NEW DESIGNED FORD ON DISPLAY HERE THIS WEEK

W. J. Ferguson, local Ford dealer, has had on display the past week one of the new designed Ford touring cars. The body and chassis have been lowered, larger and more attractive fenders have been added, new and improved transmission and rear axle brakes have also been added. Longer lines with a redesigned cowl and a higher radiator are especially noticeable. The gasoline tank is under the cowl and the seats and steering wheel are lower and the car is roomier. Mr. Ferguson states that he expects a shipment of the improved cars in a few days and by the interest shown in this new type car the orders have been rolling in.

Bridge Luncheon

Mrs. T. M. Pyle proved herself a very entertaining hostess Wednesday afternoon when she entertained a number of friends at her ranch home near Longfellow. Upon arriving the guests were ushered into the spacious dining room where they were served a sumptuous luncheon. The afternoon was spent in playing bridge. At the close of several interesting games, scores were added. First prize, a fibre serving tray, was won by Mrs. John Stovell; second prize a bad case, went to Mrs. James; while the cut prize, a Madeira embroidered towel, was awarded to Mrs. Max Bogusch.

Mrs. Pyle's guests for the afternoon were: Mesdames F. B. Carter, John Stovell, Max Bogusch, B. P. Franklin, P. R. Burn, J. W. McKee, H. R. Lawrence, Joe Kerr, James Kerr, Ed Downie, Moleworth, and Miss Charlotte Mylesworth.

Tonight, at the Princess Theater "ABRAHAM LINCOLN," under the auspices of the Parent-Teachers' Association.

Notice to Motor Vehicle Owners

The county test stations established by the Commissioners' court for Terrell County to make tests and adjustments of headlights for motor vehicles are now equipped for such service and all owners of motor vehicles operating on the highways at night are requested to have their headlights adjusted and equipped as the Automobile Headlight Law requires by the 15th of October 1925.

After this date the law will be strictly enforced.

J. J. NANCE,
Sheriff, Terrell County.

NOTICE TO LADIES

I am now ready to do the Nestle Lenoil Permanent Waving. Appointments must be made in advance. Mrs. Janie Jobe, at the St. Francis Hotel.

Bridge Party.

A most delightful afternoon was spent last Wednesday at the home of Mrs. B. P. Franklin when she entertained several friends with bridge. Scattered through out the living room were beautiful bouquets of asters which were used as a means of decorations.

Mrs. J. C. McKinney was the holder of high score for the afternoon, a hand embroidered towel; Mrs. Ed Downie was holder of second high score, she was awarded a hand embroidered center piece. The cut prize went to Mrs. Max Bogusch, a pair of hemstitched pillow cases. The hostess served delicious ice cream and cake.

W. B. A. Members Enjoy a Delightful Evening

Last Saturday night a very enjoyable meeting was held by the W. B. A. of Maccabees, at the Masonic Hall. Following the meeting a program was enjoyed, as follows:

Piano duet, Lillie Mae Lea and Gertrude Litton.
Reading, Kathryn Harrell.
Piano solo, Linette Robey.
Piano solo, Lillie Mae Lea.

The refreshment committee consisting of Mesdames Stella Sherod, Theresa Dawson, and Nell Lea, and Miss Nelberta Lea served a Mexican supper to about thirty members. A most delightful evening was spent by those present.

"TEN COMMANDMENTS" COVERS TIME AND TERRITORY

The Red Sea and San Francisco are about 5,000 miles apart. The Israelites led by Moses on their exodus from Egypt are separated by about 40 centuries from Sunday after noon jazz dancing today. Yet, Cecil DeMille has managed to put them together convincingly in his picturization of "The Ten Commandments." This great Paramount picture is coming to the Princess Theater on October 25th and 29th where it will be shown for the first time at popular prices.

The modern story opens in a devoted mother driving one of her two sons from home because he will not "apologize to God," for what she believes a sacrilege. The son goes out into the world, not bitterly, but boyishly exultant, to smash every commandment. Then DeMille develops his theme that "if you try to break the Ten Commandments they'll break you."

A gorgeous Biblical episode, done in natural colors, is enacted by such popular players as Estelle Taylor, Theodore Roberts, James Neill, Charles de Roche, and Lawson Butt.

—Now is Fall suit and overcoat time. Remember that everyone notices your appearance more than you do, so dress the part. Elegant styles and fabrics at Empire Tailors.

GENERAL FARM NEWS

(By S. C. Hayle, Editor of Extension Service Publications, A. and M. College of Texas.)

With the Texas County Agents.

The variety test of cantaloupes in Webb County has resulted in two varieties of the spring planting being selected to carry over for fall demonstration so as to determine their suitability for the local fall market. The variety known as Honey Ball, which has been recently introduced, has been selected for the fall test work in comparison with other standard well known varieties. The spring crop of Honey Ball won a distinct victory in competition with other varieties, and should it stand the test in comparison with the fall crop, it will have proven to be a distinct acquisition. However, its character of growth and behavior in midsummer planting and the fall season of growth in Webb County can only be determined by a demonstration. The results will be watched with reference to growth of vines as well as size of fruit and quality.

The past three years of demonstration work in Webb County with varieties of tomatoes for both fall and spring season planting has resulted in the growers becoming gradually informed as to the possibilities of this crop for the fall season from a commercial standpoint. As a result of these demonstrations, Webb County has approximately 500 to 600 acres in fall tomatoes composed of about seventy five per cent of the Globe and twenty five per cent of the Improved Stone. Careful records are being kept of the results in order to make a comparison of these two varieties for fall planting. The prospects are very promising for a heavy fruitage, and a heavy movement of green wrapped tomatoes from Laredo this fall.

Orchard Yields in Cherokee County. A survey is being made of the orchard yields in Cherokee County. This study is being made to determine the effect of different cultural methods or production. For instance, one man shipped 1254 bushels of the best size in the territory from twelve acres of seven-year-old trees. This orchard was sprayed last winter and was cultivated all during the year. The owner makes this statement concerning the work: "The most profitable thing I did was cultivation and hoeing clean around the trees." Another man who winter sprayed and also who spring-sprayed and cultivated with a spring tooth scratcher shipped 854 bushels from what was originally 500 trees when the orchard was set out four years ago. Another gathered 152 bushels of very poor peaches from an orchard from 1200 trees where for the past four years they were permitted to go with the growers giving them no cultivation, nor spraying.

Drainage in Hemphill County. Lines were run on the Forshee farm in Hemphill County one day this month in order to establish the levels for a ditch to carry the drainage water from a large area along the fence line instead of across the field. A rather deep gully had begun to wash directly through the field, and it is the purpose of the proposed ditch to divert most of the water and by building small dams across the gully at intervals, it will not be long before the field is leveled again. It is Mr. Forshee's purpose to terrace the field later which will also prove a great help.

Storing Stock Water in Llano County. On the 11th of September the county agent went out to the A. F. Moss Ranch in Llano County and demonstrated the methods of using the leveling instruments in laying out tank sites to be used in storing large quantities of water to be used by the farm animals. A tank site 100 feet wide at the base and 300 feet long was laid out. It will be 30 feet high and 20 feet wide at the top. Ten teams were put to work by Mr. Moss, and work is progressing rapidly on the construction of the dam.

The Cotton Flea in Nueces County. The county agent in Nueces County reports that he has been able to check up final results on the experimental plots for the control of the cotton flea with sulphur. These show that the yield on sulphur plots was about one hundred pounds in excess on the acre over the results on the check plots. Where no sulphur was used it is planned to carry these and additional tests much further and in more detail next year.

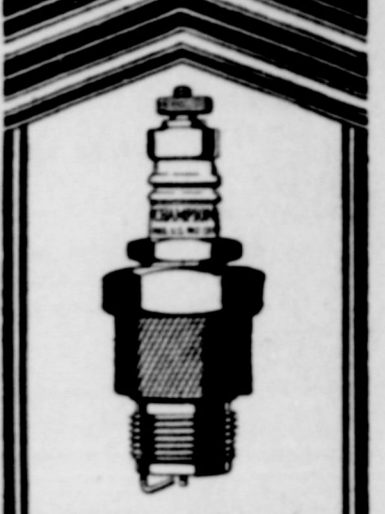

Leaf Worms in Refugio County. There has been a heavy infestation of leaf worms and a few boll weevil in Refugio County where the farmers used poison, both the weevil and leaf worm have been held in check. In the southeastern part of the county where a small crop was made the farmers are poisoning—hoping that they will have a top crop. However, in that portion of the county where good crops were made, the farmers are not poisoning so extensively.

HOME AGAIN

SYNOPSIS.—Lured by his four-year-old playmate, Jean Lane, Frank Hall, aged six, ventures on the forbidden wall of a dam, in a small Ontario town. He falls into the water and is saved from possible death by clinging to Jean's outstretched arms. Next day Jean informs him that because of their adventure of the day before he is in duty bound to marry her. He agrees when they are "krownups." With Jean's brother, John, also aged six, Frank begins school. Two years later they are joined by Jean and Frank's sister Marjorie. A little later Jean confides to Frank, in verse, her hope of some day becoming "Mrs. Hall." He accepts the "proposal." Frank is fourteen when his mother dies. The boys are eighteen when John's father is killed in an accident. Two years later Frank's father and John's mother are married. Disappointed with conditions, and ambitious, the two boys make plans to go to Manitoba and "homestead." They set out to go with them. They set out at Regina they meet "Jake," who agrees to find them satisfactory homesteads. He does so, and the two friends file claims on Sections Fourteen and Twenty-two. Jake sagely advises the adventurers in the purchase of supplies, and in a wagon drawn by a yoke of oxen, and with a cow, the four set out for their future homes. Construction of "shacks" and the making of a garden are their first occupations. A young Englishman, who is called "Spook" is a neighbor. They call on Spook, who is living in a tent. Spook, on his return visit, discloses himself as a man of varied social attainments. Frank's jealousy is aroused. Marjorie discovers that they have a new neighbor. "He" turns out to be a Mrs. Alton, a widowed Englishwoman, who, with her three-year-old son Gerald has taken up a claim. Frank and John leave the homesteads for a time to do harvest work for wages on a longer-established farm.

"Fish? Shoals of 'em. Say, in about four days I begin to get as much mull as a new millionaire. An' photographs! I wish I had some to show you, but she—Bella—burned 'em all up. They were what I call pictures o' real life. I got so much mail the postman says to me, 'What-a-doin', Jake; startin' a lottery?' an' I says 'Yep.' Guess I wasn't far out, at that.

"Well, just as I was thinkin' o' goin' to a business college an' birin' a few dozen stenographers, along comes this telegram." He produced a yellow sheet.

"Meet me at Regina station Thursday five p. m. you'll know me I'm the only one in the world. Bella Donna."

"Well, I reckons right off that Bella Donna is an alibi, or whatever you call a false name, an' that some o' the boys is pulling a gag on me, but like a fool down I goes to the station, an' there I saw her comin' right up the platform like a sandhill crane out of a marsh. I knew her, jus' like she said, so when she comes up I calls her hand."

"Madam," says I, "are you the lady o' the porous plaster?"

"I'll plaster you," says she, "if you give me any o' yer lip. But do you happen to know a Mr. Jake? Says she, gettin' out a paper; 'here's his address.'"

"Know him?" says I. "I should say so. An' in case you're thinkin' o' marryin' him let me tell you somethin', jus' between friends. Jake buries a wife once a year, reglar."

"He does, eh?" says she. "Well, I'm promisin' I'll be a rellie' before he's a widower," says she. "Rellie' is what she said, but it didn't sound right to me."

"That's bettin' on a cinch," says I, "meanin' that she would get the red ribbon for relies at Regina fair already, but my wit goes over her head, as it often does, an' she comes back at me with 'Wha'd' you know 'bout anybody marryin' Mr. Jake?'"

"Everythin'," says I, humpin' my wishbone with importance. "Jake tells me everythin'. I'm his spiritual adviser, so to speak, which includes matrimony. The women that wants to marry Jake gets o' 'em rich, too, madam," I says. "I'm steerin' him clear o' them every day; I says, 'partly out o' sympathy for them, on account o' his—his severe habits,' I says."

"Who are you, anyway?" says she, an' with that I flashes my telegram on her. "I'm the party of the first part," says I, as they say in the law offices.

"So you're Jake," she says, pullin' herself up till all her angles stood out like the haunches of a starved mustang. "Well, you got a h—l o' a nerve," she says.

"I begun to think maybe she was about right, but she gave me no time for reflections."

"Where's a preacher?" she says. "You wanted an' yer goin' to get it." With that she hustled me over town an' had me married before I knew it, so I'd have to settle for the supper, as I figured it out afterward. Then after supper we go to my shack an' she climbs into my business papers like a bound and garbage.

"Wha'd' you do for a livin', may I ask?" she says.

"Do?" says I, musterin' all my dignity. "I'm a specialist—a specialist in land. I know the sections with the weak lungs an' the broken knees an' the spavined joints, an' if a man pays me enough I put him wise, an' if he don't I let him get wise at his own expense," says I. "I'm a specialist, an' I charge like a specialist," I says.

"Humph!" says she, jus' like that. "Between your fine words I figger that you slick up a dollar now an' again by tolin' these tenderfoot sons o' busters out over the bald-headed." I dunno where she got it, but she had all the language necessary, an' more. "Let me see your bank book," she says.

"So I dug it up, an' it showed a balance in my favor of forty-three dollars an' twenty cents. Fortunate there was nothin' in it about the hundred dollars I owed at the livery stable for the board o' the flyin' ants, but I let sleepin' dogs lie, as the sayin' is."

"How old are you, Jake, dear?" she says, all of a sudden as smooth as oil.

"Forty-three," I says, perhaps because that was the figger in my mind at the moment, an' I was shavin' it a little, at that.

"Then you've made a dollar a year—so far," says she, droppin' back to her nat'ral voice that kind o' sounds like two millwheels an' you between 'em. "You'll die before you're sixty," she says; "I can see it in your eyes, although I wasn't lookin' at 'em, findin' that rather painful, an' leave an estate o' less than sixty dollars. Jake, that wouldn't buy me an outfit for the funeral, fer believe me I'm goin' to do you justice when the time comes. We're goin' to take a home-stead."

"Not me," I says. "The seat o' my democrat is as near as I want to get to a homestead. They're all right for sod-busters, but fer a woman o' culture."

"I thought that would get her, but she was as impervious to compliments as an ox to an oration, so to speak."

"Very well," says she. "If you won't take a homestead, I will."

"You can't," says I, with sudden boldness. "You ain't a widow."

"With that she gives me another o' those through-the-gizzard-and-nailed-to-the-wall looks o' hers. 'I will be, in about twenty seconds,' she says, 'if there's any more discussion,' she says. So here we are."

"Have you located?" I asked Jake, when he was silent for a minute, and seemed to have dropped off into meditation.

"Yep. It was easy fer me, knowin' as I do ev'ry willow between the Souris an' the Saskatchewan."

We expressed the hope that Bella Donna would prove a sticker.

"She will," Jake prophesied. "Of course, that ain't her real name; I jus' gave you that fer—fer instance, an' her first name's Bella, so it's half true, which is a pretty good average in this country. Wait 'til you see us, a-chariotin' behind the flyin' ants over to Fourteen an' Twenty-two. I'm figgerin' on organizin' a school district right away."

We gave Jake our blessing and watched him ride off in his wobbly democrat with its spring-seat up-titled to larboard and his fat figure settling down like a sack with a hat on it.

Sitting on the grassy knoll, digestin' our lunch by the aid of the straws which each of us was unconsciously chewing, we watched Jake until he was a speck in the distance.

"What do you make of it?" said I at last.

"I'm not sayin'," was Jack's cautious rejoinder. "Either he's married, or he isn't."

But we had occasion to be thankful we had fallen in with Jake, for he had been able to direct us to a farmer within a day's drive who hired both us and our oxen for the harvest, or until the beginning of threshing.

It was the middle of October, and there was a crisp tang in the air night and morning, before we again hit the trail for Fourteen and Twenty-two. During all this time we had no word from our homes, as there was no one to carry mail in or out, and it was with anxious and eager hearts that we hurried Buck and Bright along the homeward winding trail.

On the second day, as we were howling along at the two-and-a-half-mile-an-hour clip which Buck and Bright considered the limit of furious driving, Jack drew my attention to a speck on the horizon ahead of us. It grew rapidly, and although there was no mirage this time to bring our visitor down from heaven, we soon were able to discern the scarlet uniform of the mounted police. It came along at the smart trot to which the police horse is educated, and in half an hour Harold Brook drew up beside us.

self to say, partly because I felt my silence was beginning to shout, and partly because of a real anxiety about them.

"I believe so. I didn't see them, myself; came in by the south and landed first with your neighbor, Spook. Capital chap; I stayed overnight with him, and smoked up nearly all of his English tobacco. At breakfast I finished his last jar of marmalade, so if Spook is flying a flag of distress when you reach home you will know the cause of it. Imagine an Englishman without marmalade—breakfast without marmalade! My dear fellow, I'm English myself, and I—I assure you it isn't done."

"But the girls?" I persisted.

"Oh, yes. Spook has been keeping a neighborly eye on them. I meant to call on you, of course, but when Spook told me you were away I stayed with him. He assured me that every-one is fit at Fourteen and Twenty-two."

This was good news and a weight off our minds. Besides, it was evidence that in the twinges of my jealousy toward Brook I fell somewhat short of doing him justice. Brook was a decent fellow, and was playing the game.

"Just a suggestion," said the policeman, after a moment. "This is your first autumn on the prairies, and you can't be too careful about fire. These warm days and frosty nights are the most dangerous time of the year. I found Spook had no fire guards, so I showed him how to make them, and I took the liberty of blazin' that he go over to Fourteen and Twenty-two and see that the buildings are properly protected."

We thanked Brook, and he saluted and rode away, his red tunic slowly fading out of view in the cloud of dust which his horse kicked up from the bone-dry trail.

"Very decent chap, Brook," said Jack, after a while, and I said, "Yes."

It was with a strange pounding of the heart that we at last discerned the outlines of the shacks of our little settlement. Mrs. Alton's came first into view, then Spook's, then, together, the buildings on Fourteen and Twenty-two. A gust of homesickness swept up and took sudden possession of me, and I realized for the first time how much I had become attached to the little square on the thousand-mile fabric of the prairies which I had already learned to think of as home. Gaunt and bare they may be, but the prairies have a way of winding themselves about the heart with bands that are stronger than steel.

If we had been anxious, we were eager, too; eager with the news of our successful season's work; with anticipation of the bright faces which would greet the roll of crisp new bank bills that Jack carried in an inside vest pocket; eager to display the load of provisions and supplies which had been bought with part of our earnings.

We must have been fully a mile from the horses when we discerned the first evidences of life. A little figure darted out of the shack on Twenty-two to the edge of the gully; then for a few minutes sank from sight; then reappeared on our side of the stream and rushed into the shack on Fourteen. Almost instantly two figures appeared at the door; paused for a moment, then swooped like wild things down the trail toward us. And we stood up on the top of the wagon and waved our hats and yelled like mad, until even Spook down on section Two must have heard us. And old Buck and Bright, their phlegmatic souls at last awakened by that strange power that lies at the root of all creation and which is friendship and love and all the shadings of affection which lie between—or perhaps it was by the smell of the haystack at their own stables—joined in the spirit of the occasion and broke forth in a most surprising gallop, their hoofs click-clacking and their trace-chains lashing the whiffletrees as they ran.

Soon we came up, and there were the girls, wonderful, lithe, sunburned, radiant, hatless, golden hair streaming in the golden light at the end of day, arms extended, white teeth gleaming, measureless, ineffable. In the beauty and wonder of their young womanhood! We sprang from the wagon and—I don't know how it happened—Jean ran straight into my arms. Not Marjorie—I didn't see what became of her—I didn't stop to look;—Jean ran straight into my arms! I held her there, held her with the strength of ten weeks' harvesting in my muscles and of all my young hot boyhood in my veins; held her and kissed her and would not let her go.

For the first time since we had been little children together, playing by the dam where the water-wheel across the river tossed its dancing diamonds in the air, I held her and kissed her and would not let her go.

Across the fields of crisp and brittle grass we trudged together, disregarding the trail and the measureless swoon of that sunset world as we swept onward on the flood-tide of our happiness. Her firm little arm pressed tight against mine and our limbs swung together in the rhythm of our stride. And when I looked down in her face I saw a light that was not altogether the glint of the setting sun.

But in that most poetic moment of her life Jean forgot to be poetic. Once more she slipped her arm about me.

"Come, it's good to have you home again," she said.

And I what should have been my supreme hour I found myself wondering whether Jean's passion was love or just plain loneliness.

CHAPTER IX

That was a busy night on Fourteen. The girls confessed that they had been on the lookout for us since the first of the month. They had even borrowed Spook's field glass so that they could sweep the horizon to the eastward far beyond Mrs. Alton's.

"He's the strangest sort of chap, is Spook," said Jean. "Will you believe me, he hasn't been inside this house since you left? Used to walk over from time to time, and see that the pigs and the cows were living in harmony, and that the fuel had not given out, but was always in a rush home again. Never saw such a man for work; quite different from what he used to be."

Jack looked his sister over with an eye that did not reserve all its approval for Marjorie. "We thought you would have been an accomplished banjoist by now," he said.

"Not a lesson—not a single lesson in all this time," Jean grumbled. "And now I suppose he'll be over tomorrow to indulge us with the pent-up leisure of two months."

Jean's naivete was little greater than mine. We had been brought up with a silent training in the rudiments of behavior, but with little knowledge of its social complexities. My feeling in the matter was a mixed sense of surprise that our neighbor, usually so friendly, had held aloof at a time when he was particularly needed, and of annoyance that Jean should be so obviously put out about it.

The girls had a strange treat in reserve for us. It was Jean who told us of it, although, as it seemed to me, her manner suggested a certain lack of frankness very unlike Jean. It seemed that a few days before our return a Jack rabbit had hopped up within easy distance of the shanty door, where he perked himself on his hind legs, taking observations. Marjorie took the gun down from the wall, aimed it with great deliberation, and fired.

Jean declared that the rabbit was not hit, but that he died of fright. Be that as it may, he furnished the filling for a very deep and tempting rabbit pie.

"And only to think," said Jean, her bright eyes dancing, "it would scarcely have kept any longer. We were managing to freeze it a little at nights, but it would thaw out during the day."

"I don't know but it is a little over-kept as it is," Marjorie admitted, "but we're going to eat it tonight." And so we sat about our little table, with the great rabbit pie in the middle, and great helpings of white potatoes and onions on our plates, and flaky white bread and yellow homemade butter within reach, and the light beaming down from an oil lamp on the wall, and would not have changed places with anyone on earth.

The next day revealed changes in the neighborhood which we had not had time to notice or discuss in the evening. A number of settlers had come in. The girls had not seen any of them, but could give almost as accurate descriptions as though they had. It seems Spook had come over to Fourteen every Sunday afternoon during our absence, and, for all the shyness against which Jean had protested, he had managed to regale the girls with the gossip of the community, for our two little shacks were really becoming the center of a neighborhood. From Spook they learned that the Browns had landed from England with three children and hardly anything else, and had built a shack on the southwest quarter of Four. Mr. Brown had been a gamekeeper in England. His wife was a wistful little body who seemed likely to have plenty to wist over before her children were raised on the living that a gamekeeper would bring from the soil. On the northwest of Eighteen, just four miles west of us, a Scottish shipbuilder named Smith had located. He appeared to be unmarried. Three miles north of us, on Thirty-four, a Swede named Hansen had built a shanty twelve feet square, in which he was housed with his wife and six children, and on Thirty-six a Russian had dug himself a sort of cave in the bank of the gully. He, too, had a wife and numerous offspring, but the exact number had not yet been ascertained.

"Ay tank thar bane plenty," Ole Hansen had said, when discussing the subject with Spook. And as Ole regarded his own six hopefuls as "just a nice commence," the imagination was rather stirred by the possibilities of what the cave on Thirty-six might disclose to the census taker.

"How do you say his name?" Spook had inquired.

"Yah don't say it. Yah sneeze it," Ole explained.

"Sneezit—that'll do," said Spook. And so, quite without his knowledge or consent, our Russian neighbor was supplied with an English name; a name which may some day—who knows?—be borne with pride by one of our best families.

Then there was Burke, an American from Iowa, a man with a lust for labor and for doing things on a big scale. He and his wife had landed on section Twenty about the middle of August, and, ignoring the tradition that it is useless to break prairie sod in the fall, had already turned over a broad strip from end to end of their quarter section. Burke it was who introduced musies into the settlement.

From what the girls were able to gather from Spook musies called for an even more extended vocabulary than did oxen.

"And you want us to believe that Spook told you all these things without ever coming into the house?" I challenged.

"Never a foot over the doorstep," said Jean. "That is, hardly ever. It's a big country; why be so particular for a foot or two?"

"Oh, I'm not; not at all. I'm merely checking up what you said last night."

"In my intoxication over your return! How could you, Frank? And with that I had to be satisfied."

"But the best is yet!" Marjorie exclaimed. "Guess who's married?"

"Jake!" we answered together.

"Oh, somebody told. Yes, Jake. He and his wife are settled on Sixteen. They're a little shack up, and he calls it 'Acquaintances,' he says, 'are about all I'll be able to cultivate this year.' He spends most of his time at Spook's, but I don't notice that Spook's work goes along any quicker on that account. They called on us a couple of times—Jake and his wife, I mean; they have the advantage over the other settlers of having a light wagon and a team of ponies, which make it easy for them to get about. Mrs. Jake impresses one as being angular and competent, with perhaps more heart in her than her appearance would suggest. They say it was an agency match."

At that point we took up the story with Jake's account of his courtship and wedding, censored, of course, to suit the audience.

"That's mostly lies," said Marjorie, in her matter-of-fact way. "He advertised for her all right, but he went to Minneapolis to meet her, and it was only when he promised to go on a homestead that she consented to come. She told me that much; said she'd had enough of the town, and wanted to get away from everything and everybody. She has a touch of humor, too; said, 'I guess that's what I did, all right, when I came out on the bald-headed with Jake.'"

"But the telegram? He had her telegram."

"He must have faked that. He knew he would meet you boys before he went back, and he had a story made up to show himself in the best light possible."

"How about Mrs. Alton?" I asked.

"She doesn't come out. We've gone over a couple of times, and she receives us with great friendliness, but when we ask her to return our visit she always makes out that she can't leave the boys. Of course she could bring him with her, so that is only an excuse. For some reason she wants to stick close to her home-stead."

Frank doesn't seem to be getting along very fast in his wooing. Is he going to win or lose?

Tested Patrons' Hospitality
Stepping into a taxicab the other day, says the Paris Intransigent, a fare discovered a package of chocolate lying on the seat. Without hesitation he put it in his pocket, paid the chauffeur, adding a good pouboire, and was about to depart when the driver called out: "What about my chocolate?"

"Your chocolate?" queried the client, greatly taken aback. Then the chauffeur explained that he was testing the honesty of his fares, and of eleven whom he had carried that morning only two had informed him that a package of chocolate was lying on the seat. The two honest folk were a sergeant leaving for Morocco and a milliner's messenger girl. "Honest people are scarce," said the philosophic chauffeur.

Suspend Spectator for Coaching Boxer

Here is a funny one which shows how rigid the Massachusetts boxing commission can be when it wants to. Not long ago Nate Siegel was a spectator at a fight in which his stablemate, Pat Reed, was engaged. In the course of the battle Siegel yelled an instruction to Reed, which, being a spectator, it would seem he had a perfect right to do. Spectators are continually doing this. Yet Siegel drew an indefinite suspension.

ODD TRICKS PLAYED BY BASEBALL FATES

For Instance, There Is the Case of Earl Coombs of the Yankees.

The fates of baseball are fickle and strange. They have devious ways their wenders to perform. Take the cases of Wayland Dean of the Giants, right-handed pitcher, and Earl Coombs of the Yankees, outfielder.

In January, 1924, the Louisville club offered both Dean and Coombs to the Giants and Yankees. Miller Huggins was after new pitching talent and was eager to land Dean. He confessed that he wasn't greatly exercised over Coombs, who as a left-handed hitter did not appeal strongly to Miller's imagination. "We are overstocked with left-handed batters right now," said Huggins. "What we need is a right-handed clubber."

The Yankees thought they had Dean, but the Giants raised the ante and landed the pitcher. The Yankees had to make a counter move in an interesting game of financial rivalry, which then was rampant between the local clubs. Huggins took Coombs.

Here's where the fickle fates come in. Coombs is one of the outstanding players of the American league—the best-looking young player in the circuit. Dean bids fair to develop into a winner for John McGraw and justify the outlay of $50,000 made when he was purchased.

But the left-handed hitting outfielder who wasn't wanted so much by Huggins in January, 1924, already has paid big dividends on the $50,000 paid for him, and in 1923 should be one of the most interesting players in the majors.

One of Mack's Stars

The photograph shows Bishop, second baseman of the Philadelphia Athletics, considered the best second baseman since Connie Mack traded Eddie Collins to the Chicago White Sox.

Philadelphia Got Jack Quinn on Waiver Route

Recently the Boston Red Sox asked for waivers on the veteran spitball pitcher, Jack Quinn.

The two leading clubs, Washington and Philadelphia, refused to waive. Since the club with the lowest standing has the right to the player, he went to Philadelphia, as Washington was in the lead when waivers were asked. He went from a poor tallender to a near champion with pennant chances.

At the time waivers were requested on Quinn he had won more games than any other Boston pitcher, seven.

The collapse of the Red Sox, however, has convinced the owners and Manager Fuld that the club must be rebuilt with youngsters. For that reason, Quinn, despite his good showing, did not fit in with plans of the club.

Two Pitchers Give One Pass to Two Batters

Two batters received from two pitchers one base on balls in the eighth inning of a recent game in Washington between the Yanks and Senators.

It was thus wise: With one down and one on, Steve O'Neill was sent to pinch hit for Shocker. He drew two wide pitches from Ruetter, who upon Manager Harris derided Dutch and called in Marberry.

Manager Huggins countered by sending Schang to the plate to finish O'Neill's turn at bat. Schang drew two bad ones, which made four balls in all, and Wally walked.

Marberry, being the pitcher to finish this act of generosity, was charged with the issuance of the free pass, though he was really only 50 per cent responsible for it.

Comal River to Furnish Power.

Five dams are to be constructed along the Comal River from New Braunfels to a point five miles below Seguin and the water will be used for furnishing power to industrial plants. The time will come when all such streams in Texas will be used in manufacturing. In a few years more Texas as well become as noted for manufacturing as it now is for agriculture and stock raising, but that will be after Texas comes to appreciate its water and to conserve it.

Texas Technological College.

The Technological College at Lubbock has started with a splendid attendance of students, largely from that part of the State. In time it should become a great school, and if it is made a technological school in fact as well as in name, its influence upon the future of Texas will be immeasurably large. It has a splendid opportunity for leading in the movement to make Texas the greatest textile manufacturing State in the Union.

Paper Issues County History.

The Washington Leader has set a good example for other papers by issuing a history of Collingsworth county, a neat book of over 200 pages. Texas needs to know more of its history, and the Leader has set a good example that other newspapers should follow. The local paper is in better position than any other agency to gather and print local history. Should this be done in every county, much historical information would be brought to light. The writer thanks the Leader for a copy of this valuable county history and is glad to pass the idea along to other papers.

Texas Youth in School.

Reports from all over Texas are that there is everywhere an increased attendance in the schools. Most of the colleges and universities have an increase of from 10 to 20 per cent over last year's attendance.

This shows that both parents and children in Texas are awakened to the value of an education. Thousands of parents are making great sacrifices in order that their children may be equipped for better living and better service, and scores of organizations of many kinds are rendering assistance to students who might otherwise have to stay out of school. Say what you will about the frivolity of youth, we must confess that the young people of today are getting a better education than their parents have, and there is every indication that this generation will go far ahead of the last in attainments of every kind. Texas seems determined not to stay behind.

Better Roads in Texas.

From all sections of Texas the newspapers bring reports of increased interest in road building. A session of the State Highway Commission at Austin now draws nearly as many people as a legislative session. These are petitioners for State aid, highway contractors, and politicians who are thought to have some sort of a "pull." Immense sums are being invested in roads, and counties are figuring in terms of million dollar bonds that a few years ago would have been frightened at a $100,000 bond issue.

There is one danger, and only one, in all this good roads movement. Officials and people alike may become extravagant and wasteful. There are already rumors afloat that there is much waste and that Texas roads are costing too much money for the kind of roads that are being constructed. It is up to the people to see that they get full value for their investment in roads and up to the officials in charge of road building to protect the people.

Make Aviation Safe.

Colonel Mitchell, of the aviation service, stationed at San Antonio, has drawn to himself much commendation and criticism by his statements in regard to inefficiency in the aviation service. The people are largely in accord with him, and the officials in aviation say his charges are without foundation, and that Mitchell is just trying to get in the spotlight. Whether Colonel Mitchell is right or wrong in his charges, there is a feeling that there is much unnecessary loss of life in the aviation service, and it is hoped that his criticisms will result in improvement. Every parent who has had or has a son in the service is praying that Mitchell's complaints may secure immediate action looking to safer flying.

Music a Part of Education.

When the parents of today were in school, music was regarded somewhat as a needless acquirement for children. There was a kind of regard for music, for people have always loved melody, but to study it in school was regarded as a waste of time. Those who gave their lives to it were classed, along with poets, as somewhat queer and freakish—hardly responsible citizens. There were a few piano players everywhere, a few fiddlers, a few song leaders, but most people did not think it worth while to study music beyond a few lessons at "night singing school," and these were largely excuses for the boys and girls to get together in a common meeting place. Music has come into its own, and is a recognized study in the public schools. Children without love for music are the ones now class

Had Lost All Hope of Ever Being Well

Read story of the fight for health and final victory as told by Mrs. James A. Hall, Box 31, North City, Illinois.

"About twelve years ago my health failed. I could not eat anything without suffering. I had heartburn, sour stomach, palpitation of the heart, smothering spells, pains in my back and sides and a cough almost like consumption. Nothing helped me. I grew worse and was able to sit up only part of the time. I had lost all hope of ever being any better when someone gave me a Pe-ru-na book. The book described my case so truly that I began to take Pe-ru-na. After two and a half bottles I could eat without suffering and improved from then on. I took eight bottles and felt like a new person. That was fourteen years ago. So many diseases are due to catarrh that I think Pe-ru-na the greatest family medicine in the world."

For more than half a century Pe-ru-na has been doing just such work as this.

To Lead the American People to a Study of the Federal Constitution

By JOHN W. DAVIS, in New York Times.

THREE years ago the American Bar association created its committee on American citizenship, the duty of which is to lead the American people to a more thorough study of our federal Constitution and the theory of government underlying the same.

The need of this activity is seen when one asks his neighbor, "What is meant by a government of limited power?" or asks the minister, "What is meant by liberty regulated by law?" or asks his lawyer the reasons for the adoption of the first ten amendments to the Constitution, or asks any man in the street what is meant by our Bill of Rights. The answers made to these questions under such circumstances show that a very high proportion of American citizenship is woefully ignorant of the theory and the form of our government.

The Constitution lays down two great fundamental rules which apply to every citizen of the United States—the rule of equality and the rule of freedom. The rule of freedom is that every person born or naturalized in the United States shall have all the rights and privileges which every other citizen enjoys. There are no slaves. The rule of equality is: Wherever the citizen comes in contact with the law, and wherever the law touches the citizen, there shall be no distinction of race or creed or condition in life.

Every law-abiding citizen shall be free to live his own life, in his own way, in pursuit of his own interests and desires, so long as he respects the same rights in his fellows. All that he earns by honest means shall be his, and no man shall take it from him. Neither his life, his liberty nor his property shall be taken from him save by due process of law. If he disobeys the law and thereby loses any of these rights, no punishment can be imposed upon him until he has had a fair and open trial before a jury of his equals. Hence, equality and freedom are the birthrights which the Constitution gives to every native or naturalized American.

Make "Home" as Comfortable and Happy as Your Means Will Permit

By EDWARD W. STITT, New York City Public Schools.

Set proper standards for your children to follow. Be friends with your children, walk and play with them occasionally. We must not live above our children but with them. Do not scold too much. Encourage them to do their best. Let us remember what Phillips Brooks said: "Children are white, spotted black; not black, spotted white." See that they select proper friends and associates.

Make "home" as comfortable and happy as your means permit. Give your children at least a high school education. Train them in the habit of regular attendance at church and Sunday school. See that they avoid all games of chance. A gambler never can be a success in life. See that your children take plenty of physical training in the open air. It is better exercise to walk than to ride in a "limousine."

Let your children feel that any honor which they win in school, or any act of courage, or unselfishness they may perform, will bring great happiness to father and mother and put the family name on a higher plane of honor. Do not forget that the future of America depends upon how your boys and girls are trained today, not on how you were trained when you were children.

Should We Regard Our Earth as the Only Planet With Intelligent Life?

By DR. ROBERT G. AITKIN, Lick Observatory.

We have no hope at all of discovering evidence that intelligent life exists on any of the other planets in the solar system. Does that mean that we should regard our earth as the only planet sustaining intelligent life? I think not.

I think that would be the most egotistical and anthropocentric conclusion we could imagine. Our sun is only one of several thousand million suns in our universe; it is not conspicuous for its size, nor unique in its location (for it is many hundreds of light years from the center of the stellar system) nor distinguishable from thousands of other stars by the quality of its light. Moreover, all of these millions of suns are composed of elements identical with those known here on our earth.

Must there not among them be many having planets that are not only capable of sustaining life, but that have intelligent beings dwelling upon them? I think an affirmative answer is the only reasonable conclusion, even though we may never be able to establish it by direct observation.

Wilson's Policy of Neutrality Genuine; Efforts for Peace Sincere

By ROBERT LANSING, in Current History.

Even after Count von Bernstorff received his passports, President Wilson continued to hope that he could persuade the belligerents to negotiate peace, for four days after that momentous event he sent me a memorandum on "Bases of Peace" for my comment. In the face of the folly of the German government in renewing indiscriminate submarine warfare, Mr. Wilson still believed that he could preserve neutrality and become the mediator between the warring powers. His policy of neutrality was genuine and his efforts for peace were sincere. Several members of his cabinet, of which I was one, were not in sympathy with his attitude, but however strongly we felt that the President was wrong in his attitude, loyalty to him as the head of the government compelled us to support him. It was not, in fact, until the latter part of March that Mr. Wilson reluctantly abandoned hope of mediation and decided, with the unanimous approval of his cabinet, that the United States had no alternative but to join the Allies in crushing Prussian autocracy and bringing the war to an end by force of arms.

America Does Not Need the Incompetents From Italy's Population

By PROF. E. M. EAST, Institute of Politics.

No nation wants the dregs drained from the bottom of the vat. We know Italy's greatness, her Galileos, her Leonardos, her Michelangelos. Does she send us these, even in humble imitations? She does not. Our culture here would be immensely improved if we could import and make our own some of the creative geniuses comparable to those who built so grandly in the Renaissance. Have we the slightest chance of obtaining them? Again I say no. The Grade-A men of Lombardy and Tuscany are not squeezed out by economic pressure. Such people take care of themselves. Furthermore, these Northerners are men of brains, thoughtful and foresighted. They are not producing Italy's excess. The excess comes from below Rome, people of a different race, people where Grade-A men are negligible in quantity, where grades D and E predominate. We don't need these incompetents. We produce enough of that quality ourselves.

MOTHER!

Child's Harmless Laxative is "California Fig Syrup"

Even if cross, feverish, bilious, constipated or full of cold, children love the pleasant taste of "California Fig Syrup." A teaspoonful never fails to gently clean the liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach. Ask your druggist for genuine "California Fig Syrup" which has directions for babies and children of all ages printed on bottle. Mother! You must say "California" or you may get an imitation fig syrup.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

By MARY GRAYSON BONNER

FIRST SCHOOL DAY

It was Janet's first day in school. She got up very early that morning, for she was much excited at the thought.

After a time she supposed she would become quite used to school. Everyone seemed to become used to it after a little while certainly. But the first day was different. No more would she have lessons at home. She would study at home and she would be helped at home with her lessons. But her real school would be the big school where many girls went.

Some of the girls were very grown-up in the school, and others were as young as she was.

She had her school bag all packed the night before. There were copy books and blank books in which she would write, and there were the books out of which she would study.

When she was her pencil box, in which were three pencils—one red, one lavender, one yellow. But all of them had black lead. She had a pen, too, and a large red eraser.

She had also taken a little lunch in her bag which she was to eat at recess time.

When she got to school there were hardly any children there. They were so used to it that they knew just how much time it took to get there. But Janet did not want to be late the very first day of all, so she arrived only a few minutes after the door was opened.

She had been brought this far by her father. He had spoken to one of the other children.

"This is a new pupil," he said. "Her name is Janet. Will you show her where she puts her things?"

They had shown her the cloakroom, but after they had shown her they went off in a corner, and from the way they whispered and laughed Janet knew they were talking about her.

Whenever she looked at them they turned away, but when she did not seem to be looking they whispered and laughed again.

She stood leaning up against her coat, feeling very miserable. If only she did not have to go to school. And there would be no escape from it for years. If only her school days were ending instead of beginning!

It seemed a long time before any other children arrived. And when they did they paid no attention to her at all.

They did not seem to mind school. They laughed and made plans and acted just as naturally as possible. Still Janet stood over by her coat.

Sometimes they looked at her, but they did not speak to her. Quickly they went back to their own talk and plans.

Then a tall teacher came into the cloakroom and came straight over to Janet.

"You're the new pupil," she said. And when Janet nodded she led her into a classroom which was very large and which had many windows. In the windows were geranium plants and on the walls were pictures and drawings. There were a great many desks.

Lessons began after a short time, and all the talking, laughing children seemed now to be so clever.

Janet was not asked many questions. She felt very lonely.

Even her beautiful new pencil box did not seem to comfort her. But she was bound she would not cry.

During recess one little girl came over and took her hand and made friends with her.

Janet knew she should be grateful. But she wasn't. The little girl evidently felt superior to all of the others and it was plain to be seen she was not popular.

"The children here are very rough," she said, "but we'll be friends."

Janet liked the roughness of the others. They were "You're the New Pupil," She Said, and having just the sort of a time Janet would have liked.

Then one of them came forward and asked Janet if she would like to play Prisoner's Base.

"But we can't have you on our side if you don't play well," she was told, quite frankly.

Janet liked this little girl. She seemed sorry for her loneliness, and yet she, too, had been a little shy about making friends.

Janet went home with her Prisoner's Base friend, Dorothy. Her name was "I hated my first day here, too, but I love it now," was all she said in sympathy, but Janet felt she had made a real friend.

Why have RHEUMATISM?

OH, what a wonderful feeling to be free from that miserable rheumatism. To know again the joy of limber joints and active muscles—freedom from that agonizing pain!

How often have you longed for some relief as you suffered torture from swollen, inflamed muscles and joints—how often have you said you would give anything in the World for a few hours comfort!

But you didn't know that all you had to do to get real relief from this nerve wracking misery was just to build rich, red blood, did you? You didn't know that rheumatism had to be stopped from the inside by destroying the impurities that cause it—by building millions of red cells in your poor, weak blood, did you?

Until you fill your system full of healthy, rich, red blood you will never end your rheumatism. S. S. S. will surely help you. That's because S. S. S.

helps Nature build the red-blood-cells that fight off the impurities that cause rheumatism. Conquer rheumatism! S. S. S. has shown the way. For generations S. S. S. has brought blessed relief and comfort to thousands of rheumatic sufferers.

When the rich, red blood that S. S. S. helps Nature build goes coursing through your system, it purifies the blood in your body. Rheumatism vanishes—skin blemishes disappear—you begin to get hungry again and enjoy your food—strength and power fill your body—you are vigorous—red-blooded and ready for action. Know this joy of living again! Take S. S. S. and banish rheumatism! Get S. S. S. from any druggist. The larger bottle is more economical.
