered, therefore, and visited thy tribe with sickness. Thou hadst to learn the fear of us and our wrath. Therefore, Chief, see that thou and thine fall not again into sin by lifting thy hands against us, the friends of all the gods!"

"It was the Vow," he said in a low tone.

"The Vow? What vow?"

"The Vow of Vengeance—of Hate!"

The old man rose, and walked to and fro, feverishly pulling his beard, obviously laboring under some strong emotion. At last he paused opposite them, and they saw tears upon his wrinkled black cheeks. "Hearken, Great Chief!" he said. "The white man came before, not many summers past. He came in great numbers, and he kill! A-aa! He let loose his magic, and he kill most of my tribe with his smoke! It hit them, making holes, leaving little hard ball-decks behind. Our homes were near thine own, even in the huts beside the waving palms. They also were shattered by the smoke and its ball-devils. My warriors lay dead, bleeding on the ground. Our women also, our little ones, they spared not!" He paused, overcome, for a moment.

Croft sat listening intently, with dawning comprehension.

"How did they come?" he asked.

"The lagoon was black with strange canoes, Great Chief. Beyond, near the big gap in the reef, floated an island. . . . A-aa! a strange sight, the bravest with fear—" He stopped, again overcome, and turned away.

Hastily Croft interpreted this conversation to the girl.

"Didst thou attack these white men first?" he asked.

The old man shook his head. "We feared their arrival! We but gathered together, outside our houses, to see the wondrous sight. The hand of Death had been heavy upon us, and we were small in number, even then. That day, less than half were left alive. . . . My sons were all slain. . . .

"The d-d murderers!"

Chimabohol looked up, startled by this burst of vehement English. Croft controlled his indignation, making further inquiries, which elicited the answers he expected.

"They were all men," the native told him. "After they had killed, they fled away to their canoes. They were covered with dark clothing, each like unto each. When they spoke, they spoke strangely—here," he stroked his throat, "and their words were like the sounds made by one whose stomach is too full, and who must return somewhat lying therein."

This vivid description of the Teutonic tongue convinced his listener.

"Ha! The d-d Hunns! I thought as much." He again interpreted for the girl at his side. "Now let me think. We must turn this to our advantage. It proves what we talked about that evening by the river; 'isn't it? The effects of our 'civilized' war were felt even here!" He ran his fingers through his hair, watching Chimabohol thoughtfully.

"And thy Vow was of vengeance upon all white men?"

"Even so, Great Chief."

"If I'm . . . His fertile brain speedily conceived a plan which, if wild, was yet founded on fact.

"Chief," he began confidently, "those white men who murdered thy sons were an enemy tribe waging war against my tribe. And their ways were treacherous; their weapons terrible!"

Chimabohol was un- usually intelligent for a native. Quick to grasp the meaning of this stranger, who spoke a dialect so much resembling his own, a flash of comprehension leapt into his eyes.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale by MARY GRAHAM BONNER

PARTY COOKING

"Well, here I am," said the flour.

"Great things are about to happen," "Right!" said the sugar.

"I'm down here on the table, and my tin has just been refilled so that they evidently want plenty of me."

"I'm here," said the baking powder.

"And here we come," said some shelled walnuts.

"We're going to help make a nut bread," they added.

"Great things must be about to happen," the flour said again.

"Oh yes, there are the eggs and all the pots and pans are being put out and greased, and the oven is slowly warming and the mixing bowls and the big spoons are all out now."

"The mixing board is coming now! Ah, this is fun. Lots of cooking!"

Then the fun began. The various things from the various tins on the broad kitchen shelf were being mixed together, all sorts of goodies were being mixed.

Raisins were brought forth and a fruit cake was made. Doughnuts and crullers were made, too, and how quickly they browned as they cooked in the warm, fat doughnut swimming pool in the pot on the stove.

Hot biscuits were being rolled out, too, and the nut bread mixture was raising itself a bit in a warm spot as it waited for the few minutes to pass by before it went into the beautiful warm oven.

Then it would come out and it would smell so deliciously and it would taste so deliciously.

Everyone would speak of it as it was eaten. It was very popular.

Oh, the biscuits and the doughnuts and the nut bread and the fruit cake and the crullers and the others were highly excited as they helped prepare themselves for the coming feast.

They enjoyed it all.

They enjoyed it when they were mixed together. They liked the friendly way in which they all blended together in the big yellow bowl.

They enjoyed it when they were rolled and cut into handsome, or neat little shapes.

They enjoyed it as they cooked and felt their own warm, fresh, tempting fragrance rising and spreading through the kitchen and even out into the rest of the house.

They enjoyed it as they waited to cool and as they were admired by different members of the family.

And they enjoyed it, too, when little odd pieces had been sampled and pronounced good by those who had sampled.

Then came the party—the party for which they had been made.

And as they were eaten they heard the compliments.

"My dear, what delicious nut bread. How good it is!"

"And such doughnuts. You must tell me how you make them. Mine are never so good."

"Well, well, I don't know, fruit cake is so rich but yours never seems to disagree with me."

"Oh, my! I have another hot biscuit? They are simply delicious!"

Such compliments.

And then some of the last pieces were gathered together after the party was over and divided and sent, together with some home-made jelly with a beautiful whipped cream on the top, to a few friends who had not been able to come to the party.

It was such fun to have a party—for those who came to the party, and for those who gave the party.

Don't Fuss With Mustard Plasters!

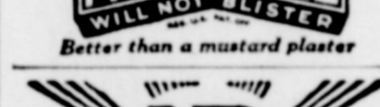

Musterole Works Without the Blister—Easier, Quicker

There's no sense in mixing a mess of mustard, flour and water when you can easily relieve pain, soreness or stiffness with a little clean, white Musterole.

Musterole is made of pure oil of mustard and other helpful ingredients, combined in the form of the present white ointment. It takes the place of mustard plasters, and will not blister.

Musterole usually gives prompt relief from sore throat, bronchitis, tonsillitis, croup, stiff neck, asthma, neuralgia, headache, congestion, pleurisy, rheumatism, lumbago, pains and aches of the back or joints, sprains, sore muscles, bruises, chilblains, frost-bite, colds of the chest (it may prevent pneumonia).

To Mothers: Musterole is also made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole. 35c and 65c, jars and tubes.

GENERAL FARM NEWS

(By S. C. Hoyle, Editor of Extension Service Publications, A. and M. College of Texas.)

Many Thousands of Dollars Saved On Cotton Crop

Eight hundred per cent profit on a $7,500 investment in weevil poison has netted Frio County farmers $67,200, according to the results calculated from the evidence of about 20 farmers' demonstrations.

The average increase yield per acre on demonstrations was 150 pounds of seed cotton where three treatments were applied. The increase on fields where a less number of treatments were given was proportionately less.

An estimate, based upon the 114 barrels of sweet poison sold, indicated that 10,000 acres were treated in Frio County. Fifty per cent of these were given the full three applications as recommended by the county agent.

About twenty per cent were given only one application, and unless better success was attained than on fields under similar conditions observed by the agent no results were secured.

The cost of poisoning is estimated to be about one dollar per acre for three applications. This includes forty cents for poison and sixty cents for labor. This cost would naturally be less on fields given fewer applications.

Similar demonstrations were conducted in 1923 by the county agent, but there was no such uniformity in results. Some fields seemed to show marked results, while on as many others there was apparently no indication of benefit.

The value of the increase obtained from poisoning was based upon 20c per pound. Five thousand acres thrice treated assumed to have produced the equivalent of the demonstrations similarly treated and producing 150 pounds of seed cotton or 50 pounds of lint would amount to $50,000 for cotton and $7,500 for seed.

These thousand acres with only two applications producing approximately 25 pounds of lint would raise the amount $17,500, including the seed. This total it has been figured that a total of $74,750 worth of cotton was produced more than would have been without the $7,500 investment in poisoning, or a net profit of $67,200; over 800 per cent interest.

Hens Must Lay in Winter to Make Profit

It has been demonstrated by practice and experiment that growth, development, weight and that uncertain factor profit in poultry production depend upon giving the flock the right kind of food, the right amount of it and the following of the right methods in giving it.

She must have the foods from which she can make eggs. This is the poultryman's part of the work. She must have, during the winter, the same kinds of food she got so easily in the spring and early summer when she produced plenty of eggs.

Let's look at the winter, the same kind of food she got so easily in the spring and early summer when she produced plenty of eggs. What were these? Lots of bugs and worms and tender greens, with the grains she got at the barn, and plenty to drink.

If one has a patch of alfalfa, clover, a big turnip patch, wheat or oat field near the barn, he is ready to see his hens get what they need in the line of green feeds during the winter.

All parings of green vegetables, cabbage leaves and such from the kitchen should be chopped and fed while fresh to the hens. The hens need this kind of food if they are to give a good egg yield and if the green feed is not there for their use, one must sprout oats or grow and store for winter use crops of mangels or cabbage.

Lunches Served Hot in School Room In many places schools are beginning to serve noon lunches or one or two dishes that can be eaten with food brought from home.

Mother's interesting themselves in this work not only because of its effect upon the health of their children, but also because of its relation to education for home making. In their own homes they try to serve wholesome food and also to train their children to good habits in eating. They realize, however, that the meal at school is in some ways a better opportunity for training than those served at home.

Unlike the other meals of the child's day, it is eaten during hours set apart for education.

The recipes for lunch dishes may be given to the older girls in school, discussed in class and tried at home. The special dish for the day, which in winter is usually hot, can be prepared by groups of pupils working in turn. It is seldom desirable to prepare more than one dish a day in a small school, and this should, for the sake of variety, differ from day to day.
