SANDERSON WINS ONE FROM MARFA NINE

Leonard Howard, the invisible pitcher for Marfa, who has won 18 games out of that many played, met his Waterloo on the 19th game when the fast Sanderson team faced him on the Marfa diamond last Sunday afternoon, in a fast game. Neither side scored a run up to the 4th inning when Church started for the local boys by hitting the first ball pitched over the left field fence for a home run with no one on base. Marfa scored a run in the 4th inning and then by a rally in the 6th inning they scored 3 more runs making a total of 4 to 1 in their favor. Billy Howard started a rally in the 8th for a hit, followed by French and Robertson with a hit a piece filling the bases. Reynolds popped out and White hit safe scoring two runs and Bodkin tripled bringing in Robertson and White. The inning ended with a one lead, and by hard working and allworking together the local boys won by a 5 to 4 score.

Cavender pitched a good game of ball backed up by Bodkin and had the whole team behind them who all played an excellent game. Howard pitched hard for Marfa but the local boys hit him for 10 safe hits, he struck out 4 men while Cavender struck 7 out. The box score:

Texas Population Increasing. According to Census Bureau reports the population of Texas has now safely passed the 5,000,000 number and is increasing at the rate of about 100,000 a year.

Wealth Outgrowing Population. If a correct opinion may be formed from the income tax reports, the wealth of Texas is increasing much faster than the population. According to the Internal Revenue Bureau, Texas now ranks tenth among the states in the amount of net income reported.

Deplorable Conditions in Russia. Count Ilja Tolstoy, in a lecture in Austin recently, tried to picture the pitiful conditions of the Russian people. He told of pianos being burned for wood, of the bodies of scholars being wrapped in old sacks, of those once wealthy now forced to live on the carcasses of starved horses.

Texas Granite Finding Favor. In addition to the recently reported contract to furnish Texas granite for the Roosevelt Memorial, the Texas Pink Granite Company, in Burnett county, announces that it is to furnish the granite for the $15,000,000 Edison building in New York.

Certain Money in Peaches. The peach growers at Athens, Texas, have been offered 90 cents a bushel for their entire crop of Elberta peaches with the assurance that if the crop goes higher they will be paid more.

How About the Town Streets? The papers almost every day give reports about the conditions of Texas roads. These reports, though, are as to the country roads and do not tell of the streets of the towns into which the roads lead.

Checker Players to Meet. The Texas State Checker Players' Association announces that it will hold its thirteenth annual State meeting at the Dallas Y. M. C. A. July 14-15. Lucky fellows! The State Tobacco Chewers' Association has not yet announced where it will hold its next spitting contest.

Chapter XII

In town Dirk lived in a large front room and alcove on the third floor of a handsome old-fashioned three-story-and-basement house. He used the front room as a living room, the alcove as a bedroom. He and Selma had furnished it together, discarding all of the room's original belongings except the bed, a table, and one fat comfortable faded old armchair whose brocade surface hinted a past grandeur. When he had got his books ranged in open shelves along one wall, soft-shaded lamps on table and desk, the place looked more than livable; lived in. During the process of furnishing Selma got into the way of coming into town for a day or two to prowling the auction rooms and the second-hand stores. She had a genius for this sort of thing; hated the spick-and-span varnish and veneer of the new furniture to be got in the regular way.

She enjoyed these rare trips into town; made a holiday of them. Dirk would take her to the theater and she would sit entranced. Strangely enough, considering the lack of what the world calls romance and adventure in her life, she did not like the motion pictures. "All the difference in the world," she would say, "between the movies and the thrill I get out of a play at the theater. My, yes! Like fooling with paper dolls when you could be playing with a real live baby."

The day was marvelously mild for March in Chicago. Spring, usually so coy in this region, had flung herself at them head first. As the massive revolving door of Dirk's office building fanned him into the street he saw Paula in her long low sporting roadster at the curb. She was dressed in black. All feminine fashionable and middle-class Chicago was dressed in black. All feminine fashionable and middle-class America was dressed in black. Two years of war had robbed Paris of its husbands, brothers, sons. All Paris walked in black. America, untouched, gayly borrowed the smart habiliments of mourning and now Michigan boulevard and Fifth avenue walked demurely in the gloom of crepe and chiffon; black hats, black gloves, black slippers. Only black was "good" this year.

Paula smiled up at him, patted the leather seat beside her with one hand that was absurdly thick-fingered in its fur-lined glove.

"It's cold driving. Button up tight. Where'll we stop for your bag?"

He climbed into the seat beside her. Her manipulation of the wheel was witchcraft. The roadster slid in and out of traffic like a fluid thing, an enamel stream, silent as a swift current in a river. When his house was reached, "I'm coming up," she said. "I suppose you haven't any tea?"

"Gosh, no! What do you think I am! A young man in an English novel!"

"Now, don't be provincial and Chicagoish, Dirk." They climbed the three flights of stairs. She looked about. Her glance was not disapproving. "This isn't so bad. Who did it? She did! Very nice. But of course you ought to have your own smart little apartment, with a Jap to do you up. To do that for you, for example."

"Yes," grimly. He was packing his bag—not throwing clothes into it, but folding them deftly, neatly, as the son of a wise mother packs. "My salary'd just about keep him in white linen house-coats."

"I'm going to send you some things for your room, Dirk."

"For God's sake don't!"

"Why not?"

"Two kinds of women in the world I learned that at college. Those who send men things for their rooms and those that don't."

"You're very rude."

"You asked me. There! I'm all set." He snipped the lock of his bag. "I'm sorry I can't give you anything. I haven't a thing. Not even a glass of wine and a—what is it they say in books?—oh, yeh—a biscuit."

In the roadster again Paula maintained a fierce and steady speed for the remainder of the drive.

"We call the place Stormwood," Paula told him. "And nobody outside the dear family knows how fitting that is. Don't scowl. I'm not going to tell you my marital woes. And don't you say I asked for it. . . . How's the job?"

"Rotten."

"You don't like it? The work?"

"I like it well enough, only—well, you see we leave the university architectural course thinking we're all going to be Stanford Whites or Cass Gilberts, tossing off a Woolworth building and making ourselves famous overnight. I've spent all yesterday and today planning a drygoods box that's going up on the corner of Milwaukee avenue and Ashland, west."

"And ten years from now?"

"Ten years from now maybe they'll let me do the plans for the drygoods box all alone."

"Why don't you drop it?"

"He was startled. "Drop it! How do you mean?"

"Chuck it. Do something that will bring you quick results. This isn't an age of waiting. Suppose, twenty years from now, you do plan a grand Gothic office building to grace this new and glorified Michigan boulevard they're always shouting about! You'll be a middle-aged man living in a middle-class house in a middle-class suburb with a middle-class wife."

"Maybe," slightly nettled.

"They turned in at the gates of Stormwood. A final turn of the drive. An avenue of trees. A house, massive, pillared, porticoed. The door opened as they drew up at the entrance. A maid in cap and apron stood in the doorway. A man appeared at the door where, greeted Paula civilly and drove the car off. The glow of an open fire in the hall welcomed them. "He'll bring up your bag," said Paula. "How're the babies, Anna? Has Mr. Storm got here?"

"He telephoned, Mrs. Storm. He says he won't be out till late—maybe ten or after. Anyway, you're not to wait dinner."

Paula, from being the limp, expert, fearless driver of the high-powered roadster was now suddenly very much the mistress of the house, quietly obedient, giving an order with a lift of the eyebrow or a nod of the head. Would Dirk like to go to his room at once? Dinner at seven-thirty. He needn't dress. Just as he liked. Everything was very informal here. They roughed it. (Dirk had counted thirteen servants by noon next day and hadn't been near the kitchen.)

He decided to bathe and change into dinner clothes and was glad of this when he found Paula in black chiffon before the fire in the great beamed room she had called the library. Dirk thought she looked very beautiful in that diaphanous stuff, with the pearls. Her heart-shaped face, with its large eyes that slanted a little at the corners; her long slim throat; her dark hair piled high and away from her little ears. He decided not to mention it.

Dirk told himself that Paula had known her husband would not be home until ten and had deliberately planned a tete-a-tete meal. He would not, therefore, confess himself a little nettled when Paula said, "I've asked the Emerys in for dinner, and we'll have a game of bridge afterward. Phil Emery, you know, the Third. He used to have it on his visiting card, like royalty."

The Emerys were drygoods; had been drygoods for sixty years; were accounted Chicago aristocracy; preferred England; rode to hounds in pink coats along Chicago's prim and startled suburban prairies. They had a vast estate on the lake near Stormwood. They arrived a trifle late. Dirk had seen pictures of old Phillip Emery ("Phillip the First," he thought, with an inward grin) and decided, looking at the rather anemic third edition, that the stock was running a little thin. The dinner was delicious but surprisingly simple; little more than Selma would have given him, Dirk thought, had he come home to the farm this week-end. The talk was desultory and rather dull. And this chap had millions, Dirk said to himself. Millions. No scratching in an architect's office for this lad.

At bridge after dinner Phillip the Third proved to be sufficiently the son of his father to win from Dirk more money than he could conveniently afford to lose.

Theodore Storm came in at ten and stood watching them. When the guests had left the three sat before the fire. "Something to drink?" Storm asked Dirk. Dirk refused but Storm mixed a stiff highball for himself, and then another. The whiskey brought no flush to his large white impulsive face. He talked almost not at all. Dirk, naturally silent, was loquacious by comparison. But while there was nothing heavy, unital about Dirk's silence, his man's was oppressive, irritating. His paunch, his large white hands, his great white face gave the effect of bleached bloodless bulk. "I don't see how she stands him," Dirk thought. Husband and wife seemed to be on terms of polite friendliness. Storm excused himself and took himself off with a word about being tired, and sewing them in the morning.

After he had gone: "He likes you," said Paula.

"Important," said Dirk. "If true."

"But it is important. He can help you a lot."

"Help me how? I don't want—"

"But I do. I want you to be successful. I want you to be. You can be. You've got it written all over you. In the way you stand, and talk, and don't talk. In the way you look at people. In something in the way you carry yourself. It's what they call force, I suppose. Anyway, you've got it."

"Has your husband got it?"

"Theodore! No! That is—"

"There you are. I've got the force, but he's got the money."

"You can have both." She was leaning forward. Her eyes were bright, enormous. Her hands—those thin dark hot hands—were twisted in her lap. He looked at her quietly. Suddenly there were tears in her eyes. "Don't look at me that way, Dirk." She huddled back in her chair, limp. She looked a little haggard and older, somehow. "My marriage is a mess, of course. You can see that."

"You knew it would be, didn't you?"

"No. Yes. Oh, I don't know. Anyway, what's the difference, now? I'm not trying to be what they call an influence in your life. I'm just fond of you—you know that—and I want you to be great and successful. It's maternal, I suppose."

"I should think two babies would satisfy that urge."

"Oh, I can't get excited about two pink healthy lumps of babies. I love them and all that, but all they need is to have a bottle stuffed into their mouths at proper intervals and to be bathed, and dressed and aired and slept. It's a mechanical routine and about as exciting as a treadmill."

"Just what do you want me to do, Paula?"

She was eager again, vitally concerned in him. "It's all so ridiculous. All these men whose incomes are thirty—forty—sixty—a hundred thousand a year usually haven't any qualities, really, that the five-thousand-a-year man hasn't. Somebody has to get the fifty-thousand-dollar salaries—some advertising man, or bond salesman or—why, look at Phil Emery! He probably couldn't sell a yard of pink ribbon to a schoolgirl if he had to. Look at Theodore! He just sits and blinks and says nothing. But when the time comes he doubles up his fat white fat and mumbles, 'Ten million' or 'Fifteen million,' and that settles it."

Dirk laughed to hide his own little mounting sensation of excitement. "It isn't quite as simple as that, I imagine. There's more to it than meets the eye."

"There isn't! I tell you I know the whole crowd of them. I've been brought up with this moneyed pack all my life, haven't I? Pork packers and wheat grabbers and peddlers of gas and electric light and dry goods. Grandfather's the only one of the crowd that I respect. He has stayed the same. They can't fool him. He knows he just happened to go into wholesale beef and pork when whole-sale beef and pork was a new game in Chicago. Now look at him!"

"Still, you will admit there's something in knowing when," he argued.

Paula stood up. "If you don't know I'll tell you. Now is when. I've got Grandfather and Dad and Theodore to work with. You can go on being an architect if you want to. It's a fine enough profession. But unless you're a genius where'll it get you! Go in with them, and Dirk, in five years—"

"What!" They were both standing, facing each other, she tense, eager; he relaxed but stimulated.

"Try it and see what, will you? Will you, Dirk?"

"I don't know, Paula. I should say, my mother wouldn't think much of it."

"What does she know! Oh, I don't mean that she isn't a fine, wonderful person. She is. I love her. But success! She thinks success is another acre of asparagus or cabbage; or a new stove in the kitchen now that they've brought gas out as far as High Prairie."

He had a feeling that she possessed him; that her hot eager hands held him though they stood apart and eyed each other almost hostilely.

As he undressed that night he thought, "Now what's her game? What's she up to? Be careful, Dirk, old boy."

As he lay in the soft bed with the satin coverlet over him he thought, "Now what's her little game?"

He awoke at eight, enormously hungry. He wondered, uneasily, just how he was going to get his breakfast. She had said his breakfast would be brought him in his room. He stretched luxuriously, sprang up, turned on his bath water, bathed. When he emerged in dressing gown and slippers his breakfast tray had been brought him mysteriously and its contents lay appetizingly on a little portable table. There were flocks of small covered dishes and a charming individual coffee service. A little note from Paula: "Would you like to take walk at about half-past nine? Stroll down to the stables. I want to show you my new horse."

The distance from the house to the stables was actually quite a brisk little walk in itself. Paula, in riding clothes, was waiting for him.

She greeted him. "I've been out two hours. Had my ride. You ride, don't you?"

"I Used to Ride the Old Nags, Bareback, on the Farm."

"I used to ride the old nags, bareback, on the farm."

"You'll have to learn. Then I'll have some one to ride with me. Theodore never rides. He never takes any sort of exercise. Sits in that great fat car of his."

They went into the coach house, a great airy white-washed place with glittering harness and spurs and bridles like jewels in glass cases. It gave Dirk a little hopeless feeling. He had never before seen anything like it.

Paula laughed up at him, her dark face upturned to his.

Something had annoyed him, she saw. Would he wait while she changed to walking things? Or perhaps he'd rather drive in the roadster. They walked up to the house together. He wished that she would not consult his wishes so anxiously. It made him sulky, impatient.

She put a hand on his arm. "Dirk, are you annoyed at me for what I said last night?"

"No."

"What did you think when you went to your room last night? Tell me. What did you think?"

"I thought: 'She's bored with her husband and she's trying to vamp me. I'll have to be careful.'"

Paula laughed delightedly. "That's nice and frank. . . . What else?"

"I thought my coat didn't fit very well and I wished I could afford to have Peel make my next one."

"You can," said Paula.

Chapter XIII

As it turned out, Dirk was spared the necessity of worrying about the fit of his next dinner coat for the following year and a half. His coat, during that period, was a neat olive drab as was that of some millions of young men of his age, or thereabouts. Most of that time he spent at Fort Sheridan, first as an officer in training, then as an officer training others to be officers. He was excellent at this job. Influence put him there and kept him there even after he began to chafe at the restraint.

In the last six months of it (though he did not, of course, know that it was to be the last six months) Dirk tried desperately to get to France. He was suddenly sick of the neat job at home; of the dinners; of the smug routine; of the olive-drab motor car that whisked him wherever he wanted to go (he had a captaincy); of making them "snap into it"; of Paula; of his mother, even. Two months before the war's close he succeeded in getting over; but Paris was his headquarters.

Between Dirk and his mother the first rift had appeared.

"If I were a man," Selma said, "I'd make up my mind straight about this war and then I'd do one of two things. I'd go into it the way Jan Snip goes at forking the manure pile—a dirty job that's got to be cleaned up; or I'd refuse to do it altogether if I didn't believe in it as a job for me. I'd fight, or I'd be a conscientious objector. There's nothing in between for any one who isn't old or crippled, or sick."

Paula was aghast when she heard this. So was Julie whose wailings had been loud when Eugene had gone into the air service. He was in France now, thoroughly happy. "Do you mean," demanded Paula, "that you actually want Dirk to go over there and be wounded or killed?"

"No. If Dirk were killed my life would stop. I'd go on living, I suppose, but my life would have stopped."

They all were doing some share in the work to be done.

Selma had thought about her own place in this war welter. She had wanted to do canteen work in France but had decided against this as being selfish. "The thing for me to do," she said, "is to go on raising vegetables and hogs as fast as I can." She supplied countless households with free food while their men were gone. She herself worked like a man, taking the place of the able-bodied helper who had been employed on her farm.

Paula was lovely in her Red Cross uniform. She persuaded Dirk to go into the Liberty bond selling drive and he was unexpectedly effective in his quiet, serious way; most convincing and undeniably thrilling to look at in uniform. Paula's little air of possession had grown until now it enveloped him. She wasn't playing now; was deeply and terribly in love with him.

Cost of "Lifting" Oil

The bureau of mines says that from 20 to 50 per cent of the total cost of producing petroleum may be charged to lifting the oil. Although the lifting cost ranges from less than three cents a barrel at flowing wells, producing several hundred barrels a day, to $3 a barrel, at wells producing less than a fifth of a barrel a day, the lifting cost per well may range from more than $1,000 at large flowing wells of the type recently discovered in Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas and California, to less than $10 at many of the old wells pumped only a few hours a week, as in most of the oil fields of New York and Pennsylvania, where the average daily production per well per day is less than one-fourth of a barrel.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

THE TREASURE

Tommy's adventures now were over. Some time again he might have other adventures. But for the time being they were over.

He would go back and have stories of his adventures to relate to the others.

Perhaps they would have adventures to tell him.

Every one would compare notes and experiences. It would be such fun.

He would be able to tell his grandfather and the others about the Old Man and about his Cave.

The Old Man had been so nice to him. He had told him to go and help himself to the treasure. Well, that was a gorgeous thing to do!

Far back in the cave it became bigger and higher and Tommy found he could stand straight up on his feet. And there, on a ledge, was an old brown bag. He lifted it down and found it was filled with nuggets of gold, each nugget about the size of his small rubber ball.

So he had found the treasure. And the Old Man was letting him take it away to do with as he chose, save that one nugget of gold must be given away later on.

What fun it would be to give that one away. How nice to pick out the adventurer who would be worthy of it! He would simply have to be a real adventurer.

He went hurrying out of the cave but the Old Man was now nowhere to be seen. He passed by the pond and saw Georgie Green Frog still catching bugs between little naps. He went hurrying along and passed the Wind, and down toward his home he made his way.

He held the treasure on his stick, which he carried over his shoulder, and when it became heavy he moved it to the other shoulder.

But before he reached home there came a stinging and it seemed as really it must have been the wind stinging it.

This, at any rate, was the song he heard:

Tommy can have a bicycle,
Three cheers for Tommy!
Tommy can have a train of cars,
Three cheers for Tommy!
Tommy can have a sailboat, too,
Three cheers for Tommy!
Wasn't it nice of the Old Man to do, Let's about three cheers for the Old Man, too,
And three cheers for Tommy!

Tommy will find an adventurer,
Three cheers for Tommy!
That's when he's older, of course, you know,
Three cheers for Tommy!
Tommy has seen what a nice world it is,
Three cheers for Tommy!
He has friends now who fly and friends who crawl, and has seen the beauty At the heart of it all,
Three cheers for Tommy!

He Lifted It Down.

But before he reached home there came a stinging and it seemed as really it must have been the wind stinging it.

This, at any rate, was the song he heard:

Tommy can have a bicycle,
Three cheers for Tommy!
Tommy can have a train of cars,
Three cheers for Tommy!

Three cheers for Tommy!
Tommy has seen what a nice world it is,
Three cheers for Tommy!
He has friends now who fly and friends who crawl, and has seen the beauty At the heart of it all,
Three cheers for Tommy!

Oh, Tommy thought to himself, what fun it would be to give the gold nugget later on to another adventurer just as the Old Man had said. One gold nugget must be saved for that purpose. That added to the excitement of it all.

Truly he had been a fortunate adventurer!

He Held the Treasure.

Oh, Tommy thought to himself, what fun it would be to give the gold nugget later on to another adventurer just as the Old Man had said. One gold nugget must be saved for that purpose. That added to the excitement of it all.

Joe Wright Planning to Follow Father's Footsteps

Joe Wright, Jr., plans to follow in the footsteps of his father, Pennsylvania's famous rowing coach, many of whose greatest triumphs are recorded in the annals of the Argonaut Rowing club of Toronto.

The veteran oarsman will supervise the development of his son, with the ultimate object of lifting the Diamond Sculls in the Royal English Henley regatta, a feat which the elder Wright vainly tried to accomplish in 1888. Wright managed to win a heat, but was defeated in the final. He did, however, lift the Bedford cup, one of the English sculling classics.

Joe Wright, Jr., is nineteen years old, six feet three inches in height, and weighs 185 pounds.

Big League Clubs Seek to Sign Pitcher Torpe

Big league clubs are said to be after the services of Dominick Torpe, star hurler on the New York university team.

Torpe has been pitching stellar ball this season, having beaten some of the best college lines in the East.

Torpe has plenty of speed, a good curve and first-class control. He is also a fair hitter, and sure fielder.

Many experts along the Atlantic coast rank him on a par with Owen Carroll, sensational pitcher for Holy Cross. And that's saying quite a bit, for Carroll, without a doubt, is one of the greatest college pitchers of all time.

Borchert Tried to Split Boxing Purse

Otto Borchert, owner of the Milwaukee baseball club, is also a boxing promoter.

Recently he engaged two boxers for the main event, contracting to pay one of them $10,000 for 12 rounds of boxing. As things turned out this leather pusher took a knockout punch on the jaw in the sixth round.

When it came time to settle up after the fight the boxer was surprised to receive but $5,000 for his efforts.

"You promised me $10,000, and I've got it in writing," said the tin-ear.

"Yes, but you said you'd box 12 rounds and here you have only six—so you get only half of it."

Of course, that argument didn't hold, but it was a good one for Otto.

Lefty Shields, turned back to Richmond by the New York Yankees, is one of the sensations of the league.

The Tulsa club of the Western league, has purchased Pitcher Fred Hutton from Des Moines of the same league.

Jimmy Viox, veteran of many years' diamond toil has resigned as manager of the Rocky Mount team of the Virginia league.

Mandy Brooks, young outfielder obtained by the Cubs from Columbus of the American association, continues to be a sensation with the bat.

Tony Brotten, Louisville American association second-string catcher since 1922, has been sold to the Rochester International league club.

The Jersey City International baseball team announced the purchase of Pitcher Zlt Sloan from the New Orleans club of the Southern association.

Walter Novak, former Chicago sandlot star, who was suspended by Secretary Farrell some time ago for violation of the rules of organized baseball, has been reinstated.

Aldridge and Grantham, Pittsburgh players acquired from Chicago last spring for Maranville, are figuring prominently in the onward rush of the Pittsburgh team toward first place.

"That fellow Hughie Critz is quite a fielder around second base," remarked Duzzy Vance. "I believe he can cover just as much ground as Frankie Frisch. He certainly has helped to keep our hits down."

LATE FARM NEWS

(By S. C. Hoyle, Editor Extension Service Publications, A. and M. College of Texas.)

July Hog Thoughts.

Now is the time to make preparation for fall pasture for hogs. Pork will cost one-third to one-half less when the grain is supplemented with good pastures than when grain is fed without pastures. The present high price of feeds demand utmost care to insure a full value of feeds used. A. L. Ward, swine husbandman, extension service.

The reliable fall and winter and early spring crops are rye, abuzzi rye, oats, barley and rape. On the better lands wheat may be used, but rye will stand the cold weather better, and on the average, will carry more pigs per acre than wheat. Rye is easily the best crop for the poor soils, either the clay soil or the sandy soil. It is best adapted to lighter loams and sandy soil. Rye and oats either mixed or separate are best for medium soils. On the rich soils rape alone or mixed with rye and oats will furnish a maximum amount of grazing.

When small grain is to be used for grazing only it is usually more desirable to plant at least twice the amount per acre as if used for grain production. A closer sowing can be secured by using grain drill planting one-half the amount one direction then running the drill at right angle planting the remainder. The field of small grain used for winter grazing may be planted to Sudan grass or sorghum in early spring.

Barley as a substitute for corn is becoming more popular each year. In the best black land counties of Texas where the farmers have for years grown corn for hogs, we find them increasing their barley acreage and decreasing the corn acreage. When finely ground, barley is an excellent hog feed requiring a little less tankage or skim milk to secure a properly balanced ration. Consequently because of its use as a grain in addition to being a pasture crop, barley is an exceedingly important crop.

The important question to settle now is how many acres must be seeded to furnish grazing for the sows and pigs during the fall and winter. Due to wide differences in soils and the uncertainty of the weather, the question can not be answered directly, but the results obtained by A. and M. Experiment Stations and the experience of the best hog farmers justify us in making general statements that can be used as guiding principles.

On the average, one acre of rye, barley, or oats will take care of one 300 pound or 350 pound suckling sow during the fall and winter months, providing the pasture is supplemented with grain. An additional acre of rye, barley or oats should be seeded for each four fattening pigs, provided the pigs receive two pounds of grain per day for each 100 pounds of live weight. The grain for the pigs can be furnished by having a small feeding pen in the pasture arranged with a creep too narrow for the sow to enter; therefore, we should seed three acres of rye, oats or barley for each sow and litter of six to eight pigs in order to have sufficient grazing throughout the winter.

Abuzzi rye, while more susceptible to cold than the ordinary rye, will carry more pigs per acre; if not injured by cold two acres will furnish grazing for a sow and six to seven pigs during the winter.

Dwarf Essex rape seeded to a plot of good, rich soil, will furnish grazing for approximately twice the number of pigs as rye, barley or oats. Rape will do best if planted in drills using three to five pounds of seed per acre. The rape should be allowed a good growth (eight to ten inches) before turning in hogs. When the weather is cool and favorable, rape will be ready to graze in forty days to sixty days after seeding. If not stocked too heavily rape will furnish good grazing until killed by hot weather in the spring.

Oats seeded for grain can be grazed until March let without reduction in the yield. If seeded for pasture it is best to mix with rye to insure grazing after severe cold spells.

Farmers who have soil suited to growing of alfalfa should seed their land this fall for light grazing next spring and summer. The value of sweet clover as a feed and its importance to the soil should not be overlooked when planning the cropping system.

Remember it is better to have more than enough feed than to be short of feed and that land seeded to a grazing crop not only furnishes feed, but reduces to a minimum the erosion of the land.

After plowing the fields for fall pasture crops, plow up all the hog lots and sow them to a small grain. These lots will then furnish a cleaner home for the fall farrowed pigs and they will less likely become infected with worms.

Farm and Home Suggestions.

Power and labor account for approximately sixty per cent of the total cost of farming. As a result of the increased use of power and labor saving machinery in farming operations, the average farmer in the United States is now able to care for almost three times as many acres of crops as in individuals could handle seventy-five years ago.

Fly time is here and anything you can do to protect the dairy herd will mean money in your pocket. Cool, darkened barns help in this respect.

Old Chinese Relic Did Its Full Duty

One of the first official acts of Gen. Chang Tsung-chang on assuming his new post as military governor of Shantung was the ordering of prayers for rain in that parched province. As an inaugural to the supplications he ordered the firing of 120 guns on the Hungshan, a hill just outside Tsinanfu, the capital. After a week had elapsed with no sign of a shower General Chang sent emissaries to Hantshien, Chihli province, to borrow the famous Iron Tablet—the T'ieh Pei—which reposes in the temple there and is revered as an infallible protector of the crops in that district. The tablet, which is inscribed with ancient writings, was taken out of the temple and paraded with much ceremony last year when Chihli province was suffering from drought. Immediately thereafter came a spell of rain that flooded 10,000 square miles of farm land and cost several thousand lives. All of which redounded to the reputation of the relic.

The Ladies Auxiliary to the Presbyterian church met with Mrs. des Landes last Monday for Bible and missionary study. Very interesting also profitable lessons to all present. Hostess served cake and fruit salad.
