SANDERSON LONG WOOL SOLD FOR TOP PRICES

The Sanderson Wool Commission Co., sold to Caldwell Palmer of San Antonio, representing Jeremiah Williams & Co. Boston; Albert S. Baker of Boston, Mass. representing Haines, Bloomfield, Kincaid Co. of Boston, Mass., and John S. Allison of San Angelo, representing Adams & Leland of Boston, about 300,000 pounds of long wool at prices ranging from 40 to 48-8 cents per pound. This has been the highest price paid for any long wool this season.

MRS. JOEKER ENTERTAINS WITH FORTY-TWO

Mrs. Joe Kerr entertained a number of friends at her home on July 2 with forty-two, honoring Mrs. W. A. Whittle. The guests were escorted to the cool lawn where the tables were arranged for playing.

At the close of several games Miss Katherine Carmichael was found to be holder of high score, a venetian glass comport being the prize. A box of bath powder was the second prize for high score, held by Mrs. C. S. Gardner. The honor guest received two pair of beautiful sheer hose. Refreshments of cantaloupe-ala mode were served.

BRIDGE PARTY

Mrs. Fred P. Holt entertained several friends at her home on Wednesday afternoon, July 1, with bridge. The guests upon arriving were ushered to the cool green maderia vine arbor, with beautiful baskets of cut flowers hanging from the top, where tables were placed for bridge.

At the close of several interesting games, Mrs. Vance McLymont scored high and she was awarded a hand embroidered dresser set; Mrs. H. R. Lauffence was given a recipe book of salads as holder of second high. Artistic score pads were given for the holder of low score, Mrs. W. H. Savage.

Delicious cool punch and marshmallow pudding was served to sixteen guests.

Mrs. Mera Cochran, assistant district deputy of the O. E. S. left the first of the week for Del Rio and Rock Springs to pay an official visit to the Eastern Star lodges in those cities.

Mr. and Mrs. M. P. Lester are visiting relatives in Robstown, Texas. They were accompanied by J. C. Lester who has been visiting them here the past month.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Brown left the latter part of last week for their home in Lubbock, Texas after a pleasant visit with relatives here. They were accompanied Mrs. Brown's sister, Miss Lorene Harrell.

S. C. Bodkin, J. C. Reeves and Jack McKee spent Thursday in El Paso where they attended the regular bi-monthly safety meeting.

Mrs. C. H. White and daughters, Louise and Novice, have returned from a visit with relatives in Lytle, Texas.

We are not particularly excited over what France owes Uncle Sam, but we would like mighty well to know how we could induce some of our delinquent subscribers to pay up.

FIRST BABY GIRL BORN IN OIL CAMP NAMED FOR TOWN

Little Rita Maria Nutter, baby daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry B. Nutter of Girvin, Texas, has the distinction of being the first baby born in the Texon Oil & Land company's camp. The little girl arrived Sunday, June 28, at the new Santa Rita hospital and she was named in honor of the camp at the suggestion of Mr. Williby, superintendent of the Texon Oil & Land company.

Mr. and Mrs. Nutter have relatives in Terrell county and many friends in Arizona and New Mexico and they often come to El Paso for shopping. The baby's mother is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Farley, Mr. Farley being a retired ranchman of Sandey. The baby's father is the son of Porter B. Nutter of Pennsylvania, W. Va. Mr. and Mrs. Nutter were married July 3, 1923, at a ceremony solemnized on the summit of Big Hill, near Sanderson.—El Paso Herald.

FOURTH OF JULY QUIET IN THE CITY

As there were no celebrations or any activities in the city every thing was quiet in the city on the Fourth of July. Several parties spent the week-end on fishing and swimming trips and a large number citizens went to Alpine for the rodeo. The bank, postoffice and a few business houses were closed all day.

FORTY-TWO PARTY

At her beautiful home Wednesday afternoon, Mrs. James Kerr was hostess to a forty-two party. Various colored zenias and ferns were used for decorations.

Following several close games, scores were added, Mrs. E. F. Howard holding high score and was awarded a pair of artistic candlesticks; Miss Katherine Carmichael, second high score, was given a beautiful tea apron. A box of handkerchiefs was the cut prize that went to Mrs. D. J. McLymont, while a fern was the low score prize held by Mrs. F. B. Carter.

Delicious white and gold cake and ice cream topped with cherries was served to some twenty-five guests.

The Princess Theater has recently installed a new projector Mrs. O. M. Shaw, the proprietor announces. From now the intermission necessary to the changing of reels will be eliminated.

Prof. and Mrs. T. L. Williams and daughter, Miss Gazelle, left the first of the week for a visit with relatives and friends in Sabinal and San Antonio.

Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Jobe and children have returned to Thuber, Texas after a pleasant visit with relatives here.

Mrs. J. W. McKee and daughter, Miss Myrl, left this week for Rock Springs where they will visit friends and relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. John Bell returned to their home at Valentine Tuesday after visiting relatives.

C. S. Gardner of San Marcos was a week-end visitor in the city the past week.

SO BIG

"No," Selma admitted, "but those Italian villas and French chateaux in north Chicago suburbs are a good deal like a lace evening gown in the Arizona desert. It wouldn't keep you cool in the daytime, and it wouldn't be warm enough at night. I suppose a native architecture is evolved from building for the local climate and the needs of the community, keeping beauty in mind as you go. We don't need turrets and towers any more than we need draw-bridges and moats. It's all right to keep them, I suppose, where they grew up, in a country where the feudal system meant that any day your next-door neighbor might take it into his head to call his gang around him and sneak up to steal your wife and tapestries and gold drinking cups."

Dirk was interested and amused. Talks with his mother were likely to affect him thus. "What's your idea of a real Chicago house, mother?"

Selma answered quickly, as if she had thought often about it; as if she would have liked just such a dwelling on the site of the old DeJong farmhouse in which they now were seated so comfortably. "Well, it would need big porches for the hot days and nights so's catch the prevailing southwest winds from the prairies in the summer—a porch that would be swung clear around to the east, too—or a terrace or another porch east so that if the precious old lake breeze should come up just when you think you're dying of the heat, as it sometimes does, you could catch that, too. It ought to be built—the house, I mean—rather squarish and tight and solid against our cold winters and northeasters. Then sleeping porches, of course. There's a grand American institution for you! England may have its afternoon tea on the terrace, and Spain may have its patio, and France its courtyard, and Italy its pergola, vine-covered; but America's got the sleeping porch—the screened-in open-air sleeping porch, and I shouldn't wonder if the man who first thought of that would get precedence, on Judgment day, over the men who invented the airplane, the talking machine, and the telephone. After all, he had nothing in mind but the health of the human race." After which grand period Selma grinned at Dirk, and Dirk grinned at Selma and the two giggled together there by the fireplace, companionably.

"Mother, you're simply wonderful!—only your native Chicago dwelling seems to be mostly porch."

Selma waved such carping criticism away with a careless hand. "Oh, well, any house that has enough porches, and two or three bathrooms and at least eight closets can be lived in comfortably, no matter what else it has or hasn't got."

Next day they were more serious. The eastern college and the architectural career seemed to be settled things. Selma was content, happy. Dirk was troubled about the expense. He spoke of it at breakfast next morning (Dirk's breakfast; his mother had had hers hours before and now as he drank his coffee, was sitting with him a moment and glancing at the paper that had come in the rural mail delivery). She had been out in the fields overseeing the transplanting of young tomato seedlings from hothed to field. She wore an old gray sweater buttoned up tight, for the air was still sharp. On her head was a battered black felt soft hat (an old one of Dirk's) much like the one she had worn to the Haymarket that day ten years ago.

"I've been thinking," he began, "the expense—"

"Fig'll do it," Selma said, calmly. "I've been wanting to put them in for three or four years. It's August Hempel's idea. Hogs, I should have said."

He echoed, "Hogs?" rather faintly. "High-bred hogs. They're worth their weight in silver this minute, and will be for years to come. I won't go in for them extensively. Just enough to make an architect out of Mr. Dirk DeJong." Then, at the expression in his face: "Don't look so pained, son. There's nothing revolting about a hog—he's a handsome, impressive-looking animal, the hog, when he isn't treated like one."

He looked dejected. "I'd rather not go to school on—hogs."

She took off the felt hat and tossed it over to the old couch by the window; smoothed her hair back with the flat of her palm. You saw that the soft dark hair was liberally sprinkled with gray now, but the eyes were bright and clear as ever.

"You know, Sobig, this is what they call a paying farm—as vegetable farms go. We're out of debt, the land's in good shape, the crop promises well if we don't have another rainy cold spring like last year's. I'm having a grand time. When I see the asparagus plantation actually yielding, that I planted ten years ago, I'm as happy as if I'd stumbled on a gold mine. I think, sometimes, of the way your father objected to my planting the first one. April, like this, in the country, with everything coming up green and new in the rich black loam—I can't sell you. And when I know that it goes to market as food—the best kind of food, that keeps people's bodies clean and clear and flexible and strong! I like to think of babies' mothers saying: 'Now eat your spinach, every scrap, or you can't have any dessert! . . . Carrots make your eyes bright. . . . Finish your potato. Potatoes make you strong!'"

Selma laughed, flashed a little. "Yes, but how about hogs? Do you feel that way about hogs?"

"Certainly," said Selma, briskly. She pushed toward him a little blue-and-white platter that lay on the white cloth near her elbow. "Have a bit more bacon, Dirk. One of these nice curly slivers that are so crisp."

"I've finished my breakfast, Mother," he rose.

The following autumn saw him a student of architecture at Cornell. He worked hard, studied even during his vacation.

He would come home to the heat and humidity of the Illinois summers and spend hours each day in his own room that he had filled up with a long work-table and a drawing board. His T-square was at hand; two triangles—a 45 and a 60; his compass; a pair of dividers. Selma sometimes stood behind him watching him as he carefully worked on the tracing paper. His contempt for the local architecture was now complete. Especially did he hold forth on the subject of the apartment houses that were mushrooming on every street in Chicago from Hyde Park on the south to Evanston on the north. Chicago was very elegant in speaking of these; never called them "flats"; always apartments. In front of each of these (there were usually six to a building) was stuck a little glass-enclosed cubicle known as a sun-parlor. In these (sometimes you heard them spoken of, grandly, as solariums) Chicago dwellers took refuge from the leaden skies, the heavy lake atmosphere, the gray mist and fog and smoke that so frequently swathed the city in gloom. They were done in yellow or rose tints. Silk lampshades glowed therein, and flower-laden boxes. In these frank little boxes Chicago read its paper, sewed, played bridge, even ate its breakfast. It never pulled down the shades.

"Terrible," Dirk fumed. "Not only are they hideous in themselves, stuck on the front of those houses like three pairs of spectacles; but the lack of decent privacy! They do everything but bathe in 'em. Have they never heard the advice given people who live in glass houses?"

By his junior year he was talking in a large way about the Beaux Arts. But Selma did not laugh at this. "Perhaps," she thought, "who can tell! After a year or two in an office here, why not another year of study in Paris if he needs it?"

Though it was her busiest time on the farm Selma went to Ilhaca for his graduation in 1913. He was twenty-two and, she was calmly sure, the best-looking man in his class. Undeniably he was a figure to please the eye; tall, well-built, as his father had been, and blond, too, like his father, except for his eyes. These were brown—not so dark as Selma's, but with some of the soft liquid quality of her glance. They strengthened his face, somehow; gave him an ardent look of which he was not conscious. Women, feeling the ardor of that dark glance turned upon them, were likely to credit him with feelings toward themselves of which he was quite innocent. They did not know that the glance and its effect were mere matters of pigmentation and eye-conformation. Then, too, the gaze of a man who talks little is always more effective than that of one who is loquacious.

Selma, in her black silk dress, and her plain black hat, and her sensible shoes was rather a quaint little figure among all those vivacious, bevelled, and ribboned mammas. But a distinctive little figure, too. Dirk need not be ashamed of her. She eyed the rather paunchy, prosperous, middle-aged fathers and thought, with a pang, how much handsomer Pervus would have been than any of these, if only he could have lived to see this day. Then, involuntarily, she wondered if this day would ever have occurred, had Pervus lived. Chided herself for thinking thus.

When he returned to Chicago, Dirk went into the office of Hollis & Sprague, architects. But his work there was little more than that of draughtsman, and his weekly stipend could hardly be dignified by the term of salary. But he had large ideas about architecture and he found expression for his suppressed feelings on his week-ends spent with Selma at the farm.

"Baroque" was the word with which he dismissed the new Beachside hotel, north. He said the new Lincoln park handstand looked like an igloo. He said that the city council ought to order the Potter Palmer mansion destroyed as a blot on the landscape, and waxed profane on the subject of the east face of the Public Library building, downtown.

"Never mind," Selma assured him, happily. "It was all thrown up so hastily. Remember that just yesterday, or the day before, Chicago was an Indian fort, with tepees where towers are now, and mud wallows in place of asphalt. Beauty needs time to perfect it. Perhaps we've been waiting all these years for just such youngsters as you. And maybe some day I'll be driving down Michigan boulevard with a distinguished visitor—Hollis Pool, perhaps. Why not? Let's say Hollis Pool, the famous sculptor. And he'll say, 'Who designed that building—the one that is so strong and yet so light? So gay and graceful and yet so reticent!' And I'll say, 'Oh, that! That's one of the earlier efforts of my son, Dirk DeJong.'"

But Dirk pulled at his pipe moodily; shook his head. "Oh, you don't know, mother. It's so d-d slow. First thing you know I'll be thirty. And what am I! An office boy—or little more than that—at Hollis."

During his university years Dirk had seen much of the Arnolds, Eugene and Paula, but it sometimes seemed to Selma that he avoided these meetings—these parties and week-ends. She was content that this should be so, for she guessed that the matter of money held him back. She thought it was well that he should realize the difference now. Eugene had his own car—one of five in the Arnold garage. Paula, too, had hers. Her fascination for Dirk was strong. Selma knew that, too. In the last year or two he had talked very little of Paula and that, Selma knew, meant that he was hard hit.

Sometimes Paula and Eugene drove out to the farm. Eugene would appear in rakish cap, loose London knickers, queer brogans with an English look about them, a carefully careless looseness about the hang and fit of his jacket. Paula did not affect sports clothes for herself. She was slim, dark, vivacious. Her eyes were languorous, lovely. She worshiped luxury and said so.

"I'll have to marry money," she declared. "Now that they've finished calling poor grandpa a beef-baron and taken I don't know how many millions away from him, we're practically on the streets."

"You look it!" from Dirk; and there was bitterness beneath his light tone. "Well, it's true. All this silly muck-raking in the past ten years or more was partly rough, let me tell you. I read some of the accounts of that last indictment—the 1910 one—and I must say I gathered that dear old Aug made Jesse James look like a philanthropist. I should think, at his age, he'd be a little scared. After all, when you're over seventy you're likely to have some doubts and fears about punishment in the next world. But not a grand old pirate like grandfather. He'll sack and burn and plunder until he goes down with the ship. And it looks to me as if the old boat had a pretty strong list to starboard right now. Father says himself that unless a war breaks, or something, which isn't at all likely, the packing industry is going to spring a leak."

"Elaborate figure of speech," murmured Eugene. The four of them—Paula, Dirk, Eugene and Selma—were sitting on the wide screened porch that Selma had had built at the southwest corner of the house. Paula was, of course, in the couch-swing. Occasionally she touched one slim languid foot to the floor and gave indolent impetus to the couch.

"It is, rather, isn't it? Might as well finish it, then. Darling Aug's been the grand old captain right through the 'vintage. Dad's never been more than a pretty bum second mate. And as for you, Gene my love, cabin boy would be, 'understand me, big.' Eugene had gone into the business a year before.

"What can you expect," retorted Eugene, "of a lad that hates salt pork? And every other kind of his meat?"

He despised the yards and all that went with it.

Selma got up and walked to the end of the porch. "There's Adam coming in with the last load for the day. He'll be driving into town now. Cornelius started an hour ago." She went down the steps on her way to oversee the loading of Adam Bras' wagon. At the bottom of the steps she turned. "Why can't you two stay to supper? You can quarrel comfortably right through the meal and drive home in the cool of the evening."

"I'll stay," said Paula, "thanks. If you'll have all kinds of vegetables, cooked and uncooked. And let me go out into the fields and pick 'em myself like Maud Muller or Marie Antoinette or any of those make-believe rustic gals."

In her French-heeled slippers and her filmy silk stockings she went out into the rich black furrows of the fields, Dirk carrying the basket.

"Asparagus," she ordered first. Then, "But where is it? Is that it?"

"You dig for it, idiot," said Dirk, stooping, and taking from his basket the queerly curved sharp knife or spud used for cutting the asparagus shoots. "Cut the shoots three or four inches below the surface."

"Oh, let me do it!" She was down on her silken knees in the dirt, ruined a goodly patch of the fine, tender shoots, gave it up and sat watching Dirk's expert manipulation of the knife. "Let's have radishes, and corn, and tomatoes and lettuce and peas and artichokes and—"

"Artichokes grow in California, not Illinois."

He was more than usually uncommunicative, and noticeably moody.

Paula remarked it. "Why the Othello brow?"

"You didn't mean that rot, did you? About marrying a rich man. You were joking, weren't you?"

"I wasn't. I'd hate being poor, or even just moderately rich. I'm used to money—loads of it. I'm twenty-four. And I'm looking around."

He kicked an innocent beet-top with his boot. "You like me better than any man you know."

"Of course I do. Just my luck."

"Well, then!"

"Well, then, let's take these vegetables in."

She made a pretense of lifting the heavy basket. Dirk snatched it roughly out of her hand so that she gave a little cry and looked ruefully down at the red mark on her palm. He caught her by the shoulder—even shook her a little. "Look here, Paula. Do you mean to tell me you'd marry a man simply because he happened to have a lot of money?"

"Perhaps not simply because he had a lot of money. But it certainly would be a factor, among other things."

Six months later Paula Arnold was married to Theodore A. Storm, a man of fifty, a friend of her father's, head of so many companies, stockholder in so many banks, director of so many corporations that even old Aug Hempel seemed a recluse from business in comparison. She never called him Teddy. No one ever did. Theodore Storm was a large man—not exactly stout, perhaps, but flabby. His inches saved him from grossness. He had a large white serious face, fine thick dark hair, graying at the temples. Within three years Paula had two children—a boy and a girl. "There! That's done," she said. Her marriage was a great mistake and she knew it. For the war, coming in 1914, a few months after her wedding, sent the Hempel-Arnold interests sky-rocketing. Millions of pounds of American beef and pork were shipped to Europe. In two years the Hempel fortune was greater than it ever had been. Paula was up to her eyes in relief work for Bleeding Belgium.

Dirk had not seen her in months. She telephoned him unexpectedly one Friday afternoon in his office at Hollis & Sprague's.

"Come out and spend Saturday and Sunday with us, won't you? We're running away to the country this afternoon. I'm so sick of Bleeding Belgium you can't imagine. I'm sending the children out this morning. I can't get away so early. I'll call for you in the roadster this afternoon at four and drive you out myself."

"I don't think I—"

"I'll call for you at four. I'll be at the curb. Don't keep me waiting, will you?"

Charcoal

Charcoal is the form of amorphous carbon obtained by strongly heating wood. If required for fuel it can be obtained by the partial combustion of wood in heaps. The wood, cut into convenient and uniform lengths, is systematically piled in a mound-shaped heap with provision made for draft. The mound is covered with earth, except a small opening at the top. This is a charcoal kiln. When completed it is fired, and by means of slow combustion the wood is converted into charcoal, which is usually almost dead black in color and much lighter in weight than wood. This is the old way of producing charcoal.

Alaskan "Dog Car"

Almost every conceivable type of transportation is used to move the mails—railroads, steamboats, automobiles, airplanes, motor boats, wagons, horses, pneumatic tubes, belt conveyors, motorcycles, bicycles, the sled of the arctic, and even the "dog car," the Detroit News says.

The "dog car" is an Alaskan invention. An abandoned railroad runs out of Nome to a mining camp. The enterprising arctic circle mail man hitches his dog team to a hand car and scoots up the mountain side with the mail.
