WEST TEXAS RANGE IN TOP CONDITION

With the fine rains the past week the ranges in this section of the country are in the best condition than they have been in a number of years. The slow soaking rains has made plenty of grass and the heavy gully washer Wednesday filled up many dry tanks. The cow man is happy by getting $50 to $70 a head for steers; and the goat men receiving top prices for mohair and sheep prices are holding their own. Like Doc Turk and Jas. K. Fulton says, "Why shouldn't we grin and look prosperous?"

LOCAL TEAM TO PLAY FT. STOCKTON SUNDAY

The local baseball team will play the Fort Stockton nine next Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in Howard park. A big change in the Sanderson nine by getting Jack York, Word and Grosby from Del Rio and Kelly of Marfa will assure the local fans a real ball game Sunday.

Fort Stockton has one of the best ball clubs in this part of the country by having the services of a high salaried pitcher, Jack Hill. He hasn't lost a game for them this season.

Sanderson's probable line-up is as follows:

Lame, Tired, Achy?

Are you tired, lame, achy-worried with backache? Do you suffer sharp pains, headaches, dizziness and disturbing bladder irregularities? Perhaps your kidneys need attention. When the kidneys fail to properly filter the blood, body impurities accumulate and cause poisoning of the whole system. Such a condition may lead to serious sickness. Don't neglect it! If you suspect your kidneys, why not give Doan's Pills a trial? Doan's have been used successfully over thirty-five years—are recommended the world over. Ask your neighbor!

Spend Millions for a Pennant

Charles A. Comiskey, owner of the Chicago White Sox, and William Wrigley, Jr., well-known chewing gum magnate and principal stockholder in the Chicago Cubs, are friendly enemies in the baseball world, but they are both loyal Chicagoans and each has pledged himself to expend $1,000,000 on his 1926 team so that both Chicago teams will be contenders for the world championship this year. Prices Paid for Players Not Revealed by Clubs

Announcements of large sums changing hands for baseball players are heard no more. When Ernie Nevers, the Pacific coast football sensation, was signed by the Browns, Owner Phil Ball said the contract was "up in four figures." Earl McEwe, an Indian pitcher from the Southern association, cost the White Sox "a fancy price," according to Owner Comiskey.

Tony Lazzeri and Mark Koenig, the most expensive purchases of the New York Yankees, cost "plenty of money and players," said Manager Huggins.

For Walter Christensen, the St. Paul outfielder, the Cincinnati Reds "paid enough for him to make good," Manager Jack Hendricks revealed.

The Coast league outfield star, Paul Wamer, and infielder Hal Rhyne, cost Owner Barney Dreyfus of the Pirates "plenty."

Passing of Wally Pipp From American League

The mystery surrounding the passing of Wally Pipp from the American league has finally been explained. It is all a matter of finance.

No club in the American league valued Pipp to the extent of $15,000, and thereby hangs the tale that made him a member of the Cincinnati club of the National league.

The Reds, badly in need of a first baseman, offered the Yankees $15,000 for Pipp. The New York club having no particular use for Pipp, since Gehrig had displaced him at first base, asked waivers.

It is said two American league clubs, Philadelphia and Cleveland, refused to waive. Both clubs were willing to take a chance on Pipp at the waiver price, which is much less than the $15,000 offered by the Cincinnati club.

On many major league baseball matters there exists a gentlemen's agreement between the magnates. New York explained its reason for asking waivers was due to the offer received from the Cincinnati club.

Cleveland or Philadelphia could have Pipp before Cincinnati if either cared to pay $15,000. Neither club believed him worth that much of a gamble. In addition to the big salary he would demand.

Both clubs withdrew their admitted desire of taking on Pipp and permitted him to go to Cincinnati. He is certain to add much strength to that club and is worth twice the price paid for him.

Boxing Replacing Duels Among German Students

Boxing is slowly replacing student duels with sabers as a major sport in German universities and high schools.

The first interscholastic boxing matches ever held here have just taken place between pugilists of the University of Goettingen and the Hannover School of Technology.

Educational authorities in many states, including Prussia, have sanctioned boxing and its popularity is becoming widespread. The lower house of the Baden legislature has passed a bill prescribing the same punishment for student duellists with sharpened sabers as that meted out to those who attempt to settle affairs of honor with other weapons.

Evils Laid to Thirst for Luxury and Social Betterment

By B. J. McGINN, Surety Company Expert.

FASHIONS change in crime as they do in medicine and other fields, and so do inciting reasons. Today, the desire to own an automobile or a larger car, it is revealed, lies at the bottom of the pecculations of many employees, whereas a few years ago, race track gambling stood among the leading causes of inside theft.

The man who steals is often the young husband whose wife demands a car in addition to furs, jewelry and other modern luxuries.

Defaults are not always due to economic pressure, but to a desire to live in a luxurious way entirely unjustified by one's income. Luxuries are born faster today than ever before and every one of them can be bought on time.

Another factor tending to larceny has been the movement to the suburbs, where competition among neighbors in regard to cars, radio sets and so on—all part and parcel of the attempt to "keep up with the Joneses"—has been too much for many an "unassisted" salary.

It is, of course, a fact that seldom, if ever, are the wives familiar with the dishonest propensities of the husband who is an embezzler. Usually they are living in a fool's paradise, although almost always a brief investigation of their husband's work would show that it did not justify such high income as he claimed to have received.

It is a truism to say that there should be more general church attendance, but there is no gainsaying the powerful influence of religious teaching.

Last, but not least the courts should be more severe in sentencing criminals of all classes, for the knowledge of prompt punishment is one of the greatest deterrents to crime.

Declares Agriculture Real Basis of Mexico's Potential Wealth

By PROF. ABEL CANTU, of Monterey, Mexico.

Women of Mexico are following rapidly in the footsteps of American women. Instead of the beautiful Spanish type, with her modest skirts flowing about her ankles, and her beautiful Spanish shawl caught about her shoulders, the women of Mexico had knee-length skirts and the question of whether "to bob or not to bob" their hair was of the utmost importance. Although the Mexican women received the right to vote in 1907, the same time that women in your country were enfranchised, they have not taken advantage of it. The Mexicans are afraid to have their women vote. The women of the country are protected though, even better than in this country. Women with children are not permitted to work unless a nursery is provided for the child. They are paid wages during illness and well looked after.

Mexico's copper, gold and silver mines are barely scratched yet, and some of the largest oil fields of the world are in Mexico.

The real wealth of Mexico, however, I believe, lies in her agriculture. You have only to raise bananas to grow wealth. A banana tree grows in 90 days and by that time is yielding 100 pounds of fruit a day. And from then on there are 365 crops of bananas a year. All you have to do is to keep the weeds off. But as is often the case, where nature is so abundant, the people are poorest. In great stretches of fertile land, there is no one to enjoy the luxuries of nature but the monkeys.

Only through travel and education may friendship and mutual understanding between nations be accomplished. But Mexico is on the way to recovery. Within the last two years there have been 3,000 schools built in the rural sections, and industrial education is being encouraged. With more schools, hope will come to the hearts of the poor in Mexico, and friendship and understanding will be the result.

Over $9,000,000 Expended on the Lincoln Highway in the Year 1925

By A. F. BEMENT, Lincoln Highway Association.

The eleven states traversed by the Lincoln highway between New York and San Francisco with the aid of the federal government expended over $9,000,000 on the improvement of the Lincoln highway in 1925. Of that sum, $1,718,000 went for maintenance—the completed sections of the highway being kept in condition in every state. Nearly seven and a half million dollars—$7,437,206 to be exact—was invested in the construction of 343.6 miles of added improvement last year. A year ago the prediction was made that construction plans for 1925 would permit the announcement at the end of the year that the road was 90 per cent improved from coast to coast. That prediction has been fulfilled. Of the total distance, 3,142 miles, Hudson river to San Francisco bay, less than 10 per cent now remains unimproved. It is possible now to say that the end of 1926 should find less than 100 miles of Lincoln between the two coasts unimproved with some type of construction adequate for the existing traffic volume.

Utter and Unpatriotic Lawlessness of So Many of the Older Generation

By DR. A. E. STEARNS, Phillips-Andover Academy.

The utter and unpatriotic lawlessness of so many of the older generation, blessed with wealth and social standing, is one of the strange anomalies of the time. It is so frequently in the public eye, so flagrant and so blatant, as to lead one to wonder whether, after all, there may not be some truth in the saying of the ancients that "Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad." Unfortunately it is innocent children who are the chief and tragic sufferers from the influence of such parental surrender. Why these parents, so often seemingly desirous of the best for their children, cannot see and understand this perfectly evident truth must remain a riddle for future ages to solve. That parents are the last persons in the world to be entrusted with the physical well-being of their children every school vacation period gives ample proof.

Dr. Edward M. East, Harvard University—Gradually meats are going to disappear still further from the meal of John Doe and Richard Roe. The United States is still producing as much meat per capita as it did thirty years ago; but its meats are different. The beef animal, expensive to produce, is even now beyond the average purse. It is giving way to the metabolic efficiency of the pig.

Ralph W. Sanborn, president national Motor Bus association—Undoubtedly congress at the next session will consider legislation concerning public carriers in which vital interests of the motor bus companies are concerned. This association marks the first step toward cohesion of the many bus companies in the United States and a means of friendly co-operation to the end that the public will be the best served, profit will be fair and reasonable, and congress will have a way of obtaining the truth about the industry.

NO WOMAN CAN KEEP HOUSE EFFICIENTLY Without Good Health

MRS. FRANK DINDORE 888 PIERCE AVENUE, LANCASTER, OHIO

Four Walls Can Make a House, but it takes a Woman to Make a Home

To be a successful homemaker, a woman must guard her health. When mother is not well, the home is upset. Women everywhere are learning through their own personal experiences, as these women did, the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Lancaster, Ohio.—"For ten years after my marriage, I had poor health.

I was on a visit to my mother in Utica, Michigan, and she told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Her husband got me a bottle and I took it and for the first time in better than a year I felt run-down. I took the Vegetable Compound and soon I was all right again. I have had some little girls in the last six years who do all my housework, some washing and ironing. My time is now well taken up, but I will always be grateful for the letters I receive."—Mrs. Frank Dindore, 888 Pierce Avenue, Lancaster, Ohio.

Sturgis, Michigan.—"I am very thankful for what your medicine has done for me and how recommended it to others. I used to give me strength before my baby was born. I would have to stop work and lie down sometimes all day long. I felt as if I did not care whether anything was done for me. I got tired out so easily. One day I found a little book on my porch and that night I showed it to my husband and he went down town and got me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. The medicine has helped me so much that I was soon able to do my work, and when my baby was born my nurse, Mrs. Forbes, said it was the easiest birth she had ever attended. I will be more than pleased if in helping someone else by giving my testimonial."—Mrs. Edward W. Sarno, 208 Surprise Ave., Sturgis, Michigan.

Old Folks Need a Mild Laxative—Not a "Physic"

Most men and women past fifty must give to the bowels some occasional help else they suffer from constipation. One might as well refuse to aid weak eyes with glasses as to neglect a gentle aid to weak bowels.

Is your present laxative, in whatever form, promoting natural bowel "regularity"—or must you purge and "physic" every day or two to avoid sick headache, dizziness, biliousness, colds, or sour, gassy stomach?

A CLOSE CALL

PARIS.—Traveling by canoe on the Mississippi, on his way to the early days of the settlement of Louisiana, William Bradford Huie, known to the Indians as the "White Indian," was a Natchez post a declaration of war against the French. For his own sake, he hastened to Biloxi to the news to Bienville, French governor. Brantome meets his friend, Joe Labrador, in a half-hour, who warns him that Bienville has threatened to hang him on a spy. Brantome refuses to turn back. He falls in with the old Basile Mattor, on the way to Biloxi to secure wives on a ship, the Maire, bringing a woman from France. At Biloxi, Brantome meets a woman from the Maire's brutality. She tells him the Claire Dubois had fled up to Paris. Evidently he has heard of the Maire's mystery to Brantome. He intervenes to prevent a man, English known as "Old Six Fingers," following her to New Orleans. A Frenchman, Francois Narbonne, slightly demented by stories he has heard of the riches of the New World, introduces himself. Bienville accuses Brantome of treachery, but the latter secures a respite from death by revealing the Natchez declaration of war. He is to await the arrival of a former companion, Damaon the Fox, who will exonerate or condemn him. Damaon has documents proving Brantome an English spy. Brantome receives a message from Claire begging him to help her reach the English settlements.

CHAPTER IV—Continued

Then to me: "Do you ship with us?" "You two are free to go and come as you will. I cannot go with you. I am sorry. If you will ask for one Jean Dumouy, Monsieur du Pratz's boatman, you can bargain with him to take you to Bayou St. Jean, and from there you can easily make the settlement."

"Monsieur Brantome is very polite," sighed Narbonne. "I had hoped for your gracious company. Come, old rat, we must find this boatman."

They started toward the fort, with the women making after them eager to beg a passage to New Orleans, which I believe they thought to be a miniature Paris. Narbonne saved them aside and they fastened upon the Six Fingers, and while the old pirate was busy in lighting them off the Frenchman returned swiftly to my side and asked:

"Mademoiselle in black? She has gone?"

"To la Nouvelle Orleans," I informed him. "What do you know of her?"

"Only that I pity her. Only that she is alone in the world and very sad. Only that she is in great fear of my brother, the corsair. He keeps with me, thinking I am interested in her. I keep with him that he may not find her first and add to her fright. What a game! I hope to see him die, and I will defend him from harm until I learn why the little sad one is afraid of him. I regret. But if monsieur cannot go, then he cannot."

This last was for Six Fingers' benefit as he had not got rid of the women and ran back with his ears pricked to learn what we were discussing.

"Impossible, monsieur; but I wish you well in your endeavors," I said.

And with a sweep of his cap the eccentric fellow took his departure and went to find Dumouy.

Narbonne might be mad, but there was no doubting the kindly qualities of his heart. I slowly made for the fort, pausing at the entrance to reconnoiter the square. It was now quite dark. On the left and next to the gate was the governor's quarters, and through an open window came the sound of his measured voice. A candle was lighted, and I saw Narbonne standing by the window.

Passing on to the magazine and guardhouse on the right and at the back of the enclosure I halted before a small office adjoining the magazine, in which burned a candle. The room was empty, and I entered, and found what I was looking for—writing material.

Those few soldiers who were not on duty were gambling and gossiping in their barracks. The lighted candle evidenced the return of the governor, or his superintendent; and I made haste to finish my business. For a variety of reasons I could not explain my predicament, and had to content myself with saying:

"Mademoiselle Claire Dubois is there is much danger, and yet there is no insurmountable obstacle for a young woman desiring to travel through this country. At present I am detained here. I hope to leave very soon, when my best service will be at your command. I may arrive at New Orleans during the night. I may send word by a friend, whose passport shall be the words 'The White Indian,' and he will bring you to me. It will be necessary for me to start north immediately. I respectfully direct your attention to the Indian woman's dress, which is adapted to woods and river-travel. I remain your respectful servant—Wm. Brantome."

As I was hurriedly re-reading it I became conscious of being watched.

As I sat there with the message before me I knew some one was behind me. Picking up the quill I dipped it in ink and began writing.

"To his excellency, Monsieur Philippe de Vaudreuil, Governor of Canada.

"Monsieur: I find myself most unjustly accused of serving the interest of the English colonies to the hurt of France. You, your excellency, who have been so well acquainted with my activities, and who, I flatter myself, have always given me favorable consideration in estimating—"

"That paper! If you please, Monsieur Brantome," rang out the cold voice of Bienville.

With assumed surprise I wheeled about. The muzzle of a flintlock pistol of large bore was resting on the sill of the window, and behind it was the stern, implacable and suspicious countenance of the governor. As I twisted to face the window my body masked the table. My hand gathered up the message to the young woman and, as I brought up my foot, shoved it inside my moccasins.

"Why—why, your excellency! This is intolerable. You aim weapons at me! I protest—"

"Enough, Monsieur Brantome!" sharply interrupted the governor. "Where his gracious majesty's affairs are involved I cannot stand on the punctilios of courtesy. Both hands where I can see them. Sergeant, bring me what he has been writing."

"I have it, your excellency; all that he has written," said the sergeant.

The pistol vanished, and Bienville entered the small office and without a glance at me took the sheet of paper may be my good fortune to have you command me."

And I extended my hand and gave him a warm English handclasp. I felt his hand jerk as the wad of paper pressed into the palm. Undoubtedly the fellow was mad, and yet on subjects apart from the Mississippi he could be sane enough. My nerves ceased jumping as I felt him patting the paper.

"It has been good to meet you, monsieur," he somewhat stily returned. "I'll meet again at my plantation. I shall go in much for silkworms, using the Indian girls and children for the delicate task of caring for the worms."

And with one of his exaggerated bows, he was backing toward the sullen pirate and the impatient boatman.

Sieur de Bienville was charming. He referred in no way to my dubious position, and he extended to me those little attentions that are so natural in his race, and which, I am forced to believe, must spring from an innate kindness of heart. Only once was my personal standing involved in our table talk, and that when I ventured to ask:

"Is there any objection to my visiting Mobile while waiting for Damaon's report?"

"Be patient a bit, and perhaps we can go there together." (Meaning, of course if Damaon gave me a clean slate.)

His manner discouraged further requests, and as if to avoid a recurrence of the subject he entered on a lively discourse upon the English and the French manner of occupying a country. "The priest was the first of the French to visit aborigines and the trader was first of my people," he said. This led him into warm praise of the Jesuits, whom he greatly admired, although he readily admitted they never exercised the same influence over the lower river Indians as they did over the Canadian.

In referring to Father Davion, driven in by the Tunicas, and to Father Foucault, killed by the Korosas, he revealed the inexorable side of his nature, his "blood for blood" judgments, by reminding me with much relish how he paid liberal rewards for the murderers' scalps. It was his one strong point in his management of the Indian tribes, for which they know him as the "Iron Hand." As blood for blood was the aboriginal point of view the policy always had their respect even when demanding toll.

He sneered at Cadillac for not suspecting that the silver found in the lake country was carried there from Mexico; and in the next breath he expressed absolute confidence in all of Law's plans. He pictured Law finding a bankrupt empire, an unpaid army and a starving peasantry, with the billets d'etat going to a discount of seventy per cent, and then boasted of how the magicien had eliminated, or changed these evils. Now the peasants could make fortunes. Luxuries were within the reach of all who would reach for them, regardless of former poverty. France was feverishly prosperous. Paris was the center of the world.

And yet he was firm in his conviction that the future of Louisiana lay in agriculture, not in mines; and he insisted that the colonists should be satisfied with this thought in view.

I refused a bed in his quarters, for I was his prisoner. Nor did I care to be too much under his thumb should I discover an opportunity of escaping. So, after his courteous good night, I went to the barracks, where Sergeant Suarez sullenly showed me a bunk.

Very soon I decided my outdoor life had unfitted me for sleeping under cover. I took my blankets, one on one side and arranged my bed under the oaks. As I lay down three figures passed me and took up positions between me and the shore, the woods to the north and the woods to the west. Doubtless there were sharp eyes between me and the woods at the east.

This espionage was extremely irritating. It accentuated the danger of my being in Biloxi when Damaon the Fox arrived. My report on Canada, so idly confided to the Fox, was a short warrant. That one slip left me powerless to face the fellow down did I return. How completely he had deceived me was shown by my trusting the data to his care.

The danger from the Fox had seemed rather remote until the sentinels surrounded me that night; then it closed about me and smothered me, and I remained awake for hours trying to arrive at some sensible plan for leaving Biloxi and reaching New Orleans and keeping my appointment with the girl. When the sun rose I had advanced a single step. I would give the impression I was interested in Pensacola. That would be my logical haven if I tried to escape.

That morning I simulated cunning in my way of questioning different men about Pensacola, the time it took to make the port, and the like. Having sown this seed I visited the magazine office when it was empty, and studied the wall-maps as if wishing to refresh my recollection. Finishing there, I returned to the shore and talked with a fellow who owned a small vessel called a flute. I asked him if he ever made Pensacola in his little craft. In the background I saw the sergeant glaring at us.

I must have a boat to take me to Pontchartrain. It was necessary that I escape under cover of night, leaving Bienville to believe I was making for Pensacola. I had informed mademoiselle that I would call for her, or send for her; and I intended to keep my word. Aside from this there were the Choctaws, whom Bienville would set on my trail if it was not believed I had departed in a boat.

I stuck close to the shore, sprawling on the sand, with Suarez or one of his men always in the middle distance, keeping watch. Toward sunset Bienville came hurrying down to the boats and accosted me, saying:

"Monsieur Brantome, I'm off for the island. Another ship come in. It's a case of a case! A sick woman here—and she may have the plague—and no place to keep this new lot either here or out there. I go to see they are kept on the ship until I can arrange for them."

He paused, and I knew what he would say next, and I rubbed my head and stomach and groaned slightly.

"Touched by the sun? Are you ill?" he asked, not unkindly.

"Only a queer dizziness. Something of a pain in my vitals," I answered, making a face as some imaginary twinge of pain shot through me.

He bit his lip and hesitated, his brows perplexed. His intention of compelling my company was being replaced by another safeguard. He expressed his regret, turned toward Suarez and beckoned him to approach, at the same time walking to meet him. He spoke briefly to the sergeant, then hastened down to the shore and went aboard a sailing vessel.

Suarez walked to me and with a smirk said:

"His excellency's compliments to Monsieur Brantome, who is indisposed. Monsieur is advised to go to his excellency's quarters, take a stiff drink of brandy and lie down."

I rose and with unsteady steps walked with him toward the fort. As we advanced the fellow took more time to study my features—now screwed up in an expression of pain. His aplomb deserted him and he walked further apart from me. He had no desire to catch the fever, and the moment I entered the living-room of the governor's house he hurriedly left me. I watched him give orders to two soldiers, who left the gate and took up positions closer to the house. They were reluctant to do this, as they had been enjoying the badinage of the women. Now I was confined and under guard. It must be this night or not at all.

I watched and waited while the night more snugly tucked its dark robes about the settlement. At last the monotony of the women's witticisms, screamed at the soldiers lounging at the gate, was varied by the sound of angry voices. At first I thought the men were quarreling, but after a bit it was plain they were complaining against some injustice.

"Messieurs, I thank you." Now I recognized the speaker as old Jules Mattor. His voice cracked with resentment. "His excellency is a just man, a good man. But these women in the bark-houses? They have no fever. Bah! I have lived here long enough and have seen enough of them die to know the fever."

"You waste your breath," growled a heavy voice. "The women stay here until his excellency returns. Then you can talk to him. You make my ears ache. If you go near the women's quarters you'll run into a musket ball weighing eight hundred grains. It will be bad for your digestion."

I slipped into the doorway with a robe over my shoulders. My scheme of escape was now stretching forth its tentacles like a devilfish and seeking to embrace the Mattors among its requirements.

"Is Jules Mattor there? Do I hear Jules Mattor's voice?" I called out. "This is Monsieur Brantome. I have a chill. Have you had the fever? Would it be dangerous for you to come nearer so I may question you?"

"There is no danger. I laugh at the fever, monsieur," he cried, glad to escape from the gibes of the soldiers; and he ran toward me through the dusk, closely followed by Basile.

"And your son? Has he had it?" "Also the boy," he replied, halting before me. "Permit me to place my hand on monsieur's head."

"Say you are not sure. I have money for you. Hard money!" I whispered.

As quick as a weasel he was babbling: "It is hard to tell, monsieur. In a short time, yes. For a certainty." "I ate fish last evening. It may be that," I hopefully suggested, giving his hand a squeeze.

"Ah, those fish! Who knows? Then again it may be the fever."

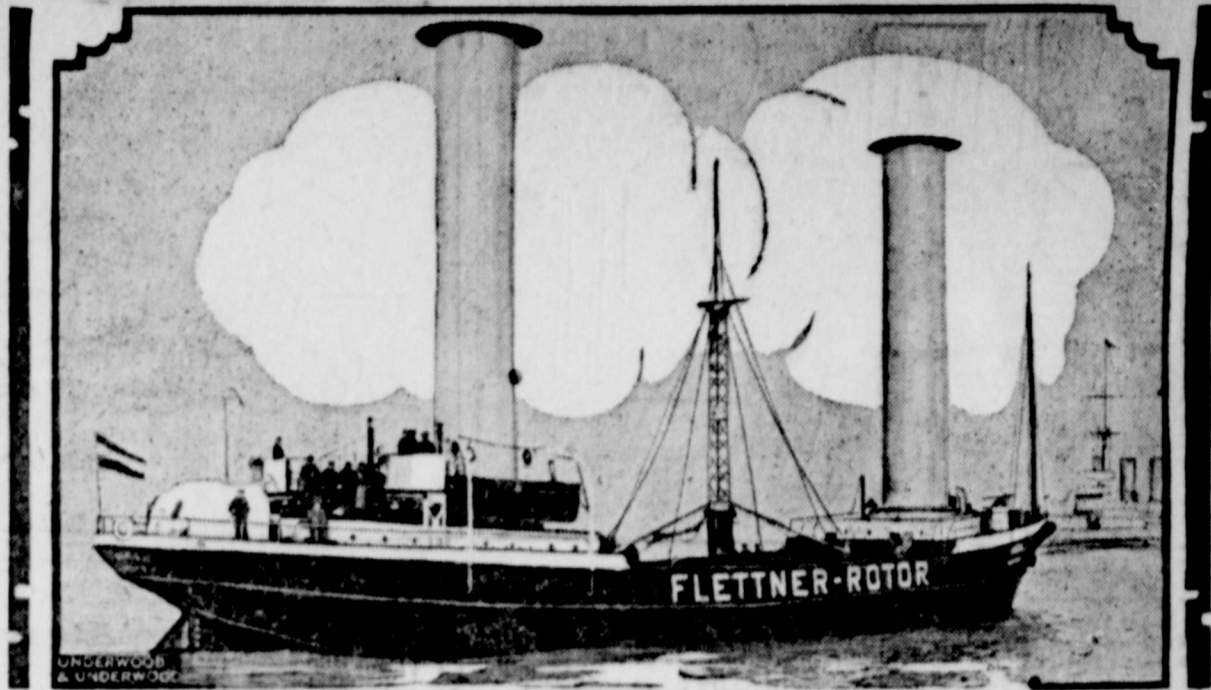

Of course the hero has no fever. But will this scheme work?

Cause for Rejoicing

That optimists see only the cheerful side of events because it is their nature to do so, and not because they are the beneficiaries of constant good fortune, was illustrated by a mishap that befell a man noted for his buoyant spirits. A friend, calling at his office, found him laughing heartily. At his feet lay the fragments of a mirror, which he explained, he had just broken accidentally. "But why are you so merry about it?" the friend inquired. "Why don't you see," laughed the optimist; "it limits my bad luck to seven years."

After an all-night fight, residents of Portage, Wis., succeeded in blocking a break in the wall of a canal between the Fox and Wisconsin rivers, and saved the town from an imminent flood. ### Origin of "Match"

The derivation of the term "match" as used in its present sense is obscure. It is probably from the Greek and Latin "myxa," meaning a nozzle of a lamp. In 1337 we find reference in literature to matches, the name being applied to the wick of a candle or lamp. The earliest reference to matches in their present sense is found in 1539.

Trifles make perfection and perfection is no trifle.—Michelangelo.

If we quarrel with conscience, we shall be in quarrel all the time.

Voice of Authority

"The White Horse Spokesman" is a phrase coined by Washington newspaper men. It is not considered ethical to quote the President directly, so this expression is used, although, in fact, it is the President who speaks. He receives the newspaper men and answers questions orally that have been submitted to him previously in writing.

No man likes to be henpecked, but his resentment can be weak.

MARY GRAHAM BONNER

OWL AND SONG SPARROWS

A little family of song sparrows had come to join the barnyard people. They had not been invited to come, nor had the farmer brought them in his wagon, but they had arrived.

They always disappeared when it came time to go to sleep and none of the animals had been able to see where they slept.

They were all so anxious to see them put their heads under their wings, which they had heard was the way birds slept.

No, these song sparrows came just at meal time and ate bread crumbs, grain, seeds, worms and fresh water.

After they had finished a meal they always sang a little song, which was probably their manner of showing how much they appreciated the hospitality and kindness of the barnyard animals.

One evening the song sparrows had had their supper and had not yet flown away.

Sir William Goat—sometimes called Billy, which was a more chummy but less "grand" name—had tried to get them to talk.

They had chirped and twittered, but Sir William had not been able to understand a word of what they had said.

Mrs. Gray Dove had gone off for a visit and there seemed to be no one who understood what the song sparrows were trying to tell them.

They were really trying to say how worried they were, for they had found their nest was very near that of Mr. Owl—and they did not know where they could go for safety.

Off they flew and their wings fluttered nervously.

The animals had all gone to bed when they heard frightened little voices and some cries.

They opened their eyes—and there, flying toward them, was the whole family of song sparrows.

"What is the trouble?" asked Mrs. Gray Dove, who had arrived home just before bedtime. "I think I can understand the way you talk."

"Oh, Mr. Owl was going to pay a visit to our nest tonight and kill us and eat our eggs."

"Oh! Oh! T-r-r-r!"

"We woke up just in time to see him coming, and we flew here, for he won't come near the barnyard on account of the farmer's gun, we've heard."

"There, there," said Mrs. Gray Dove softly. "You can make your home in the orchard near by."

The song sparrows brightened up. But in the woods old Mr. Owl was scolding as hard as he could.

He was scolding himself! "If I'm not sharper," he was saying, "and quicker, too, I'll lose my reputation of being the wisest bird—yes, wise and cruel," and he blinked his eyes with rage!

In the meantime Mr. Blue Jay and Sherry, the Squirrel, who had not been through such danger, were quarreling with each other.

Their voices were so loud that all the creatures far and near stopped whatever they were doing and listened.

He has been to New York, Boston, Brockton, Worcester and many places in southern New England.

In his early days he traveled on a bicycle, but now he uses trolley, boat, or automobile. Mr. West said that he may ride on a steam train some day, if he happens to want to go some place where only a train goes, but he has no particular desire to take a ride just to see how it would seem.

YOUNG CATCHERS FIND ROCKY ROAD

Majority of Major Outfits Depend on Veterans.

The ranks of major league catchers, which opened to receive a new star in Mickey Cochrane of the Athletics last year, passed through the 1926 training camp grind without serious threat of other invasions.

Melvin Ott, the Giants schoolboy star, and Bennett Tate, Washington youngster, created stir in their respective camps. Ott has been shunted to the minors for further seasoning, however, while Tate finds opposition from two of the best known veterans in the American League, Muddy Ruel and Hank Severid.

Bob O'Farrell, former Cub and a player of eleven major league campaigns, has come back to earn a first string berth with the Cardinals. Pincich and Hargrave are expected to share the major catching burdens in Redland, while Earl Smith and Gooch again will don the Pittsburgh masks.

Behind the plate for the Cubs will be two players of several years' experience in Hartnett and Gonzales, but it remains for the Giants to produce a pair whose joint experience exceeds that of any two other regular receivers on one club in baseball. Grover Hartley now is thirty-eight years old, while Frank Snyder has survived twelve major league races. Philadelphia and Boston each has a comparatively young staff in the National, the former with Henline and Wilson to do the bulk of the work and the latter placing chief dependence on Gibson and Taylor.

Veterans predominate in the American league, with Ray Schalk of the White Sox and Wally Schang of the Browns returning to the game after more than a decade's play behind the plate.

Alex Gaston of the Red Sox, Bassler of the Tigers, Myatt and Luke Sewell of the Indians, all have seen several seasons of service, but Bengough and Collins of the Yankees are comparatively young in major league experience.

Epps Rixey, Cincinnati pitcher, is an active member of the Cincinnati Indoor Tennis club.

Fred Lake, one of baseball's veterans, is going to manage Nashua, N. H., in the New England circuit.

The Columbus club of the American association has sold Shortstop Fred Nicolai to the Evansville club of the Three-I league.

George Jackson has been given his release by the Tyler club of the East Texas league, in order that he might manage the Greenville team of the same league.

Donie Bush, manager of the Indianapolis team, boasts a pair of bespectacled pitchers in the persons of Carmin Hill and Arthur Reynolds. The latter is a youngster.

Louis Fonseca, Philly infielder, has accomplished the rare, golfing feat of making a hole in one. Willie Kamm is the only other member of the ball-playing fraternity to achieve this honor.

The Seattle club of the Pacific Coast league has released Pitcher Steve Chekaluk, a reputed Eskimo, who was carried last season. Steve's wildness could not be overcome.

We are a peaceful people: The man who thought up, "Say it with flowers," is being feted and given a large gold medal, while the genius who first said, "Kill the empire!" is unidentified and unnamed.

From chasing flies on a ball field to chasing crooks is a far cry, but that's what the mighty Ping Bodie is doing right now. Ping is one of the finest at Wichita Falls, Texas, where he landed after his big league as well as Coast league days were over.

John McGraw has announced that the Giants will train at Pennant Park, his new subdivision, city near Sarasota, Fla., next spring. There will be polo grounds, trap shooting course and other features at the Pennant Park athletic field when completed.
