FARLEY-LUDLOW

FEW FACTS ABOUT 'THE PHANTOM OF THE OPERA'

Lon Chaney, starring in the role of the "Phantom," spent 3 months experimenting with the unusual make-up he used. It required three hours every day for its application. By his contract, no photographs of it could be published before the release of the picture.

Five architects and four costume designers spent 4 months in research, in Paris, Bayreuth, Berlin and Vienna, gathering data for the production.

Three thousand people in brilliant costumes appear in the masked ball scenes on the grand staircase and foyer of the Paris Opera House. These and the opera scenes are taken entirely in color.

SANDERSON BOY GAINS PROMINENCE

Joe F. Jansa of this city was awarded a silver cup for winning the Heavyweight Championship in the boxing contests held at the C. M. T. Camp at Fort Sam Houston, Texas during the month of August 1925.

This award won as it was from a large number of competitors reflected great credit on Joe.

No young man should miss an opportunity to attend the Citizens Military Training Camps, for as President Coolidge says, "The young men graduating from the Citizens' Military Training Camps are helped to physical health, mental vigor, and moral excellence."

Kansas City Stock Yards, Jan. 11, 1926.—Though fat steer prices were lower stockers and feeders were in active demand and fully steady.

Fat steers opened 15 to 25 cents lower and held this decline throughout the session, except for some of the plain and ordinary classes and a few good steers that were suited to special orders. The bulk of the fat steers brought $8.25 to $9.75, a few at $10 to $10.25 and common and ordinary kinds at $7.25 to $8. Veal calves were fully steady, best selling at $11 to $11.50. Bulls were steady.

Sheep and Lambs.

Lambs were 15 to 25 cents lower and hardly enough fat sheep were offered to test values. The best lambs sold at $15 to $15.25, and fair to good lambs $14.60 to $15. Oddlots of ewes sold at $8 to $8.50.

Harold (Red) Grange, the 20-year-old football prodigy, and his Chicago Bear football squad passed through Sanderson Tuesday enroute to Los Angeles, California where they will play a series of games. More Texas Cotton Mills.

Unless all indications are wrong, Texas will build a number of cotton mills in 1926. A good start for 1926 was made on January 7, when a number of capitalists met at Center Point to study the feasibility of erecting a cotton mill there.

Has Sought the Fairest Possible Distribution of Grazing Privileges

By SECRETARY W. M. JARDINE, Annual Report.

DURING the last year the viewpoint has been expressed by representatives of the range live stock industry that the status of grazing as a permanent and desirable use of the national forests should be defined by legislation and not left, as at present, to the exclusive control of the Department of Agriculture through administrative regulations.

The department has sought the fairest possible distribution of grazing privileges in which the old user has been protected as far as consistent with affording reasonable opportunity for the settler and small rancher to establish his home and develop his means of livelihood.

As a result of this policy the number of range users has increased since 1909 by nearly 25 per cent and the national-forest ranges now contribute to the maintenance of approximately 4,500,000 acres of cultivated land and 22,000,000 acres of grazing land in private ownership.

The Entire Nation Is Awakening to a New Traffic Consciousness

By T. P. HENRY, President A. A. A.

The motor tourist is expected to understand and comply with regulations that prove a veritable puzzle even to the native driver. Until America reaches an accord on traffic regulation and decides on something that can be applied universally throughout the country, the visiting motorist should not be held strictly accountable for technical violations.

The situation is complicated further when the motor tourist finds regulations literally changing overnight. The A. A. A. concedes that experiment has its advantages, but to hold the motor tourist responsible for every little infringement of every new experimental regulation is manifestly unfair and out of line with American ideas as to how matters should be conducted.

The entire nation is awakening to a new traffic consciousness. Antiquated ideas in regulation are giving way to more systematic and logical methods. The ultimate and obvious aim is simplicity, but of necessity there is a certain amount of overregulation and complication.

Man Who Talks of Finish Fight Between River and Rail Is Shortsighted

By DWIGHT F. DAVIS, Secretary of War.

The man who talks of natural competition and a finish fight between river and rail is shortsighted. There's not the remotest danger that the river carrier will drive the rail carrier from the field.

Successful river traffic is dependent on railroads. Railroads are and will remain the backbone of inland transportation. Efficient waterway traffic cannot in most cases flourish without them.

Co-operation with, and not opposition to, our railways, must always be the backbone of our unified transportation system that is to give us as nearly an ideal transportation system as the mind of thinking man can conceive.

American Senate Was Designed to Be the Refuge of the Minority

By A. J. BEVERIDGE, Former Senator From Indiana.

The American senate was established to prevent hasty action. Its purpose was to check unworthy or questionable projects. It was designed to be the refuge of the minority. The senate of the United States was meant to be the deliberative body in the legislative department of our government—not merely a voting machine to register the fancies of a temporary majority, not merely a debating chamber, but a deliberative council.

The principal function of the senate is deliberation. It was to perform that function that the senate was created.

What would be the results of senate cloture by temporary majorities? The deliberative function of the senate would, of course, be destroyed. The reason for the existence of the senate would be annihilated.

Divorce of the Militia Bureau From the General Staff of the Army

By MAJ. GEN. G. C. RICKARDS, Chief of Militia Bureau.

I favor divorce of the militia bureau of the War department from general staff control through appointment of an assistant secretary to handle all National Guard affairs under appropriations separate from those for the regular army.

Progress of the National Guard has been hindered as a whole by the tendency of the War department general staff to take over certain administrative functions of the chief of the militia bureau.

I am convinced that sound business principles and best interests of national defense will be served when the chief of the militia bureau shall have his duties defined by regulations, if not by law, and be permitted to exercise them. My experience leads me to the conclusion that it (the National Guard) should have a separate appropriation. This would eliminate the feeling which now appears to be prevalent in the regular army to the effect that moneys used for the maintenance of the National Guard are being taken from funds necessary for the support of the regular army.

Game of Golf in 1925 Had Plenty of Thrills

Seidon has a year of professional golf produced the thrilling situations of the 1925 campaign. The only two champions to repeat were Walter Hagen and Leo Diegel.

Willie Macfarlane was the sensation of the year. Little regarded in the national open, he won the title, also the Shawnee open, another major event.

In the national open it was Bobby Jones, master of the amateurs, who tied with Macfarlane. It was necessary to play 36 holes before the tie was decided. It was all even again at the end of the first 18. This is the first time in the history of golf 36 extra holes were required to determine the winner.

At the end of the first 9 holes of the second 18, Jones enjoyed a four-stroke lead. It didn't seem as if any golfer could spot Jones four strokes in nine and beat him. That is just what Macfarlane did, his margin at the finish being a lone stroke.

Macdonald Smith was the only other professional to win two titles. He captured the western open and the Long Island open with the remarkable scores of 281.

1,700,000 See Big Ten and Valley Grid Games

Upward of 1,700,000 football fans witnessed conference and inter-sectional clashes of teams of the western conference.

In its conference and inter-sectional clashes, the Big Ten drew 1,362,000. Ohio State led in receipts with about $308,000 and Ohio also drew the largest attendance for a single game, the contest with Illinois, when 84,255 fans jammed the Columbus stadium to see "Red" Grange do his stuff.

In the Missouri valley conference the attendance was approximately 350,000 for conference and inter-sectional contests. Missouri, the title winner, had the largest total attendance, reporting 185,000, but Nebraska with an attendance of only 143,000 reported largest receipts, $122,500, while Missouri's receipts were about $120,000.

The record of nearly 1,750,000 fans attending middle west football games of the two principal conferences is the more remarkable because the weather was the worst in years for football crowds.

Sporting Squibs

Handball is a game of Irish origin. James J. Jeffries, former heavy-weight champion of the world, is fifty years old.

Athletics is now considered a major subject in virtually all universities in Germany.

The New Orleans Young Men's Hebrew association may build a $75,000 gymnasium.

You'll notice that nobody has ever yelled at Red Grange that he moves like an ice wagon.

Georges Carpentier, the popular French boxer, is returning to the United States for a bout with Berlenbach.

Husky football players at Harvard have a dinner diet of beef broth and graham crackers, with a half hour of rest.

Hughie Jennings left his job as a miner to enter baseball. Hughie just possibly looks back on this as his first strike.

Jack Dempsey and Harry Wills will be insured for $300,000 during their bout in Michigan City, Ind., next September.

Red Grange is like some executives: He doesn't get anywhere unless three or four unidentified helpers have prepared the way.

The largest number of touchdowns scored during the last intercollegiate football season (16) was made by Benkert of Rutgers.

Emerson Carey, Jr., of Hutchinson, Kan., right guard on the Cornell varsity football team, has been elected captain of the 1926 team.

Where is Red Grange's press agent that he hasn't presented a story about the Galloping Ghost having his legs insured for a million dollars?

Leonard Glasbrenner, outfielder of the Springfield Western association team, who was a holdout the past season, has asked for reinstatement.

No sooner is football out of the way at college than basketball takes its place on the program, or winter practice for baseball starts. A hard life.

Los Angeles is said to be angling for Pitcher Frank Shellenbach from Sacramento. Shellenbach lives in Los Angeles and desires to play ball in his home town.

"Stuffy" McInnis, veteran first baseman of the Pittsburgh Pirates, is rated the best golf player in the majors. He always plays in the 80's and very often is below that figure.

A college coach is alarmed by the idea that "Red" Grange's example may be followed by other college players. Which ones, may we ask, have had the same sort of offers?

University of California finds its 72,000 bowl seats insufficient for its annual game with Stanford and contemplates adding 8,000 to 10,000 seats along the east rim of the big stadium.

Otto Borchert, owner of the Milwaukee club, has announced that his Brewers will not return to Sanford, Fla., next spring for the conditioning period. Instead the American association team will go to Hot Springs, Ark.

New Orleans of the Southern league has signed Wilson E. Neeley, a right-handed pitcher, who hails from the Mississippi Agricultural college. He is nineteen years old and his home is in Anding, Miss. The Pelicans have also signed Lefty Nichols, a young Louisiana semi-pro hurler, for a trial.

LATE FARM NEWS

(By S. C. Hoyle, Editor of Extension Service Publications, A. and M. College of Texas.)

A Suggested Safe Farming Program for 1926.

This is the season of the year when all business enterprises must pass under the inspection of the inventory and balance sheets, advises Charles H. Alvord, director extension service, A. and M. College of Texas, in a "Suggested Safe Farming Program for 1926," which is being prepared for distribution.

It is suggested that the Texas farmers in planning their farm program for 1926 would do well to consider carefully some of the suggestions that have been made time to time and which are of enough importance to bear repetition at this season when we are going over our business, endeavoring to ascertain in what way we can make our efforts more successful. These are in part as follows:

(1) The growing of sufficient food products for the farm family is one of the vital problems on every farm. The home garden and fruit orchard should be carefully planned and taken care of. Plant an abundance of early spring vegetables, summer vegetables, fall vegetables and protect the crop from insect damage. Provide a water supply to supplement the rainfall when necessary.

(2) Every farm family should possess a flock of laying hens, and these should be well cared for and fed so as to give a continuous production of eggs for the family table, also a surplus should be sold to supplement the farm income.

(3) One or more dairy cows are essential for the production of milk and butter for family use. These should be well bred, well fed and properly cared for.

(4) Meat and lard for the year's supply should be provided by raising at least three hogs, which can be maintained in a large measure from products that otherwise would be wasted.

(5) A farm that does not produce feed and forage for the livestock is not properly organized.

(6) After providing for the needs of the farm family and livestock, attention may be given to such crops as may be produced at a profit with available labor and sold for cash.

(7) Land values, and labor costs have increased so much in recent years that the productiveness of the land must not only be maintained but it must be increased if the farmer expects to obtain adequate compensation for his labor and investment. Texas farmers have been inclined to cultivate too much land and a result, acre yields of staple crops have decreased.

(8) We should emphasize the fact that the selling price of any commodity is determined, in a large measure, by its grade and that the greatest measure of financial success will come to those farmers who give careful consideration to quality in their crops and livestock.

(9) Millions of dollars are lost annually to agriculture on account of crop damage resulting from insect infestation. Every farmer should familiarize himself with the insects that are likely to cause damage and be prepared to combat them.

(10) Modern methods of canning and preserving foods have developed to such a degree that every farm family can easily provide themselves with an abundance of canned fruit, vegetables and meat to keep the family table supplied during those times when the garden may not be producing and the smoke-house is empty. More extensive use of the steam pressure canner in the conservation of the food supply on the farms is recommended.

There is nothing new and untried in these suggestions and for more complete information regarding this farm program talk to your county agent or write the Extension Service, A. and M. College of Texas.

The A. and M. College appreciates the great work being accomplished by organization groups of farmers and other agencies both local and state wide, and also the constructive uplifting influence of the farm papers and state press, and we desire to join our forces with all other agencies in well directed endeavor for the development of commerce, industry and agriculture in our great state and the promotion of every effort that will result in the betterment of the social and economic conditions of all our people.

SYNOPSIS—PART ONE—At a merry party in the studio apartment of Carter Blake, New York, Jerry (Geraldine) Harmer, Prudence's daughter, meets Duane Allerton, wealthy idler. He admires her tremendously, and she likes him. But Allerton gets a bit exhilarated, with unfortunate results. Jerry, resenting his assumption of familiarity, leaves the party abruptly, the story turns to Jerry's childhood and youth at her home in Des Moines. Only child of a wealthy father, when she is twenty she feels the call of Art and asks her parents to let her go to New York for study. With some misgiving, they agree to her going. In New York Jerry makes her home with a Mrs. Delancy ("Mimi"), an actress, who, with Theresa, a painter, occupies the house. Jerry takes an immediate liking to Theresa, who is talented and eccentric and the two become fast friends. Jerry now devotes herself to Theresa, who returns her liking.

"Art Trainers! That is what I am, I suppose, an Art Trainer."
"Oh, no, Jerry, you're a student. If you want to amuse yourself studying Art—"
"It's nobody's business but my own," Jerry finished promptly, but when Rhoda hesitated again.
"Right!" Rhoda laughed, agreeing. Rhoda begged her to stay for dinner—promising to cook most delectable things on the grill, to take her out anywhere she liked, to go to the theater, generously profuse in her enticement. But Jerry would not be persuaded. She said she had to go home and fix something for Theresa, who was looking wretchedly ill, who had no proper regard for food, or rest, or exercise, and who certainly required a strong coercive hand to force her into reason. "Theresa's making heaps of money," Rhoda said surprisingly. "She's doing marvelously."
"Theresa?"
"Yes, why not?"
"But—then—why—for heaven's sake, then, why doesn't she get a decent room, and eat a decent meal once in a while? I thought—"
"Well, you thought wrong. It isn't the money with people like Theresa—like all of us. It's that burning up inside—we can't help it. Don't try to know what I'm talking about, old Angel-face; the more you think about it the less you'll understand!"

It was the next morning when Jerry slipped softly upstairs with a breakfast tray that Theresa asked her diffidently, almost apologetically, if she would care to see a few of her "things."

"Oh, I should love to," Jerry cried, flushing with pleasure.

Theresa was vaguely surprised, a little troubled, at her eagerness. "If you wanted to see them, why didn't you ask me?"

"Oh, I couldn't ask, Theresa. I thought perhaps you'd rather not show me—I was just hoping you would suggest it some time."

For the first time in the weeks she had known Theresa, she really took time to do a thing quietly, deliberately and with comfortable easiness. She spent the full morning with Jerry, showing her dozens of little sketches, unfinished bits of landscape, lovely heads, delicately draped figures without number, discussing them meanwhile with an impersonal, judicious interest that charmed and fascinated Jerry. She touched upon their beauties of composition and execution generously, but without personal warmth. And she pointed out their defects with a keen eye and an unsparring tongue. And then she said:

"I have saved my best till the last, Jerry. This is my one passion, my darling and my adored."

It was typical of Theresa that she did not keep it on display, "her darling and adored," but packed away with tender care in a dark closet, obviously the one thing in her life that received her tender care. Jerry almost held her breath as Theresa brought it out, removed the protecting wrappings, and turned it about for her to see.

It was a cruel green ocean, fashing great waves into white foam, an ocean of blackening shadows, and shifting lights. At first glance, Jerry saw only the turbulence of a multitude of waters, and then, looking deeper, standing out with sharp incisiveness, once she had discerned its presence, riding the highest, wildest wave of all, stretched the slim white body of a woman, triumphant white face upraised, dominant white arms flung wide—a joyous, jubilant, fearless figure of youth, swept on the black waters, sprayed with the white.

Jerry cried out, enraptured. "Theresa! Oh, Theresa! It is beautiful! It is the most—thrilling—thing I ever saw. It makes me feel so full of freedom."

Theresa nodded, her dark eyes alight with pleasure. "Oh, freedom, I've been working on it for years, Jerry. A thousand or more, I think, I used to spend the summer on the coast in Maine with my nurse—when I was a kid, you know, I adored the ocean. It is the only really free—really relentless—thing I ever saw. It knows no law but its own. Oh, yes, I know what scientists say about the moon, and the tides. No, no, what little moon riding the heavens could harness a fathomless ocean! I used to sit, like an ugly blackbird, on the highest rocks, and adore the ocean in a storm. A hundred times I went home drenched to the skin, soaked, and exalted with rapture, and put to bed in disgrace." She paused, smiling at Jerry.

"Go on, go on," she begged feverishly. "Tell me."
"First, I suppose it was just a personal emotion—I wanted to ride the waves. I chafed at my bondage to solid, sordid earth. I thrilled myself to a rapture by fancying myself swept high on the topmost wave. And so before long—my thought a mother to the thing, I suppose—it really seemed to me I saw her, the Ocean Rider, a lovely, slim, white woman triumphant on the waves. I worshiped it. It was a god to me. I have only been able to work on it when the passion is hot upon me, so it has been a very slow thing. A dozen times, in a storm, I have gone off to the islands to do another bit on my Ocean Rider. It isn't right yet. The ocean is good enough, but the Rider—I haven't quite got it." There was brooding discontent in Theresa's voice. "The light in her eyes—it's not right. I wonder, Jerry—"

Her voice took on a sudden wheedling-ness Jerry had never heard in it before. "I wonder—would you mind—would you let me use your eyes? I have wanted a hundred times to ask you but—"
"Oh, Theresa, I shouldn't mind at all—I should love it. Why didn't you ask me before? But she looks so lovely to me the way she is. I'm afraid you will spoil her."
Theresa shook her head. "Not right. It's her eyes. I've known it all the time—that is, I've felt there was something lacking. And when I saw you, I knew what it was. She must have the light in her eyes that you had when you came first to the city, as you were when I saw you first. I shall never forget it—that sort of radiant assurance. Look! Her eyes are too deep, they are too subtle for a free woman."

Jerry flushed. "Theresa, that is irony! Eyes like mine for a free woman! Why, I don't know what freedom is. I haven't the nerve to find out when I have a chance. I am bound hand and foot—to conventions—to convictions—to Prudence."

"Yes, that is what I mean. You don't find that blithe and buoyant confidence, that triumphant joyousness of surety, in freedom itself. Only in the pursuit of it. In eyes that have seen freedom—she waved a light hand toward her Ocean Rider—"like this, subtle, understanding, inscrutable—"

"Perhaps—perhaps you mean Theresa, Theresa, instead of freedom."
Theresa smiled at her gentle diffidence. "Yes, I get the distinction. But unfortunately, Jerry, one must try both before one knows which is which! There's the pity of it. And the eyes are faithful registers, they record it all. So my brave little Ocean Rider has got to have—not eyes that have known freedom, but which hold a vision of it—unrealized."

That same afternoon, Jerry posed for the eyes of the Ocean Rider, who must know not freedom, but cherish a dream of it.

"I think I missed my calling after all," she said. "I should be a model. The other night I was a corpse for Rhoda, and now I'm a mermaid for you."
And she sat, sweetly patient, in a bright light, starry-eyed with delight that she could be of service, while Theresa worked passionately on the eyes that were not just right. And when she had finished, and declared the result far exceeded her expectations, she kissed Jerry impulsively, for the first time, not on the lips but on the brilliant eyes which could see visions. Jerry herself saw no difference in the picture, felt that Theresa had overestimated the importance of an unessential trifle, but she was glad Theresa was pleased with her.

As she was tripping, almost happily, almost as in the days before the studio party of such sorry memories, down the stairs to her own room, she was stopped by Mimi, a radiant vision in a filmy gown of silk and silver lace, who held a cautioning finger across her lips to insure silence.

"Sh!" She whispered. "Go quick, and get dolled up. You have a caller—the best-looking thing you ever saw in your life!"

She turned expressive eyes toward the ceiling to convey the extent of her rapture.
"I took him in my room to give you a chance to fuss up a little, after messing about with Theresa. Shall I make some tea?"

Jerry's eyes were no longer starry, but cold as ice. "Who is it?"
"Sh, he'll hear you. Duane Allerton—the stunningest thing I've seen in years!"

CHAPTER V

Jerry Meets a Genius.

Jerry's slender hand upon the flimsy banister of the stairway grew suddenly tenuous so that the blue veins stood out clearly upon the delicate whiteness of her skin.

"Will you tell Mr. Allerton," she said gently but with firmness, "that I do not care to see him? I—"
"Sh, for heaven's sake!" begged Mimi. "He'll hear you. I'll tell him you're out. I'll give him a cup of tea, if you don't mind, to put him in a good humor and then—"

"But I'm not out, and I'm not busy, and I'm not engaged. I'm just not interested."

Jerry's enunciation was perfect, the hallway narrow, the transom open. She went into her room and closed the door. Theresa in a similar circumstance would have slammed it furiously, but Jerry was not given to furious slammings as a means of expression. She closed it softly.

Mimi, left alone, distracted and bewildered in her predicament, threw out both jeweled hands in a remonstrative, anxious gesture.
"Now, what can you do with a girl like that?" she wailed.

The answer came from the farther doorway, Mimi's doorway, where Duane Allerton stood and laughed, but ruefully.

"Not much, I'm afraid. Not especially keen about seeing me, is she?" With a visible effort, Mimi pulled herself together, dimpled, used the long lashes to the best possible effect.

"She's tired, poor thing," she said sympathetically. "You must excuse her. She works so hard, you know."
"Oh, she does! I understood that she did not work at all."
"I mean she—she's tired, anyhow. And nervous, she's frightfully nervous. Don't hold it against her. Can't I give you a cup of tea—"

"Oh, no, thanks. I feel I shouldn't pollute her atmosphere any longer than is absolutely necessary. Awfully good of you; thanks very much."

He went downstairs at once, and let himself out into the narrow street. And Mimi knocked on Jerry's door, opening it herself without waiting for an answer.

"Jerry," she began plaintively, "you have hurt his feelings just terribly, poor boy—and so good-looking. Now, that's positively not nice."
"Go and cheer him up if you like," said Jerry. "He's easily comforted."

"He wouldn't wait—I mean—you might at least have introduced me. The best-looking thing—"

Jerry learned afterward that he had gone to Rhoda for her address, and two days later he went to her again, to ask her to intercede for him, to remonstrate with her disagreeable protégée from the Middle West. He asked Rhoda if Jerry was a flirt.

"A flirt?" echoed Rhoda vaguely. "Good heavens, I don't know. What is a flirt? They used to say in college that she was, but they meant it nicely, every one was crazy about her. That's Iowa, you know. A girl who is quite wickedly awful in the Middle West seems like an angel from heaven when she's transplanted to Greenwich. Don't ask me anything about her. I don't know. She's a lovely thing, and I think a lot of her."

It did not remotely occur to Jerry that she was unhappy. Instead, she felt that she was quite joyous, carefree. She took a great deal of pleasure in doing things for Theresa, making her comfortable—Theresa, who cared as little for comfort as a honey bee for snow. She scoured the market for tempting delicacies, and became very proficient in preparing them nicely on her little grill. One day Theresa asked if she would mind rummaging through a couple of old boxes for her, in search of a particular bit of finsel, she particularly needed for a costume.

Jerry flushed with pleasure.
"Oh, will you let me? May I go through the drawers, and everything, and fold things up—I'll be very quiet."

Theresa laughed at her. "Go as far as you like," she said generously. "Funny thing about you, Jerry. You never bother me. Most people nag me to sixes and sevens over nothing at all. Mimi especially. I feel she is coming when she starts up the last flight of stairs, and I begin to see cross-eyed right away. You are the nicest kid."

After that, Jerry took entire charge of Theresa's room and Theresa's belongings, sorting out soiled bits of silk for the laundry, things Theresa had overlooked for months, and washing out especially fine pieces with her own hands.

"Oh, Theresa," she said one day, "I wish you were my sister."
"Oh, good heavens!"
"Yes, I do. I had a little brother, but he died. I cannot remember him. Oh, I do wish you were my sister! Then I should be satisfied just to live on this way and take care of you and do little things for you. I should feel I was very important. Indeed—you do pat such exquisite things, Theresa—I should be so proud of you. I'd probably take all the credit for everything you do, and brag about the way I brought you up."

Jerry laughed gleefully at this picture of herself, but Theresa did not join her merriment.
"Funny thing, Jerry, but you are the first person in the world—the first woman—who ever wanted me for anything—friend, foe, or fellow citizen. I think I must be quite getting on in the world, to have somebody craving me for—anything. I feel quite stuck up about it."

She put her brushes down abruptly and went out of the room without apology, and Jerry, with that new wisdom of hers which was only intuition and not the least understanding, went on with the papers she was filing and paid no attention when she went, nor when she came again.

Jerry went about a great deal, sometimes with Mimi. She was not fond of Mimi, but enjoyed her immensely. She was a constant source of gay delight, with her pretty vanities and boasted conquests, where Theresa was like a brooding pain to her. She laughed at Mimi, but in her heart she wept aloud over soul and body-worn Theresa.

Duane Allerton sent her flowers. Rhoda, in such a case, would have tossed them from her window in scorn. Theresa would have crushed them to crumpled petals between her bare hands, the thorns of them then pricking her skin to crimson. Jerry looked at them, gave them to Mimi. He wrote to her, Jerry read the notes, and tore them up. She never thought of returning them to him, unopened, although she knew from whom they came. That would have been too dramatic, too theatrical, for her. The waste basket served her purpose well enough.

One afternoon she saw him. She was dancing at tea at the Biltmore with Mimi and two young friends of hers, boys fresh from college. One was cubishly infatuated with Jerry, and she, in mischief, had set herself to tantalize him to the limit of her charm. In the midst of her pretty coquetry she looked up suddenly, and saw Duane Allerton at a table across from them, sitting with a woman, very lovely, very sophisticated, very young. "Frankly," Jerry thought at once.

Mimi would have redoubled her attentions to the young admirer, to what Allerton's interest, to stir his jealousy. Jerry could not do that, she did not even think of it. She yielded to the natural hush that swept over her at seeing him, and sat, a subdued and softened figure, with the others at the table. She knew his eyes remained steadily on her face. She knew he marvelled that she permitted the silly exaggeration of this ardent boy's devotion, and yet repulsed his own more finished advances. Jerry herself did not know why she did.

Jerry was not a flirt, but she is doing just the thing to attract Allerton—if he's in earnest, is he?

Shoes of Olden Time

In the early days of American history when necessity was oftentimes the mother of invention for comfort, the knitting needles played a part in the shoe styles of our ancestors. During the severe weather even governors had to walk about in deep snows and warm footwear was necessary. In the old South church at Boston there is on display a pair of shoes worn by Governor Phillips. They are heavily lined with sheep's wool and covered with dark-brown yarn in stockinette stitch. The soles are of leather. Probably every bit of the yarn was made by hand by the busy wife who had to find time to keep her lord and master warmly clad in days when the servant question was as difficult as it is today. If not more so, and labor not a question of pay, but scarcity of folk.

Anne de Rohan

Anne de Rohan, the daughter of Catherine de Parthenay, heiress to the house of Soissons, was born in 1562 and acquired, like her mother, a high reputation in the literary world. She would have been one of the greatest poetesses of her age, but her devoted piety turned her talent into another channel. She died, unmarried, in 1646. She was a Protestant and was celebrated for her courage as well as her learning.—Chicago Journal

The Nice Little Man

By CLARISSA MACKIE
(Copyright)

JORDAN had reached the place in his literary career where a new typewriter was not only a necessity but a possibility. His last novel, even then in the hands of the printer, had finished his old machine as far as respectable typewriting was concerned. Jordan loved his old machine. He and it had climbed together from days filled with hunger and want and ambition to success. By dining in restaurants where the food was cheap but bulky and by inserting endless soles in his shoes, turning his cuffs at all angles, Jordan had skimped into possession of this old typewriter.

And now he could write a check for a hundred and twenty dollars without making his bank account pass right out of existence. It was a most satisfactory state of affairs and Jordan was grateful in no small degree. He sincerely wished that all struggling artists were in a way of gaining like benefits. It was during his moments of gratitude that the idea came to him of giving away his old typewriter to some one who really needed it.

He would put a small advertisement in the personal column of the papers saying that he would give his typewriter to the struggling writer who wrote him the best nonsense rhyme. Having finished his serious novel, Jordan flopped over to a frivolous mood and plunged into this business of giving away his typewriter with enthusiasm. He, however, hoped that there would not be too many needy writers, for he wanted to give the ones who lost in the competition a good dinner.

Jordan received an assortment of nonsense rhymes, most of which were stupid. There was one that was nothing to take the world by storm but still seemed the best of the lot. It came from some one who signed merely: N. Lovelace. It read:

There once was a nice little man,
Who said, "I will do all I can,
So, here's a typewriter,
For some poor old blighter."
"I hope, I'm that poet," said Nan.

"Pretty rotten," thought Jordan, but posted the good news to N. Lovelace, and at the same time sent invitations to some score of competitors who had lost to come to his studio for dinner the following Saturday.

Jordan's housekeeper was in her element getting a dinner for her employer. "The more the merrier," was her motto. "Not one of your dainty repasts," advised Jordan, "but one that nourishes as well as pleases the palate." He was remembering his own lean days.

The party given to those struggling writers was a huge success and toward the middle of the evening Jordan began to realize that N. Lovelace, who had won his old typewriter, had been flung into his life by the great hand of fate.

She was rosy-cheeked, serene and abounding in healthy spirits. There was nothing to denote temperament nor poetry about her. She was just the very type of wholesome womanhood that Jordan had often pictured scurrying about the garden with a couple of husky children.

It was quite easily seen in which direction Jordan's thoughts were forming in regard to N. Lovelace.

When all the company of writers had left the dining room and were scattered comfortably about the great studio with cups of black coffee and cigarettes, N. Lovelace took the floor for a moment.

"I have a confession to make," she said, turning appealing eyes toward her host. "I am only here as a proxy for the one who really won the typewriter. Norman Lovelace, who wrote the limerick is very shy and asked me to come in his stead. He is most deserving and I want to thank you for him. He will some day be a great writer and the luck he has had will help him so much. I hope you do not mind my having come instead!"

The confession being off her mind, Nancy Lovelace seemed to turn herself loose in the way of entertaining Jordan's guests. She sang songs at the piano, played for them to dance and otherwise made a tremendous success of her host's party.

And as her spirits rose, so did Jordan's descend. He might have known she would have been snatched up by this male person who had won his typewriter. It was just Jordan's luck. The commonest courtesy, however, demanded that he ask to take her home in a taxi at the end of the evening. There was no other way in which she could manage the typewriter.

"Oh, but my brother can send for it tomorrow," she explained. "You have already been far, far too good to us."

So she was not married! Lovelace was her brother! No doubt a very fine chap. She was not a temperamental writer and, well, Jordan dashed off to call up a taxi.

MODISH LINGERIE FOR SERVICE; SCALLOPS RIVAL THE FLARE

NOW in the after-holiday lull is the time to take inventory of one's lingerie supply. Whether one does it through the buying or home-sewing method new combinations, step-ins and costume slips must be acquired. If one would keep up with fashion's pace. In underthings as well as frocks and outer wraps styles change. This season more than ever there is a notable difference in many of the undergarments. This is greatly due to the introduction of fullness about the hemline which takes the place of the heretofore slim silhouette. To meet this new condition the designer of pretty undergarments must, through subtle adjustment, make necessary concessions. For instance, the latest idea is to introduce godets of lace into the skirt portions of combination costume slip and gown. Youthful slips not only emphasize skirt brevity but they also substitute a fitted bandeau top for the low-waisted effects which once prevailed. In models for more developed figures the slender line is retained, wide flouncing or lace forming the flare. As to trimming there is a decided trend toward using net and footings.

Showing the Scallop and the Flare.

Even the hem about the ankle shows a dainty finish of ruffled footings, often matching the net insertion which joins the seams. Net or valenciennes insertion would be equally effective for a combination such as the picture shows. A whimsical touch to colored voile undergarments is the edging of black footings. Peach, maize, rose, blue or orchid filmy step-ins or combinations can be made of sheer silk or voile with black footings finishings at little expense, and this home sewing is a most delightful pastime when midseason snows have not yet melted and in-louers seem so enticing and "comfy." Very charming also in the lingerie collection are combinations of go-gette decorated with ribbon applique. Paris says, "Let scallops reign supreme in costume designing," and they do, judging from the multitudinous number of gowns and wraps and two-piece dresses which are greatly beset by scallops this season. It is a question whether scallops or flares are receiving most attention from noted couturiers at present. According to late models emanating from various renowned French ateliers, the honors are divided. The illustration presents a very attractive exponent of the scalloped frock, also the newest interpretation of the flare. Arranging scallops in tiers is an outcome of the trend of the vogue for scallops and then more scallops. This lovely model is of flat crepe in a fashionable old rose shade. It bears out the fact that all soft and unusual colorings will be called into play for spring and summer frocks. The decorative scallop has made its appearance on the two-piece frock, in interesting ways. That is, the blonde carries a scalloped hemline matched to that of the skirt. Sometimes only

ABOUT PARROTS

"I had a cousin once," said Mrs. Parrot, "and the people with whom she lived were so fond of her that they never spoke to her without saying: 'Dolly, want a cracker?'"

"In fact, all the friends of these people used to ask her the same question. 'She was a most superior bird—my cousin—and I'm a most superior bird, for I belong to the same family.' 'Nonsense,' screamed Miss Green Parrot. 'You are too absurd!'"

"And why, pray tell?" asked Mrs. Parrot, who was very handsome and who always wore a beautiful feathered costume of gray. "Because that is what people always say to parrots. They think parrots are forever wanting crackers. 'To be sure we do like crackers, but we like other goodies too. 'We like nice seeds and berries and bits of cake. It wasn't because they thought so much of your cousin that they always wanted to offer her a cracker. 'No, it was because they wanted to hear her say the same thing. 'Well, she could,' screamed Mrs. Parrot. 'She could talk most beautifully. 'So can we talk,' said Miss Parrot. 'Many of us can, and especially if we're bright to begin with. 'They say that they can tell if we're bright enough by looking at our eyes. 'If our eyes notice everything, then we are intelligent. If our eyes look dull and we don't see many things and

"Why, Pray Tell?" Asked Mrs. Parrot. don't seem to notice what is going on around us and don't seem interested—we're dull—just like people. 'You can tell from people's eyes if they're bright or not. 'Some people have dull-looking eyes and don't seem to notice much of anything. 'It is the same way with parrots. Bright eyes, bright people. 'Bright eyes, bright parrots. 'Easy to tell. 'At any rate,' continued Mrs. Parrot, "my cousin was bright, even if you will say that she wasn't so especially petted when asked all the time if she wanted a cracker. 'But from what you say almost all parrots are very intelligent. For almost all of us have bright eyes—at least almost all of us learn to talk easily. Heigh-ho, heigh-ho!" Mrs. Parrot danced high with glee upon the bar of her cage. 'Listen!" shrieked another parrot, called Master White Parrot. 'The rain!" they all exclaimed. The rain was pattering on the glass roof of the bird house in the zoo. 'Quick, quick! don't let's miss a second of it!" they said. They all flew up to the topmost branches and bars in their cages and sat with their wings outspread ready to let the rain come down and give them a nice shower bath. Of course the rain couldn't come through the glass roof! But the parrots were always hoping it would, for when they are free they go to the tops of the trees and spread out their wings for the rain, and drink of their fresh rain water. 'Fooled again," said Mrs. Parrot, when the rain had stopped and their feathers were still dry. 'But it shows how we remember our free days, and the parrots who have always lived in the zoo show their true parrot natures by never forgetting to try to let the rain fall on them. And as they all left the tops of their cages they were saying to themselves: 'Fooled, fooled again! 'A regular April Fool's day for us. And it's not even April Fool's day!"

A Child's Laxative Which Mothers Can Rely On
To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept "stirred up" and half sick for taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.
While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he constantly advised mothers to give only a harmless laxative which would help to establish natural bowel "regularity."
In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin mothers have a regulating laxative which they can depend upon whenever a child is constipated, bilious, feverish or sick from a cold, indigestion or sour stomach. All children love its pleasant taste.
Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine and just see for yourself how perfectly it cleanses and regulates the bowels of infants and children.
