RAIN BENEFICIAL

Rains the past week have benefited ranges and yards greatly. Many yards in town are full of blooming flowers and trees. All stockmen are enthusiastic over the rains, as they see a return of prosperity from the improved rain condition. Thursday night and Friday turned several degrees colder, as yet there has been no frosts to kill flowers, vegetables or fruit trees. To date we have heard of no loss of stock in the hail storm we had Wednesday. Rain this month has been above the average.

RATTLE OF THE RAIL.

S. S. Daggert, J. Robey, H. C. Hall, and C. L. Sims attended the fuel meeting held in San Antonio Wednesday.

H. W. Sherod, F. L. Cochrane and R. A. Huest have returned from a fishing trip in Old Mexico. The supply train made a trip over the division the early part of the week.

Fireman W. A. McGhee has returned to El Paso.

The many friends of firemen Ray and Leon Gillespie will be sorry to learn of the death of their father which occurred in El Paso the first of the week.

Fireman (Hard Luck) Reining er has taken a switch engine job in El Paso.

Ed Mansfield of Del Rio spent the week-end in the city with his uncle, W. H. Mansfield, and other relatives.

"KICKED OUT OF COLLEGE" is the name of the play the Senior Class will show this year. Watch for date of showing in this paper.

—FOR SALE—A 3-piece bedroom set, including a brass bed, springs and mattress, 2-door wardrobe with glass doors and a dresser. For particulars call Mrs. C. L. Sims.

Backache Wearing You Out?

Every day find you miserable with backache? Suffer sharp, stabbing pains? Feel lame and stiff-always tired, nervous and dispirited? Then look to your kidneys. Your kidneys are the blood filters. Perhaps they have failed to properly rid the blood of body poisons. Naturally, then, you suffer the injurious effects of this slow poisoning. Don't risk neglect! If your kidneys need help, use Doan's Pills. No other kidney diuretic is so well recommended nor so successful. Ask your neighbor!

A Texas Case

Mrs. E. J. Sadler, 401 E. So. Line St., Cuero, Tex., says: "I had a constant dull ache in my back. When I bent over, sharp, cutting pains caught me across my kidneys. I had head-aches and my kidneys acted too frequently. I was nervous, but after using Doan's Pills, the trouble left and I felt like a different woman."

Texas in Blossom Again.

The rebudbs of East and Central Texas are fairly a glow with their brilliant blossoms, struggling for appreciation under unfavorable conditions among the more sombre forest trees and shrubs. The train was passing through a woods ablaze with their riotous colors and I was tempted to speak of their beauty to a traveler who sat across the aisle from me. He glanced out the window for a half minute, agreed without any enthusiasm that they were pretty and immediately turned the conversation to politics, paying no more attention to the beauties of the country through which we were passing. He was an everyday traveler; I am only occasionally away from home. He saw the brilliant trees daily and accepted them as the ordinary things of life. I could not appropriate enough of their loveliness to myself. Perhaps if I lived among them and did not cultivate a fondness for them, the rebudbs trees would mean no more to me than they meant to my fellow traveler.

Bluebonnets Vying With Redbuds. In West Texas the bluebonnets appear to be more gorgeous and to cover a larger area than ever before. It seems that they are trying to compensate, in their beauty, for their enforced absence of last year by doing double duty now. They have all the attractiveness of the rebudbs of the East, and make up for their lowly position so close to earth by hiding the entire ground on which they grow. They have no advantages over the rebudbs, and the rebudbs are no prettier than the bluebonnets. They both typify nature at her best and are in no sense rivals. If Texans had a full appreciation of the rebudbs it could be made more famous than the peach blossoms of the orient, and to could the mountain laurel and the crepe myrtle and other blooming trees and shrubs. The bluebonnet could be made far-famed. Instead we prefer to remain absorbed in the more sordid things like politics. We should be interested in politics, but should not let life slip by without really seeing the beauties that are all about us.

Dividing Texas Into Many Parts. One can seldom pick up a sectional Texas paper, whether it be in East, West, North, South or Central Texas, without reading some slur at some other part of the state. Often these statements are merely in jest with no harm intended, but they create little antagonisms, and mislead the un-informed. There are people living in Texas who believe that dire poverty prevails in all other parts of the state except around the business. I have just read a Fannin County paper's editorial that speaks sympathetically of the Texans who are not fortunate enough to live on the black, waxy soil of that county but have to exist on sandy soil. I have just heard a sandy soil citizen tell how his neighbor has made more than $1,000 a year on an acre of land. There should be no more rivalry between the different sections of Texas than there is between the rebudbs and the bluebonnets.

All Texas Needs More People. Go into any part of the state and you will soon find that its greatest need is more people. Too much of the country is idle and being wasted. Capital, whether in money or in lands, that is not used is valueless so long as it is idle. Too much of Texas is not used and can't be until there are more people to use it. The combined strength of all Texas is needed to bring people to the state. An unselfish organization of the state's persuasive resources should be formed to acquaint the public with all that all Texas has to offer. Kentucky's motto, "United We Stand, Divided We Fall," is more applicable to Texas than any other state in the union. If we haven't the energy to unite for the common good by all means we should have enough common sense to quit knocking. A knock at any part of a thing is a blow to the whole.

Pardons and Paroles. I have been asked frequently of late, "What is the difference between a parole and a conditional pardon in Texas?" The difference is largely in the name. Under a conditional pardon, a convict is at liberty so long as he observes the conditions and does not violate the law. Under a parole he is at liberty so long as he does not violate the law and some friend pays him a fixed sum, say $15.00 a month, and assumes responsibility for his good conduct. Presumably the convict works for the man who paroles him and is paid for the work. Actually he does about as he pleases with the consent of the person to who he is paroled. Therefore we practice the difference between a conditional pardon and a parole is about the difference between "tweddledoo and tweddledum."

Fall Fairs in Texas. Almost every Texas county is busy now arranging for a county fair next fall and in many of them county fairs will be held. This is about the best evidence of general prosperity in the state that could be offered. People who are very poor do not hold fairs, and if they did they could not make creditable exhibits. Fairs are county and community builders. They stimulate friendly rivalry in doing things better. They give the home people and strangers visible demonstrations as to what can be done.

Art Nehf's Arm

Arthur Nehf, the smart, keen pitcher for the Giants, had a bad arm last year and McGraw lost. Will his arm come around this season? Much depends upon that arm that has made a lot of pennant history in his day.

Sport Notes

An amateur is any contestant who can't play well enough to collect.

University of California baseball nine is booked to play Lafayette college at Easton, Pa., June 3.

Luis Firpo, the Argentine heavy-weight fighter, was a drug clerk before he entered professional pugilism.

George F. Baker, aged eighty-five, who gave Columbia university its athletic field, keeps himself fit by playing golf.

Infielder Floyd C. Herman has been released by the Brooklyn Dodgers to the Minneapolis club of the American association.

Robert W. Veach, former Detroit, Boston and Washington outfielder, has accepted terms to play with Columbus this year.

The Little Rock Southern association club has purchased Third Base man Armstrong from the Milwaukee American association club.

Five boxing titles changed hands in the United States in 1925—the light heavyweight, lightweight, junior lightweight, bantamweight and flyweight.

As we understand it, Jack Dempsey and Harry Wills will engage in deadly combat next summer if a sufficient number of iron men insist upon it.

Paul Fehey, southpaw pitcher and first baseman, who has been playing semi-pro ball in Ohio, has been signed by the Fairmont club of the Middle Atlantic league.

Mike Kelley is a game guy and a glutton for punishment, the Minneapolis manager having undertaken to manage five left-handed pitchers at one and the same time.

Professor Ross of the University of Wisconsin says there are 1,000 students at the university who are waiting their time. Of course he doesn't include the football stars.

Rogers Hornsby, manager of the St. Louis Cardinals, is now a member of the board of directors of the club. Hornsby now owns most of the stock previously held by Branch Rickey.

Everett D. Barnes, first baseman, has been sold outright to the Buffalo International league club by the Pittsburgh Pirates. Barnes, former Colgate university player, was with Chattanooga of the Southern league last season.

Horseshoe Pitcher

Frank Jackson (above) of Kellerton, Iowa, regained the horseshoe pitching championship of the world at St. Petersburg, Fla., when he defeated Putt Mossman, nineteen, of Eldora, Iowa, title holder for the last two years, in two out of three games.

Wise Beal, eighteen-year-old Charlotte high school player, has been signed by the Charlotte club of the South Atlantic league, for a tryout. He is a pitcher.

Tony Faeth, veteran right-handed pitcher, who was with Des Moines last season until his arm failed him, has signed with Columbus of the American association.

Babe Ruth, the batting wonder, uses a bat that weighs 42 ounces, while Rogers Hornsby, termed the most natural hitter the game has ever known, uses a 26 ounce bat.

Columbus of the American association, has obtained Pitcher Elbert Johnson from the Pittsburgh Pirates. He was with Albany of the Eastern league last season on option.

Max Carey, outfielder of the world champion Pittsburgh team, is about the only real choke-bitter left in the major leagues. Now the demand is for bats with small handles and large ends, to permit of greater leverage.

Charley Hartnett, of the Cubs, was the only National league catcher to take part in 100 games or over last season. Hartnett was in 110. Then followed Snyder, Giants; Taylor, Brooklyn, and Smith, Pittsburgh, with 99 apiece.

FARM ITEMS

(By S. C. Hoyie, Editor of Extension Service Publications, A. and M. College of Texas.)

Emergency Pruning.

During the last days of December, 1925, and the first days of January, 1926, the lower Valley was visited by an extreme spell of cold weather and ice. The damage to citrus trees from actual freezing was slight, but the breakage resulting from the heavy load of ice that formed on the trees was severe. Many big limbs were broken off and some trees lost almost all the tops. This presented an emergency problem in pruning, which required immediate attention. Some growers were lost when it came to taking care of this kind of damage.

To assist those who were in trouble of this kind the county agent in Hidalgo County planned and held a series of nine meetings to demonstrate the proper method to take care of this difficulty. These were demonstration field meetings. Mr. A. P. Swallow, horticulturist of the Extension Service was present and conducted these demonstrations. These meetings were held in nine different communities and were well attended. At these demonstrations Mr. Swallow gave "Why" of doing this work as well as the "How". The three subjects which received attention were: "How to properly cut a limb off," "How to treat scars left by broken limbs pulling out from the trunk of the tree," and "How to go about growing out new top to fill the space left by the limbs broken out."

Marketing Vegetables. Marketing of vegetables is one of the big problems of the Valley. Many attempts have been made to solve this problem, but thus far the old condition still exists.

Lack of knowledge of the problem is perhaps the most outstanding reason for failure to meet the situation. To correct this trouble the Experiment Station of Texas has undertaken to make a complete survey and study of our marketing problem and give us the information we need to attack this problem intelligently.

Preliminary to making this survey, Messrs. L. L. Gabbard and G. L. Crawford of the Experiment Station, came to Hidalgo County on the 23rd and 24th of February to get acquainted with some of our people and to get their plans formulated to make this survey. While here they met some of our farmers and business men and got somewhat acquainted with what they would have to do.

It seems entirely safe to predict that this piece of work when completed will be one of the most far reaching undertakings of any that we have had anything to do with in the Valley. If it accomplishes what we believe it will in the solution of the marketing problem, it will mean millions to the people of this section.

Cowpeas Cover Crops. Mr. R. H. Orne of Promont, said that he planted two and one-half acres of onions from a seed bed of four rows where he had turned under cowpeas, and that he planted only seven and one-half acres from twenty-three similar rows adjoining. The cowpeas had produced the onion plants ready to be set out ten days earlier than the other land.

Four men have been lined up to plant cowpeas this spring. One man is planting them in his orange grove for the first time. Three of these men are growing them for seed to be used in fall planting. It is expected that hundreds of acres will be planted to cowpeas after the spring crops are off.

Orchardist Gives Demonstration. There was a pruning and spraying demonstration arranged in one of the demonstration orchards, and the county agent was ill in bed and was not able to attend the demonstration. The owner of the orchard conducted the meeting and demonstrated the method of pruning and spraying. This orchard had been pruned and sprayed the year before by the county agent. There were fifteen men at the meeting and seven of them have pruned and sprayed their orchards as a result of the demonstration meeting.

Cowpeas for Dimmit County. Prospects are good for the largest acreage of cowpeas ever planted in Dimmit County. The County Agricultural Advisory Committee set two hundred farms with ten acres or more each as a goal, and the county agent states that from the present interest that is being shown the goal will be reached before the end. He is making a list of those that are going to order seed and by clubbing, the order hopes to get wholesale prices.

Braham variety of cowpeas are considered the best for the county. This information is derived from demonstrations running over several years. A bushel of this variety will plant twice as much as other varieties. It is resistant to disease, makes a very heavy spongy vine with heavy foliage. Peas are scarce this year.

Terracing in Wilson County. During the month of February, terraces were laid out on seventeen farms protecting one thousand acres from erosion. We laid out lines for John Traeger, completing his entire fields. He now has about seven miles of terraces on 300 acres. At the time of erecting, parts of his fields were absolutely worthless and during the past three years have been reclaimed to fair production. He builds all his terraces thirty feet wide and at least two feet high, usually three and then runs his rows diagonally over them.

POOR OLD WALTER JOHNSON IS DONE?

Records Show That He Still Is Great Player.

Those vigilant and disinterested souls who stand around waiting to sound the first alarm for volunteer ballplayers were pleased to see the beginning of the end of Walter Johnson when the Pirates beat him in the final game of the 1925 world series. Walter, they chorused with pardonable glee, was through, all-over-and-done-with passé.

The writer presumes that one ball game proves this fact. He, however, would prefer to judge the merits of the case on one season, the last.

The official records, show the thirty-eight-year-old master to have turned out a very natty performance for the season of 1925. In fact, only two other pitchers, Rommel of the Athletics and Lyons of the White Sox, topped him in games won in spite of the fact that he was incapacitated for more than a month.

Had Johnson retained his health over the entire campaign, it is altogether conceivable that he would have won at least twenty-five games, thereby driving his critics to cover. As it was, he won twenty, with Rommel and Lyons leading him by a single victory.

Only seven games were lost by the Senatorial wonder, and in percentage of victories only Stanley Coveleskie, another elderly gent, had the edge on him.

Then there was the matter of earned runs, a department that gives the real low down on a pitcher's ability. Here Walter was third, Coveleskie and Herb Pennock of the Yankees being the only American league pitchers to better his figures.

Next? Well, the old hit for an average of .433, which is generally regarded as a fairly adequate performance in any league. It wasn't any build-up, either. Johnson was used in many games as a pinch hitter and proved to be Washington's most dependable right-hand batter among the relief forces.

Fielding? Don't make us laugh. Our stays are a trifle tight. He went through the entire season without an error.

Poor old Walter Johnson!

Takes Long Swing

J. Herman Lynn, winner of the Algonquin golf trophy, takes a long swing. He is a pupil of Bobby Jones, and he played on the famous Tech golf team.

Goose Goslin Short One Home Run in Settlement

Denman Thompson, the Washington scribe, tells this one on the well-known slugging Goose, who recently gave Clarke Griffith an attack of the D. T.'s by asking for a raise of $5,000. Goslin was once known as a modest youth, but judging from his recent letters to Mr. Griffith, big league environment has made him about as diffident as a pickpocket. Be that as it may, here is friend Thompson's little tale:

In Washington a well-known tailor offered a suit of clothes for every home run made by the Washington players. He's a friend of Goslin, by the way.

Before the season opened Goslin dropped around to his place of business and had four suits of clothes made. Even his tailor friend didn't understand the method in Goslin's madness when he said, "Charge 'em."

Goose, of course, expected to clean up his account with home run drives. Later in the season Goslin was asked how he and his tailor friend were making it.

"I'm sorry, but I've disappointed him a trifle," said the Goose. "At this time I still owe him one home run."

Fielding Yost Stresses Fair Play in Athletics

Intercollegiate athletics for sportsmanship and fair play rather than for scores was asked by Fielding H. Yost, director of athletics at the University of Michigan, before the Interfraternity association of Chicago.

Winning the game is only a part of a college athletic contest, the veteran Big Ten coach said. The other test is to determine which institution has instilled the better sportsmanship and loyalty into its team, student body and alumni.

Addressing his audience as alumni of the universities and colleges of the country and the Middle West particularly, Yost reminded them that a successful program of intercollegiate athletics is largely in the hands of the alumni, to whom athletics makes the most universal appeal. Such a program aims at the development of intercollegiate sportsmanship.

MOTHER OF SEVEN CHILDREN

Helped in Caring for them by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Glasgow, Ky.—"I am the mother of seven children, the eldest being only 12 years, and I feel that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped to pull me through the roughest pieces of my married life. At one time I was so down-hearted that life was a misery. A friend in Indianapolis, Indiana, told me of the Vegetable Compound, and after taking a few bottles of it I became myself again and it was a pleasure to do my housework and gardening. Since then I always use your medicine when I feel weak from overwork and it straightens me out."

—Mrs. MELISSA BARDESS, Route 2, care of O. P. Steenbergen, Glasgow, Ky.

New Orleans, La.—"I could not do a thing after my first boy was born. I was so weak, I had no appetite, lost weight and was not able to do my work. I was this way for seven weeks, then I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and got wonderful results from it."—Mrs. C. PATRICK, 4614 Dauphin St., New Orleans, La.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been growing in popularity among women for over fifty years.

Jerrold carefully assisted Prudence and Jerry into the car and sat in the corner beside them, holding Jerry's hand.

Jerrold would have considered it an affection to have a chauffeur drive him about town, "table-bodied and in my right mind for the most part," as he always said, but on rare and state occasions like the present he had one of the boys from the factory take them out while he sat with the others in the tonneau of the limousine, rigidly erect and alert and always prepared for the worst.

Jerry laughed at him. "Settle down, father, settle down," she urged, snuggling her fingers closer into his hand. "We'll die together, en famille, that's one comfort."

Jerry's fingers were like ice. But there was nothing of drooping sadness in her pose; rather with a strained alertness she remained stiffly upright, her eyes brilliant, her slender chin tilted to an unwonted high degree.

They knew everyone at the clubhouse, and as they made their way to the table reserved for them in a far corner they were obliged to stop by many chairs for a laughing word with one and another. They saw Duane on the moment of their entrance. He was at a table with Irvin Weatherby and his wife and Edith, the eldest of his three daughters. Happily, that table was not directly on the aisle they passed through. They lifted their hands to Jerry as she went by, nodding, laughing, and Jerry swept them all in a quick, bright greeting, forming the words, "I'll see you later," with her lips as she passed.

Duane was amazed at the studied perfection of her manner, the absolutely impersonal friendliness of her glance.

"Let me get someone to sit with us," Jerrold suggested, as they reached their table. "I'm afraid we may seem dull. We should have made up a party."

Jerry put a pleading hand on his arm. "No, father, please. I'd so much rather be—just by ourselves."

"I don't want him to think you—well, I don't want anyone to think—anything."

Jerrold floundered for words. In his partisanship of Jerry, he would have no stranger, not Duane Allerton nor any other, have a chance to suspect her of any loneliness or subject to any slight.

Jerry smiled gratefully for his concern as she slipped prettily into her chair. She shook her head.

"You certainly are a sweet old thing, father. But I am not trying to impress him. I don't care to make him jealous. I don't want to try any childish bluffing. I just feel like having you and mother. So why bother?"

For at least the thousandth time in his life Jerrold told himself proudly that Jerry was a little brick. She looked about the great room with her usual air of friendly interest, nodded to her friends here and there, chatted a little with those near her, and discussed the gowns, complexions and coiffures of the other women with her mother. She even made a brave pretense of eating her dinner as it was placed before her. But when once in a while her fingers touched her father's hand, the icy chill of them cut him like a flash.

At first, in his loyalty to her, he would not even look across to the Weatherby table after that first greeting as they entered the room. But finally, when he realized that Jerry had herself perfectly in hand and needed no anxiety of his, he turned that way. Duane's eyes, smoldering, somber, were fixed upon her lovely profile, the cloudy blackness of her dark hair, the creamy whiteness of her throat and the shoulder half turned from him.

Jerrold could not withhold a friendly, sympathetic smile, and Duane responded with a grateful, unsmiling nod.

"Any fool could see what's in his mind," Jerrold thought. "The whole town will be buzzing with it now."

When they went into the ballroom the orchestra was playing. They found a pleasant place for Prudence to sit, and Jerry danced with her father. Then she danced with young Doctor Morse, and then with Newton Macklin, each time returning to her place beside her mother. It was after the third dance, when Duane had performed his duty as guest to his hostess and to Edith and had sat out a stupid dance with old Mr. Weatherby, that he excused himself with stumbling words, and with stubborn determination, with trepidation in his heart, he turned his steps toward Jerry.

They saw him coming. Jerrold's pleasant smile froze upon his features, and he toyed nervously with the narrow chain at his watch. Prudence held her breath. Only Jerry kept up her light, bright chatter, although her fingers shook. Duane continued doggedly toward her, his eyes upon the cloudy blackness of her hair.

Jerrold sprang quickly as he drew near, holding out his hand. His voice was very friendly.

"Oh, hello, Duane. How do you like the Middle West at its very wickedest?"

"Oh very much, sir, thank you." Duane clung to his hand like a man drowning, but Jerrold passed him on, perforce, to Prudence.

"You've met my wife, I know—" "Oh, yes, Mrs. Harmer. But it seems a very long time. It is very good to see you again."

Prudence lifted her hand, lifted both hands, greeted him with a warm, almost foolish effusiveness, but she could not postpone the inevitable. He looked beyond her to Jerry.

"—good evening," he said lamely, and his eyes were riveted to the haughty lift of her chin.

Jerry smiled. Mindful of the eyes of the friendly, always interested woman, she lifted a slender, ice-cold hand and dropped it for a moment in his. She caught her breath at the sudden contact. If he retained it, if he drew it warmly into his, caressed it, as he had done in the studio that forgotten and unforgettable night, she knew she could not withstand the tenderness of his touch. Duane held it barely a second longer than is allowed by a strict convention, and released it slowly.

"—will you sit down?" she offered generously, in gratitude for his relinquishment.

The way he dropped into a chair beside her gave somehow the impression of a ship tossed in a stormy sea, suddenly and surprisingly finding that its anchor held.

"Oh, mother, look!" said Jerry brightly. "There's Judge Harris and his new little wife from California." She explained to Duane: "Judge Harris is one of the city pillars, has been for centuries, it seems. And a few weeks ago he amazed everybody by marrying a seventeen-year-old girl on the Coast. Naturally he is our chief subject of gossip. She is pretty, isn't she? Perhaps people will think she is only his daughter."

Duane professed a tremendous interest in the wild marriage of the old Judge, and the four of them discussed it down to the minutest detail, until the subject sank of its own weight and died away.

There was an awkward interval.

"Will you dance, Mrs. Harmer?" Prudence stood up at once. "I'd love to," she declared, quite as if she meant it.

Then Jerry laughed. She touched her hand to Duane's arm. "Let me warn you! Mother cannot dance. She is likely to do perfectly terrible things on the floor. Father and I have been teaching her to dance for twenty years, and she can't do it yet! She's only trying to be polite to you."

"Oh, Jerry," protested Prudence, blushing. "Sometimes I am sure I get along quite nicely."

"I am not a bit alarmed," Duane assured her. And then to Jerry, very pleadingly. "Please wait."

Prudence had a little difficulty getting the step at first. "Is—is it a waltz?" she asked apologetically. "I never can tell the silly things apart."

He laughed at her confusion. "It's a fox-trot. Never mind. We'll get on finely, I know. Just walk. Why, your daughter was very unjust to you—you dance famously! And all my fears were groundless."

Prudence was in a desperate quandary. She so wanted to be pleasant to the poor toy, but when she talked she always lost the step. She danced conscientiously half-way around the room, before she spoke.

"I am so glad to see you again, Mr. Allerton. I—I wish things were a little different. I know we should be very good friends—if we had a chance."

"Would you mind—I suppose you would rather not call me—Duane," he said hopefully yet diffidently.

"I'd love to. It is a nice name, isn't it? And Jerrold and I always speak of you as Duane—when we are alone."

Duane smiled a little ruefully at that. "Your husband is wonderful to me," he said. "I never met anyone like him before. He—he is just fine."

"Yes, isn't he? I knew you would like him."

Duane patiently helped her back into the rhythm, and when they were dancing smoothly again, unable to resist his great desire to talk of Jerry, he said:

"She is so beautiful, isn't she? She seems lovelier every time I see her."

"Yes, she is a beautiful girl. Everyone says so."

"She always seems so—well poised—so sophisticated. She is always sure of herself, never perturbed. Sophisticated, that is the word for it. That was what deceived me about her at first."

"Yes, she looks sophisticated, but really she is the most innocent and artless thing imaginable. You'd be surprised."

"Yes, I was."

"Girls are like that now. They get that air of advanced maturity when they are no more than children. They talk of the most intimate and—secret—things in the most outspoken manner. And they don't really know what they are talking about! They don't at all. And so quite innocently they lead them on and on—"

"And whose fault, Mrs. Harmer, in the end? It was mine, I know, in our case. But I was sure she was—playing the game. I never dreamed of anything else. The way she looked, the way she talked—"

"Why, Duane, I've heard those girls, Jerry and her friends, say things to each other, discuss things, that honestly I should not dream of saying to one of my sisters—even to Jerrold! They don't know what they're talking about, I tell you. They think it's smart to appear sophisticated and wise—and at heart they are children. Oh, after a while they learn—but they haven't yet. Isn't it too bad that men don't understand them—as their mothers do?"

When they returned to Jerrold and Jerry, who were waiting for them, Prudence said brightly:

"Now, you see, Jerry, I did very well, after all! I was only out of step a time or two, wasn't I, Duane—Mr. Allerton? And we talked all the time, and you know usually I can't talk when I'm dancing. I think I may learn after all—in time."

Others came up, joined the little group, chatted a while and drifted on. When the music began again Duane turned to Jerry.

"Yes—will you dance?"

"Yes," she answered briefly.

When they had moved away, Jerrold turned to Prudence.

"She can say what she likes, and you may believe it if you want to. But Jerry wanted to dance with him. Half a dozen boys came up and asked her to dance, and she made excuses every time. She was just waiting for him to come back."

Prudence smiled at his stupidity and said nothing.

Jerry and Duane had danced the full length of the room without a word between them.

"Jerry," he said at last, very softly. "I realize, of course, that you were this gown mostly in defiance, but I hope it was just a little bit for remembrance too."

"Mr. Allerton, please—"

"Duane," he interrupted. "You called me Duane in New York that night."

She lifted a slender shoulder, abandoned the use of the name entirely. "I would not for the world hurtle you before other people. But you must help me. They know I met you in New York—they are watching us together. Make it easy for me, won't you? Stay away from me. Talk to others—"

"Jerry, how can you ask me to see anyone else when you are here?"

"Oh, please don't!"

They danced for a while in silence.

"Jerry! Was it a little for remembrance?"

"Mr. Allerton, I ask you to help me. I am trying so hard to let things go off—nicely—so no one will suspect—anything. Don't make it harder for me than it is already."

"But, Jerry, if you would only let me talk to you—just once—let me tell you—let me explain—"

"There isn't a thing in the world to tell me, a thing in the world to explain. I understand you perfectly—now. And I am not such a fool as to think you don't understand me as well. I know you do." And then she added bitterly, "With the experience you've had."

His eyes contracted sharply at the cruelty of her words. "You didn't need to turn the knife, Jerry. The first cut was sharp enough."

Again they danced in silence.

"Jerry, I love you. Doesn't that make any difference?"

"No. If you love me—it does not make any difference."

After a long interval he said, very softly: "Jerry, tell me, when you are with me—like this—doesn't it make you think a little bit—of that night in the studio? You were so sweet, Jerry. You were the loveliest thing I ever saw."

"I shall never forget the feeling I had when you first looked up at me—the flame-colored gown—your cloudy black hair—and, most of all, that brave, glad brightness in your eyes. Oh, Jerry, it was a wonderful night—you can't deny that—it was a beautiful night—you can't—"

"Don't do that!" Jerry's voice was very low, very intense. "Don't! I am trying—so hard—to let things go—When you talk to me—like that—I've just got to be insulting to you to keep—"

"To keep from loving me, Jerry," he finished, when her voice faltered.

Jerry lifted her misty blue eyes under the shadowing fringe of the dark lashes, looked at him, directly, very frankly, and answered surprisingly:

"Yes."

"Oh, Jerry," he pleaded. "You love me already. You can't put me off any longer, you—"

A slight, almost imperceptible movement, and Jerry was free of his arm. She called softly across to Newton Macklin, standing near them:

"Oh, Newton, we have been looking everywhere for you." When he had joined them she slipped her fingers in his arm. She looked at Duane with ice-cold eyes, and smiled, with ice-cold lips. "It was a wonderful dance, Mr. Allerton. Will you tell mother I am going with Newton to find Rae Forsythe, and that I shall stay with the girls for a while? Thank you so much."

Duane merely bowed, said nothing, and turned away.

"Newton," Jerry whispered faintly, "I feel sick. Will you take me home? Mother is having such a nice time I don't want to bother her. Will you take me home, and then come back and tell her later on?"

CHAPTER X

Jerry's Plaything

In the first week of December there was a heavy Middle West blizzard, and for two days the city covered under stinging winds and cutting sleet. After that came a still, biting cold, that warmed gradually to a blanketing snowfall. And on the fifth day when the streets were packed to a slick but solid bottom, Jerry, unable to endure the brooding loneliness of her thoughts any longer, got out the roadster and went for a careful ice-cold ride between fields of dazzling whiteness, along roadways flanked with snow-bowed trees.

It was late in the afternoon when she turned back. As she drove through town, at the corner of Sixth and Locust streets she was held up by the traffic officer, standing foremost of the cars awaiting his signal. Jerry waited, as always, with alert eyes on the officer's hand, her foot poised for a sharp pressure on the gas throttle to make the quick get-away on which she prided herself, when the tide of the traffic was turned.

"Jerry! You beautiful thing!"

The half-tender, half-mocking voice was directly beside her. Jerry caught her breath. She did not turn her head, did not waver her intent gaze upon the detaining officer. She knew without looking that he was close to the car, leaning toward her, his chin grimly set, his eyes unsmiling. Jerry knew she could endure no more.

In that moment she received the signal. She flung the car into gear, pressed hard upon the throttle, and the "Baby" sprang forward like a catapult. Jerry heard a warning whistle from the officer to reprove her for her reckless speed, but she did not pause nor look behind. She drove with rigid, iron-set muscles up the beautiful, glittering avenue, and whirled into the garage behind the house. Jerry had reached the end of her resistance. As in her childish days she had struggled with the broken toy until convinced of her impotency, so now she realized the ineffectiveness of her struggle against the love of this man. She would leave it to Prudence and Jerrold.

Meerschau Pipes

Meerschau is the name given to one of the silicates of magnesium. It is a mineral of white, creamy color, and receives its name from its appearance and the position in which it is sometimes found, suggesting that it was petrified foam from the sea. It is obtained from various places, but the best quality comes from Asia Minor. Rich deposits of it exist at a place called Sepetdie, about twenty miles from Eskischehr. It is soft when dug, but becomes hard when dry. Most of it is sent to Vienna, or was before the war, where it was made into tobacco pipes, many of them highly artistic. Similar pipes are made in London and Paris. The pipes are cut into shape and afterward polished.

Great Dramatic Possibilities in the Stories of Every-Day Living

By MRS. JOHN D. SHERMAN, Gen. Fed. of Women's Clubs.

THE world is ready for another great dramatist, one who will picture with consummate art the glories of righteousness, the beauties of fidelity and the charm of decent human behavior. That is why the General Federation of Women's Clubs co-operated with the Drama League of America in the promotion of National Drama week. Quite enough attention has been given to psychological discussions of the maladjusted. It is time to shift the emphasis. The world is about to settle itself in a belief that we are, en masse, vulgarly profane, grossly immoral and almost hopelessly degenerate.

There are great dramatic possibilities in stories of everyday living, to which three-fourths of us mortals are addicted, which in the hands of a great artist, able to distinguish between simplicity and mediocrity, between romance and Babbity would form great and unforgettable drama.

The tenderness of a Lincoln has moved splendid audiences to tears; the joyfulness of a Peter Pan has lifted the burden from thousands of tired souls. There are countless Cyranoes and Orlandoes still unsung.

Marvelous as our great masterpieces are, the world is hungry for that great production which will fill the hearts of the people with a belief in themselves and in the fact that love and harmony and fidelity and courage and chivalry are the rule rather than the exception in this much-maligned but precious old world.

Two Post-War Changes in the Nature and Conduct of Corporations

By PROF. WILLIAM Z. RIPLEY, American Economist.

Two changes in the nature and conduct of corporations characteristic of the post-war period have a direct bearing upon the future of private business in its relation to the supervisory or regulating agencies of the state. . . . Fundamental changes are, inasmuch as they strike at the very taproot of our capitalistic system. For this system is founded upon the theory that the private, as distinct from the common, ownership of property best conduces to the public welfare, because such possession involves the giving of a gage or guarantee by the owner to his fellow-citizens for thrift, efficient, far-sighted and public-spirited management thereof. His is the reward if he is successful. And he bears the loss in case of mis-direction.

The first of these changes is the divorce of the ownership of property, represented by securities emitted by corporation or trustees, from any direct accountability whatsoever for its prudent and efficient management.

The second change is the wide and ever-accelerating diffusion of a considerable portion of this ownership, represented by stock holdings of employees and of the direct consumers, both of public utility corporations and of private business as well. The net result of both changes is the assumption of an absolute control by intermediaries—most commonly bankers, so called—in place of the former responsibility, for direction.

Our Farm System of Distribution Without Doubt Needs Overhauling

By W. M. JARDINE, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture.

Our farm system of distribution, without doubt, needs overhauling, but I can't think that it is the "worst in the world." In some respects it is exceedingly efficient. On the other hand, there are marked weaknesses in our methods of marketing as, for example, the sale of products in "crop lots" which must be graded before they are suited to the needs of consumers; the shipment of low-grade products to markets where there is no demand for them; the dumping of products in quantities much in excess of the demand, thus producing market gluts, and then, of course, there are many unsatisfactory retail methods which add to the waste and cost of distribution.

Various improvements can be made, but it is my opinion that more can be accomplished through the development of well-managed farmers' co-operative associations than in any other way.

Such organizations can assist their members better to adjust their production to meet market needs, help improve the quality of farm products and promote their standardization, develop methods of the better utilization of low-grade products, and bring about the distribution of products to those markets where most needed.

The Most Important Contribution of the Home Is Spiritual Poise

By BESS L. ROWE, Field Editor of Farmer's Wife.

The home with an appreciation of beauty will help to maintain national sanity and personal spiritual values in this day of materialism and hectic rush of living.

We must have an orderly home for an orderly background for family life, but we must not get so wound up in the technique of housekeeping that we lose sight of the larger values of homemaking.

The most important contribution of the home to the nation is, after all, spiritual poise, for without this to guide and interpret the others, the development of physical, mental, economic and social ability becomes a menace to the nation, rather than an asset.

We are in a period of flux. Conditions are changing more rapidly than at any previous period of the history of the world. The home must adapt itself to conserve the best of the old and still be ready to adopt the best of the new.

Japan's Dominant Policy Is Friendly Coöperation With United States

By PRINCE TOKUGAWA, to Visiting House Members.

I am happy to think that I can speak to you in perfect candor and frankness as friends and fellow legislators. It is unfortunate that our detractors have been constantly agitating against Japan, alleging Japan is making preparations for war of retaliation against America. I suppose that you have discovered with your own eyes during your stay here that such allegations are baseless and preposterous. Japan's dominant policy is friendly co-operation with the United States for the maintenance of the peace in the region of the Pacific ocean. It is patent that there are no issues between the United States and Japan awaiting settlement by arms. It can further be said that there can be no situation in the future which cannot be adjusted by free and frank exchange of views in a friendly manner between the two governments.

THE GUINEA PIGS

"At last, at last," said Miss Gertrude Guinea Pig. "Yes, at last."

"At last, at last," repeated Miss Grace Guinea Pig, "whatever in the world do you mean by that?"

The guinea pigs were all squealing most excitedly as they ate some lettuce in the corner of their zoo home.

They were eating as quickly as they could and talking in Guinea Pig language at the same time.

Billie Brownie had come to see them, for he had never seen them before in the zoo.

Billie Brownie, as you well know, has been given permission to call on Mother Nature's children as well as the power to understand their different languages.

He had told the others back in Brownie-land before starting that he was getting a regular collection of facts on who was who in Zooland.

"Yes," he said, "I will certainly know more than I ever knew before on Who's Who in Zooland!"

"I am finding out so many facts about the different animals, hearing of their ways and seeing what they look like."

"I am seeing animals and creatures from all parts of the world. It is really wonderful how many new friends and acquaintances I am making."

"And now today I am going to see some guinea pigs. I've seen them as pets of children but I am going to call on some who are now in the zoo."

So Billie Brownie had come along. He had brought his airship with him so he could travel more quickly and it was covered with a cloud blanket so no one would have known, had they seen it, that it was other than a cloud in the sky, a pretty gray cloud, something of the shape of an airship.

Billie Brownie could see others so there would be no bumping of airships. Of course, as you well know, he was wearing his invisible robe so he could not be seen.

The guinea pigs were talking when he got there. "Yes," said the other Guinea Pigs, "pray tell us what you mean."

"Ah," said Miss Gertrude Guinea Pig, squealing happily, while a little piece of lettuce, which she had forgotten to eat, hung from her mouth, because she had really had enough, "ah," she continued, "at last."

"Can't you say anything else?" the others squealed.

"To be sure, and I am going to, right away," squealed Miss Gertrude Guinea Pig.

"Continue," urged the others. "We've been pets for children, we've been shown at county fairs and exhibitions by farmers and by different people. But it's a great honor to be in a zoo. Some of our family have had this honor before—but more of us have not."

"But at last, at last, the zoo here has realized that we were interesting and so we have come here. Some of us couldn't come."

"Why?" the others asked. "All of us came around our home."

"There were some that Papa George Guinea Pig killed when they were young. They, therefore, never grew up—and so as they were eaten when tiny guinea pigs they couldn't very well come here."

"My dear," said Papa George Guinea Pig, "they do not know that they have missed anything, and, too, it is not kind to bring up my faults for which I have become sorry."

"Many a Papa Guinea Pig eats his children, and many a one does not."

"But it's something some guinea pigs can't help—when they are feeling the need of little guinea pigs."

All the guinea pigs decided they would let bygones be bygones and not talk of the days that had passed, but that they would simply rejoice and be happy that they had been considered interesting enough to be brought to the zoo.

So Billie Brownie went back to Brownie-land and told of the Guinea Pigs' glee!

Union Labor A ten-year-old boy who was attending a party "from two to four" wearied of playing games and went to the kitchen to find the hostess. "What time is it?" he asked.

"About 3:30," she replied. "Well, it's only half an hour to quitting time. When do we eat?"—Herald-Times.

Most men and women past fifty must give to the bowels some occasional help else they suffer from constipation. One might as well refuse to aid weak eyes with glasses as to neglect a gentle aid to weak bowels.

Is your present laxative, in whatever form, promoting natural bowel "regularity"—or must you purge and "physic" every day or two to avoid sick headache, dizziness, biliousness, colds, or sour, gassy stomach?

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin helps to establish natural, regular bowel movement even for those chronically constipated. It never gripes, sickens or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and pleasant to take.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine and just see for yourself.

The Senior Class play, "Kicked Out of College" will be given at an early date.

BRIDGE PARTIES

Mrs. Max Bogusch was hostess to the regular Bridge Club on Wednesday at her home. A variety of flowers placed throughout the living room lent a touch of Spring. High score for the afternoon was held by Mrs. Jim Kerr, a lemon dish and fork being the prize. Mrs. Clyde Griffith held second high score and was given a Venetian glass bowl, the trophy prize, a pair of tea towels, went to Mrs. W. H. Savage. The hostess served a delicious plate lunch to her guests.

On Saturday, March 13, at the Kerr Hotel, Mrs. John Stovell was hostess to the Night Bridge Club. After playing several interesting games scores were added. High scores for the evening were won by Mrs. W. H. Savage and Mr. Clyde Griffith. The ladies prize being a luncheon set, while the mens prize was a bridge set. Heavenly hash hash and cake were served as refreshments.

Mrs. Sims Wilkinson entertained the Wednesday Bridge Club at her home last week. The living room was gaily decorated with a profusion of spring flowers. The high score prize, a luncheon set, went to Mrs. P. R. Furr; second high score prize, a wall vase was won by Mrs. Jim Kerr, while the consolation prize was awarded to Mrs. B. P. Franklin. A delicious plate lunch was served the guests.

The senior class play, "KICKED OUT OF COLLEGE" will be given Friday night, April 9.

The Wife-Ship Woman
By Hugh Pendexter

Author of: KINGS OF THE MISSOURI BAY, GRAVEL, A VIRGINIA SCOUT, ETC.

NOT only a fascinating story, but a permanent contribution to literature and to history. The French occupation of Louisiana, the clashing interests of England and France, the attempts of the former to settle the country with sturdy home-makers and of the latter to link Canada and the Gulf with a chain of forts, John Law's fantastic financial schemes culminating in the famous "Mississippi Bubble," Indian wars and other exciting and colorful accompaniments to the conquest of the American continent in the early part of the Eighteenth Century are woven into a romantic pageant. Hugh Pendexter's delightful actors play their thrilling parts, and none more thrilling than that of the wife-ship woman, herself.

Ford

When You Trade Your Car—

Ford owners are continually being approached by automobile salesmen who wish to "accept" Fords as part payment on more expensive cars.

It is logical that automobile dealers should be eager to trade with Ford owners. No other used car is so easy to sell as a used Ford—because everyone has confidence in Ford quality. And it is not expensive to recondition, since Ford replacement parts are lowest in price.

Most automobiles carry greater discounts to dealers than the Ford—another reason why other dealers may offer the Ford owner a larger trade-in allowance.

But, bear these facts in mind:

The amount of the trade-in allowance you can get is not the most important thing for you to consider. The big thing is the difference you have to pay. And remember, that the higher priced car will not be so easy to dispose of when you come to trade it in.

If you wish to trade your Ford for a new automobile, stick to the car that you know to be dependable, useful and economical. Go to your Ford dealer!

He will give you a fair and liberal allowance for your present Ford and will gladly arrange payment of the balance to suit your convenience.
