ached all over, could hardly walk or lift an arm; had been taking calomel
steadily, and it made me so deathly
sick I was completely discouraged.
Then one day my cousin who lives
near the state line, came on a visit and she had a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. My! what a change. It gave me new courage. We went to town for two bottles, and since then my face is filled out, with a ruddy glow.

"SPIRIT of '76" FIRST
A CARTOON

REVEAL ORIGIN
OF WILLARD'S
HISTORIC PAINTING

COPY OF THE ORIGINAL DRAWING

DO YOU know who painted
"The Spirit of '76"?
Do you know how old
it is?
Ask these questions of the average American and
he will shake his head.
He knows the picture
well enough, for he has seen it hundreds of times. Perhaps he grew up in a home in which a lithographed
copy of it occupied a prominent place.
In Fourth of July parades, too, he has seen living reproductions of it,
but further than his ability to recognize it he knows but little of its origin or of the artist who conceived it.

This picture which has stirred the patriotic sentiments of the nation
was first exhibited at the Philadelphia Centennial exposition in 1876. It was the work of a soldier, Archibald M.
Willard, who saw service with the Union forces during the Civil war.
Willard never drew any other picture which could compare in popularity with that single effort. Upon this one canvas alone rests his fame. Furthermore, the work came dangerously near being nothing more than a caricature, to live for brief time and be quickly forgotten.

"The Spirit of '76" never caused a sensation as a work of art, says the New York World, but achieved its universal popularity solely through its forceful appeal to the valor, manhood, and love of country that is rooted in the heart of every true
American citizen.

Flag experts criticized it as being historically inaccurate, for the banner used by the original soldiers in 1776 had the crosses of Saint George and Saint Andrew in the canton, whereas Willard drew an ensign containing thirteen stars, and this device was not originated until June, 1777.

Mr. Willard once said: "My picture was not painted in commemoration of 1776, or 1876, or any other special period in the life of the nation, but as an expression of the vital and ever-living spirit of American patriotism."

Born August 22, 1836, in Bedford, Ohio, Willard showed a fondness for drawing and painting from his boyhood days.

His career as an artist did not begin, however, until as late as 1872. At that time he was following his trade in Wellington, Ohio, as a carriage maker, a trade to which he had been apprenticed as a youth. The actual work of constructing coaches did not appear to him so much as the highly interesting task of painting the finished product in the elaborate fashion of that day. His skill with the brush was acknowledged by his associates,
and he would draw little brightly
colored sketches on the side of a carriage that frequently would attract the fancy of a prospective buyer.

At the suggestion of his employer
Willard one day undertook to produce "something cheerful, something comic." This undertaking resulted in his first popular picture, brought his work to the attention of Cleveland's leading photographer, and freed him forever from the labor of wagon-making.

"Plink Number One" was the title
given to this creation, and it succeeded with the public largely because it realistically portrayed childish eg-erness and action. Willard's three children, their soap-box cart, and their family dog, gave the artist his ideas for the sketch. It showed vividly the youngsters' wild ride, trying their best to maintain their balance in the little wagon tossing this way and that as the dog, to which it was harnessed,

was giving chase to a suddenly aroused rabbit.

An official of the wagon works liked the picture so well that he wanted it framed, and sent it to Cleveland for that purpose. There it came to the attention of the city's leading art dealer
and photographer, James F. Ryder, who immediately classed it as a
"find." As soon as the drawing had been framed, Ryder personally carried it back to Wellington to make the acquaintance of the artist.

He was somewhat surprised to meet the originator of "Plink Number One"
on the second floor of the wagon shop,
but, undaunted, inquired immediately,
"How did the race come out?"

Realizing that words could not convey a satisfactory answer, Willard laid aside his overalls, and got busy painting his answer.

"Plink Number Two" was speedily evolved. It showed that the dog had won.

The art dealer was quick to capitalize the twin pictures, and the dealers were the first to buy, and the dealer had Willard's pictures copyrighted with the artist as half owner. Before long ten thousand copies had been sold, convincing Ryder that he had discovered a man of talent. He went about planning new ventures for his protege.

Leaving Wellington, Willard set up a studio in Cleveland in 1873. For a while he devoted his time to the drawing of cartoons, many of which appeared in the country's leading newspapers.

Now for his masterpiece, "The Spirit of '76." About a year before the opening of the exposition celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence, the enterprising Willard was looking for something that would be appropriate for such an occasion.

Finally it came to him. It was, as he explained it to Willard, "Yankee Doodle—just put Yankee Doodle into something, the more original the better. Go to it and get it ready before the big show opens."

The first method of treatment which naturally occurred to both men was along the line of the caricatures
which they had produced so successfully up to that time. In telling about it afterward, Willard said that "the mention of Yankee Doodle photographed on my mind three things:
the flag, the life, and the drum, and a background naturally presented itself."

Willard's children had provided the material that inspired his first artistic success in "Plink Number One." His father was to provide the inspiration for the production of his masterpiece.

This aged gentleman had come from Wellington to pose for his son. One day while working on his outline of Yankee Doodle he caught a glint in the older man's eye, and in a flash it was revealed to him what Yankee Doodle really meant. "I could not go ahead any farther with the burlesque idea," the artist said. "The real picture pushed everything else aside, and went ahead and painted itself."

Willard's father, who thus aided so greatly in the creation of the "Spirit of '76," was a Baptist minister.
Rev. Daniel Willard, born in Vermont in 1801, the elder Willard was in his seventy-fourth year when he posed for the central figure in the group.

The original flier was one Hugh Moser, a resident of a small town near Cleveland. Rejected because of his age during the Civil war, he was nevertheless considered essential at all patriotic gatherings in the neighborhood, where his flogging was famous.

The drummer boy was posed by Harry K. Devereux, a Cleveland lad.
His father, Gen. J. H. Devereux, a prominent railway president, bought the painting after its showing in Philadelphia, Washington, Boston, and other cities. The general presented it to his native town of Marblehead, Mass., where it was hung in Abbot
hall library.

The picture itself is eight feet wide and ten feet high. It was begun during 1875 in the studio of Willis Adams in Euclid avenue, Cleveland. It was officially unveiled at the centennial the next year. Its first name, "Yankee Doodle," was changed while the work was on exhibition in Boston to its present title, "The Spirit of '76."

Informally a sort of agreement was entered into between the opposing forces that if the British were not attacked on embarkation they would leave the town substantially as it was.
There was no formal communication between Washington and Howe, but this was an understanding. Washington, also, from want of ammunition,
was obliged to use his artillery sparingly.

America's Industrial Growth Largely Result of Organized Industry

By ANDREW W. MELLON, Secretary of the Treasury.

ORGANIZED industry is the secret of America's prosperity, the key to future growth and the justification of big business. We can no longer count solely on our boundless resources, but must depend on the increasing efficiency of our industrial system.

Because business is big it is not necessarily a menace. The justification for big business is that it serves the public more efficiently than many small businesses could do in that particular line. Otherwise in a world of inexorable economic laws it would not long exist.

Higher wages and reduced costs of products result from increased organization of industry, and in the end we find that it pays to manufacture in quantity and to make a larger volume of small profits.

This is the secret of our success in America; it is also the reason why much of the distrust which formerly existed because of the size and supposed power of corporate organizations is wearing away as men understand better what these organizations are and how greatly they contribute to our prosperity and our high standard of living. Corporations are no longer owned by a small number of individuals.

Business Instruction in American Universities Worth While

By DEAN RALPH E. HEILMAN, Northwestern University.

Merely training young men to increase their earning capacity does not constitute adequate justification for the inclusion of business instruction in university curricula. The justification for the expenditure of large sums by state and endowed institutions for instruction in business subjects must rest on a much broader basis than this.

Schools of commerce cannot do certain things. They cannot eliminate the necessity for starting at the bottom. They cannot guarantee that every graduate will prove a business success.

But there are many important things which such schools can do.
They can familiarize the young man with the operation of the basic law, principles and tendencies which underlie our economic system.

If our schools of commerce during the next generation actually accomplish such results, and there is every indication that they will, they will make a significant and notable contribution to social progress and human welfare.

Changing Conditions Inevitably Will Alter
Present Position of Parents

By DR. ETHEL PUFFER HOWES, Smith College Institute.

The family shortcomings are held responsible for the mooted nervous symptoms and the delinquencies of the young people today.

The truth is, as sociologists and educators have asserted, that the position of both parents in the family and of the family within the social pattern, is changing.

The family of the future, as pictured by these authorities in their published symposium, "Concerning Parents," will give the mother full scope for her powers as an individual; will give the father the chance to study child training and take more active part in his child's upbringing, and will transfer from both parents to the community some of the more irksome tasks of the home.

Extension of Public Library Service Demands
Attention of Thoughtful

By JULIA WRIGHT MERRILL, American Library Association.

Forty-five per cent of the total population of the United States and Canada is without access to public libraries.

The problem of public library service for 50,000,000 people now without it, is big enough to challenge the best thought and effort of the library profession, to engage the active interest of organizations concerned with education and wholesome living and to demand plans and program on a large scale. It is a nation-wide problem, though largely a rural and village concern requiring special study and treatment as such.

The use made by rural people of the library facilities they have, the growing interest in books and library service on the part of rural leaders and rural organizations show that the time is ripe for rural library extension. There is also urgent need for extension of separate library facilities for negroes.

No Stability in Marriage Without Love as Foundation

By REV. IRA C. DAWES, Detroit Clergyman.

Without love, marriages are an insult to the principals and to the community. A young man marrying today should choose a girl who will enter intelligently and sympathetically into his life's work. A young man should see that she is a home maker, too.

They should have a common ground of agreement and temperament and be relatively equal in culture and religiousness. The primary and only motive for their marriage should be love. It will conquer everything upsetting to a marriage if it is strong and loyal. On the other hand, a young couple can follow all the rules for success in the world and make a failure of their marriage if they haven't love.

Don't marry a girl you have to apologize for.
Don't marry a girl simply because she is pretty, wealthy or popular.

Higher Ideals of Brotherhood Great Need of the World Today

By DR. S. PARKES CADMAN, President Federal Council of Churches.

Casting aside tyrannies and hatreds and cultivating brotherhood and mutual regard are more important to the peace of the world than the building of navies and the training of armies. We welcome world goodwill Sunday. At this season in the schoolrooms of many nations children and young people are thinking of international friendship. The church joins hands with the school in promoting world friendship.

We realize that peace will never be achieved until the minds of men and of nations have been changed. Selfish nationalism, prejudice and suspicion breed the bitterness and dissension that often lead to war. We must cure these frightful diseases of the mind and foster the spirit of justice, fair dealing and co-operation, on which foundation alone can the universal palace of peace stand secure.

Although clocks had been made for centuries they were still a luxury at the time of the Colonies. The early settlers contented themselves with a

were set upon a shelf against the wall and the long pendulum swung back and forth in a slit in the shelf. These were called "Wag-at-the-wall" clocks.
It was probably to protect the pendu-

"Antiques."

The Wife-Ship Woman

By HUGH PENDEXTER

Author of "Kings of the Missouri," "Pay Gravel," "A Virginia Scout," etc.

CHAPTER X—Continued

She was coolly saying: "Monsieur forgot himself. I also will forget. He meant to be kind; so his fault is amiable. I will see that monsieur is well paid for his time and worry and the dangers he encounters. He shall be paid in gold. I am without money just now. I may choose to demand myself by labor. But—but I always pay my debts."

I knew two things as she uttered this preposterous talk—she was adorable, regardless of her past history; and she deserved to be slapped. I rose and bowed, and said:

"It is all forgotten. If in anything I have said or done I have impressed you as one who would help a helpless woman for so many pieces of gold or silver then you shall pay me. If you decide to the contrary you will never mention the pay again. I only ask that during the rest of the trip neither of us be foolish enough to remember this talk to be embarrassed by it."

She frowned, as if puzzled by my words, then gave a little shrug to show she dismissed the whole matter. But in the back of my mind was the amazing fact that I had offered to marry her, to extricate her from a hundred and one humiliations, let alone dangers, and had been coldly refused because of "pride."

Labrador returned and reported: "If Damoon visited the Tunica village he has not left it. No Choctaws have traveled inland from the river."

Old Six Fingers came cursing his way through the bushes, and snarled at me:

"No gold, no diamonds, and no d—n gourd. So you get no water."

"Then we will move on and find the Huma village. I will scout ahead and see if they will lift the peace calumet. Labrador, hold back with mademoiselle until you get my signal to come on."

"A moment, Monsieur Brampton," she sharply demanded. "We will go together, or not at all. One brave gentleman has lost his life to serve me. Now we will all share alike."

She was as regal as a marquise in hauteur, and the tilt of the small head was suggestive of one used to authority.

"It must be as I say," I told her. "But there will be no danger. Fear nothing because of me."

Instantly her mood changed, and she was clinging to my arm, and tearfully pleading:

"Let me go with you, monsieur. I beg of you to let me go with you."

I glanced aside at the lowering Six Fingers and murmured:

"He can harm you none. He is dependent on me for his very life. Besides you will have my friend."

"And you thought I was thinking of myself!" she sadly remarked, turning away.

With an order to Labrador—in Choctaw—to hold her back if I received a hostile welcome, I hurried up the path to the Huma village. Half an hour was sufficient to bring me to the ten-foot stockade surrounding the village. There was loud singing inside the stockade and I remained at the edge of the forest, wondering what could occasion it so early in the morning; for singing meant some ceremony.

Evidently something of importance had happened, or was about to happen, and I would have preferred seeking sanctuary there when the savages were not overrun by their emotions. But to be found lurking outside of the village would place us at a great disadvantage, and, if such be the Humas' whim, classify us as captives. Nor could we retreat to the river where Damoon and his Choctaws would have but little trouble in gobbling us up. So, assuming my best air, I advanced and came face to face with a warrior just inside the gate.

We stared at each other a moment, then his face cracked in a smile, and he extended a hand, and said:

"My white brother is welcome. The White Indian has a red heart when he is with the Humas."

I had been among Indians enough to distinguish them as individuals, just as I would white men, and as I held his hand I remembered him and replied:

"The White Indian comes to renew his red heart with Little Turkey and his people and to smoke the calumet with Strong Bow."

Strong Bow was head chief of the Humas, and a very old man. I had smoked with him the year before and I was anxious to find him.

To my relief Little Turkey said:

"Strong Bow is now in his cabin after seeing the dance. He has smoked the calumet once this morning, but he is never too weary to lift the pipe to the White Indian."

He turned and walked away, and I followed him.

We had an open path to the chief's cabin, which was built of posts, plastered with clay. Split canes formed the roof. Outside the opening was a raised platform on which were piled bearskins and hides. Through the entrance I saw Strong Bow reclining on a couch of skins and cane mats.

A young warrior, a grandson of the chief I later learned, stood at the foot of the couch, his grille of colored feathers hanging down like a tail. This young man, on beholding me, backed from the couch and, in what was a most indecorous deportment for an Indian, turned and bolted through the door. Little Turkey glared after him reproachfully.

Strong Bow did not seem to notice his grandson's ill manners. He sat up, I squatted on the floor, and the two of us stared at the beaten earth for nearly a minute.

Then the chief said: "The White Indian does not forget the red (Huma) Choctaws. He brings presents to them and he is always welcome."

"On my last visit I brought presents and took nothing but your friendship. That was enough. Today I bring Strong Bow a present and promise more when I come again."

Anxious to receive his gift he motioned for Little Turkey to bring the peace calumet from its peg on a post. Little Turkey brought it and filled and gave it to the chief and then brought a coal from the fire in a split stick. Strong Bow did me the great courtesy of passing the pipe to me and lighting it for me.

"I smoke for three friends, all white like myself," I stipulated, before taking the first puff. "I was so hungry to meet my red friends I drew ahead of them. They will be along soon." And I waited for him to include my friends in the smoke before putting the stem to my lips.

"The pipe is lifted to the White Indian and his three friends," he gravely agreed.

Then I smoked to the sun and the four winds and the earth and passed the pipe to him, and, not to be outdone in courtesy, held it while he repeated the sacred obligation.

After the pipe had been hung on the post the chief said: "It is the second peace I have smoked since the sun began shining."

Little Turkey had said the same and a faint apprehension of danger disturbed me. I was keen to inquire who his first visitor was, but this would be a grave social blunder. So I produced one of my pistols and placed it on his couch. With a grunt of delight he seized upon the weapon, which was of large bore and generously decorated with silver. Little Turkey touched my arm to intimate the audience was ended. I followed him into the sunshine, and he said:

"My white brother's friends should come now. The smoke of a peace pipe covers those who can see, or smell it."

"They will be here soon," I assured him. "The smoke covers them. It was agreed that I smoked for the three of them."

He remained silent for half a minute staring toward the entrance in the stockade. "They smoked when you smoked," he finally remarked. "But old men sometimes forget. It is easier for them to forget if an evil bird whispers in their ear."

He had given me a friendly warning. To ask him to interpret and go into details would have been useless. I knew he was my friend just as I knew the young warrior seen in the chief's cabin would be my enemy. I observed the slight straightening of his figure and a flash of his eyes in a sidelong glance. I looked to one side and beheld Damoon the Fox and a group of warriors approaching us. The chief's grandson had informed my enemy of my presence, for he stood at Damoon's right hand and was pointing at me.

Among the Humas were several of Damoon's Choctaws; and with his hand on a pistol thrust through his sash the Fox gave a sharp order. The Biloxi Choctaws darted forward, but Little Turkey, already sensing the hostility between the Frenchman and me, leaped before the Choctaws and flung up his right hand, and cried: "They have smoked!"

The Choctaws fell back. Damoon cursed in French and ordered them to seize me. But even his new ally, the chief's grandson, dared not see the peace of the pipe violated. I heard him remind the Fox that the stem of the peace calumet did not extend beyond the stockade; in plain English, once outside the palings we could fight to our heart's desire and the savages would enjoy watching the spectacle. But the village inside the stockade, like the Cherokee "white" towns, was sanctuary, and those who had been received in peace could not be disturbed.

With the first flush of anger succeeded by cold reason Damoon knew the uselessness of opposing this ancient custom of the Humas. With his thumbs hooked in his red sash he swaggered up to me, and quietly greeted:

"So, English spy, I've caught you at last."

"French spy, you mean you have caught up with me," I corrected. "And where are the rest of your red friends—aside from those feeding the catfish in the river?"

He showed his teeth in a thin-lipped grin and informed me:

"Outside, hunting for your friends. No pipes have been smoked out there. I told them not to hurt the woman. I think I shall keep her."

He desired to enrage me into an imprudence, so he might shoot me in the plea of self-defense. I did not rise to the bait. He went on:

"I came here to smoke the calumet and get some red trackers. I never dreamed of this good luck. My manito is very strong. I knew you had landed, for there were scraps of meat and bones on a rock in the river, where your lookout had eaten."

I mentally cursed old Six Fingers for leaving the signs, although I was the more to blame for not looking after him.

"Eh bien, canaille," I said, "when we meet again there will be no calumet stem between us."

"Nothing but red wampum. But wait, Tiens! You would miss the best of it. You will find it droil."

And from the medicine-bag at his grille he took out a green scalp and shook out the long, blond hair. Switching it close to my face he said: "A souvenir of the crazy Frenchman!"

My heart pumped tumultuously; but my face was frozen in its calm expression.

"Because you took his hair I will lift your scalp some day, Damoon. My manito tells me you will be bald-headed before the Moon of Turkeys (October)."

He laughed, but now his hate showed through his mirth.

CHAPTER XI

"Good Luck! This Will Be Death!" I hurried her to a cabin where she could be alone with two Huma women and took up my quarters with Six Fingers and Labrador in an adjacent cabin.

"Scuttle me! But what's to stop these red bullies from boarding us now?" anxiously demanded Six Fingers, referring to the Biloxi Choctaws in the village.

"We will not be molested while in the village," I assured them. "I have smoked for all of you."

"Aye? Then God bless the pipe!" growled Six Fingers with much relief in his voice. "But we're land-locked here. Where's the channel? And when do we up with our hooks and sail?"

"I'll find the channel before it night. We must get away tonight if it is possible."

He thrust his scrawny neck out of the opening and became absorbed in watching the men and women passing back and forth.

"Blow me and beach me," I heard him softly exclaim. Then, without turning his head: "Shipmate, Labrador, you spoke by the Book. The beggars are loaded with gold!"

Labrador grinned at me because of the fellow's ignorance in mistaking brass and copper for the precious metal. Six Fingers grew bolder and walked outside and toward the girl's cabin.

To Labrador I said:

"There will be a big feast tonight. Mademoiselle will not attend. You and Six Fingers leave the feast when I give the signal and take her to the river and start up stream in a pirogue. Make for the Natchez village. I will overtake you."

"Hah! That Natchez village! I do not want to go there, my friend. They have promised war against the French."

"As my friend you will be safe. Tell Tattooed Serpent I sent you."

"Bah! I do not care for their threats of war. There is another reason. It is a woman. She is noble. And she is my wife."

Now the women of the Natchez, while single, were grossly below any standard of morality as measured by the white man's civilization; but once they married they became patterns of virtue. What the white race would consider a demerit was held to be a virtue by the Natchez, as it was by parting with chastity that the Natchez woman accumulated her marriage dowry. The nobles could not marry within their order, and many of the women refused to marry the lower class, or commoners. To find a French husband was an excellent way of escaping a union with the inferior class. It would follow that Labrador's wife would be true to him and was waiting for him to return.

I suggested the possibility of my overtaking him before he and mademoiselle reached the village, which would permit him to pass by and wait for me somewhere above Fort Rosalie.

"No, no, monsieur; I will not hide. She is my wife. I have taken no oath. I will take mademoiselle to the village and you will follow when you can."

Little Is Understood of Insect Migration

There is, of course, a great deal that we do not know. In the final analysis, "all things go out into mystery," and your most dry-as-dust professor is left at the counter of his laboratory with his mouth open and his short-sighted eyes raised in a childish query. Still, he has detected law and order and reasonableness, and the succession of cause and effect in many branches of biology, including bird migration.

It is not so with insect migration, which may be on a big scale. This remains a thorough-going miracle, still quite unexplained. In England we entertain quite a considerable number of butterflies from overseas, though their arrival or passage over the sea is rarely observed. But such little flights of a hundred miles or so are as nothing compared with some recent examples.

Butterflies will fly 8,000 miles on occasion. That lovely creature—not so common here as we could wish—the painted lady, has appeared in Kan-

"I saw a mighty queer fight in town this afternoon," related Farmer Fumblegate, upon his return from the county seat. "A fat young feller and a thin old one fit mighty near all around the public square tumbling down, rolling around getting up and whacking away at each other some more, and so on." "Mercy sakes!" ejaculated his wife. "What was the fight about?" "That was the funny part. Both said they weren't fighting for the principle of the thing, but 'cuz one had cheated the other out of $2." —Kansas City Star.

ATTRACTIVE WOMEN

If You Would Be Attractive You Must Be Healthy

A beautiful woman is always admired. There are many types of beauty. But no woman can be truly beautiful unless she is healthy. Radiant vitality is always attractive. However plain a woman's features may be.

Many a woman has found her health improved through the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Weakness, loss of weight, and a pale complexion were a few of the things of which Mrs. J. C. Taylor of Box 211, Tallahassee, Florida, complained before she started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. "I could not even sit down and talk to a friend for any length of time," she states, "I would forget what I was talking about and felt so blue." Mrs. Taylor is so pleased with the work of the Vegetable Compound that she keeps a bottle of it in the house at all times—and when it is empty, her husband makes sure that she has a new bottle. "I have regained my strength," Mrs. Taylor writes. "I can do all my housework now and I feel just fine."

ANOTHER SEASON FOR JOSEPH BUSH

Pitcher Should Be Good for Several Years.

It is just another season for Leslie Joseph Bush, that's all.

That he should be with his sixth ball club since he started out on his career also fits into the program. "Bullet Joe" has been traveling around quite a bit since he started on his career of mowing down the batters in 1912 when he won 29 games and lost 12 for Missoula in the Union association, winning the pennant for his club.

Joe's pitching made a big noise and Connie Mack of the Athletics snared him that fall. He reciprocated by winning 13 and losing 7 games for Mack the following year, which, with the exception of 1922, was his best season in the major leagues.

Joe fits in nicely in the scheme of things in Washington, considering that he was born November 27, 1892. That makes him thirty-four and age seems to be no handicap to Griffith's hurlers, so he should be good for several seasons, provided he has not thrown his arm away.

St. Louis had him last, but he didn't do very well with the Browns last season, splitting even on games won and lost at 14. He and Johnny Tobin went to Washington in exchange for Jezebel Tecumseh Zachary and Noble Ballou. There may be some question as to who got the better of the deal. Zachary is younger and Ballou is rated as a corner, but anyhow Joe is back with the champions, to which society he has been no stranger in years past.

Joe once had speed, oodles of it, but he spent it freely with the Athletics, and for a time it was feared that he had used most of it up, but he still has plenty left.

Bush was with the Athletics six years long enough to hang up a no-hit, no-run game against Cleveland. This happened August 26, 1916, but he had his ins and outs. The game following his no-hit performance the Chicago White Sox all but murdered him in his game, which might indicate that he is an in and out.

There is something to that.

Athletics Are Favored to Win 1926 Pennant

To date, no one has ventured to select Detroit for the 1926 pennant, writes H. G. Salsinger in the Detroit News. Few predict that the Tigers will finish in the first division. Last year many named them as winners of the pennant.

Most of the selections now favor Philadelphia to land on top. The addition of Willie (Kid) Gleason as an assistant to Cornelius McGillicuddy, leads a majority to believe that the Athletics will have enough punch to carry them to the front. Punch is something that Mr. McGillicuddy's team lacked last season.

A tabulation of selections follows the American league teams as places:

- 1—Philadelphia, 2—Chicago, 3—Washington, 4—St. Louis, 5—New York, 6—Detroit, 7—Cleveland, 8—Boston.

All seem agreed upon one thing—Boston will finish last this season, just as the Red Sox finished last in 1925.

Ice Keeps Him Fit

Don Young, outside wing of the Canadian championship Ottawa Senators rugby team, who is known as the Canadian "Red Grange." Heaving and hoisting chunks of ice give him a fine physique and keep him in splendid condition for the gridiron season this autumn.

Cobb's Record Praised by Pilot Tris Speaker

"I think it was a mighty fine thing to honor Cobb, Eddie Collins and myself with 'most valuable player awards', but in the naming of Cobb alone it showed that a man who has done about all there is to do so far as records are concerned was given recognition due him for some time," Tris Speaker, manager of the Cleveland Indians, said recently in discussing the recent announcement that placed the above three in baseball's hall of fame.

Speaker, Collins and Cobb, due to their positions as managers of teams, could not win the award, so it was proposed to place all three of them at once for their services in making the national game better.

Many Prepare for Channel Swim

Conquest of the treacherous English channel, a 20-mile struggle against tremendous odds accomplished only by five men in more than half a century, will be attempted this year by a record-breaking entry from Europe and the Americas.

Eighteen swimmers, eleven of whom are women, are in training for the test, several having already established headquarters at Cape Gris-Nez, France.

Fair Athletes to Attempt.

International rivalry, developing from representation in the competitive field by six countries, will be excited only by interest in the attempts of the fair athletes, an outgrowth of the world-wide attention attracted to the futile effort of Gertrude Ederle last year, Miss Ederle has signified her intention of making a second attempt this season.

Two other American girls will join Miss Ederle in the test. Helen Wainwright, holder of many amateur swimming championships before she entered the professional ranks last year, has been training in Florida for several months. Helen Cannon of Baltimore, who attracted attention this winter in the South by her remarkable endurance in the water, also has made plans to try the rough journey.

Against this trio will be pitted the foremost woman swimmers of England, France, Canada, South America and Egypt. Outstanding among the latter starters are Mme. Jane Sion of France, who reached within about two miles of Dover last year; Lillian Harrison of Buenos Aires, who likewise failed in 1925; Eva Morrison of Picton, N. S., and Suzanne Wurtz, a former French champion. Three English women and one from Egypt complete the list.

Other Prospective Starters.

Ishak Helmy, the Egyptian giant, who rescued Gertrude Ederle and Lillian Harrison from the water on their unsuccessful attempt last year after they had collapsed, is included in the 1926 male entry. Norman Ross of Detroit, former amateur champion and record-holder, and Dick Howell, erstwhile Northwestern university swimming star, will be America's male entrants.

Omer Perrault of Canada, who failed two years ago; Jean Demerville of Geneva, Georges Michel and Georges Pooley of France are other prospective starters.

Welcome for Sweetser

Jess Sweetser, shown in the photograph, was greeted with all the acclaim to which a conquering hero is entitled when he arrived home from England with the British amateur golf title in his possession. Enthusiastic over the young New Yorker's victory in the finals at Muirfield, various clubs, associations and officials of goldfom, participated in the reception.

Sporting Squibs

Lady Hamilton, who won the British golf championship in 1893, 1894 and 1895, still plays a fine game.

Al Delmont, at one time in the first division of bantamweight fighters, has opened a boxing club in Boston.

Looking at the names of the horses that raced in the Kentucky Derby, we reach the conclusion that the person who names the pullman cars is not so crazy after all.

Albert Exendine, star of the famous Carlisle Indian football team of 29 years ago, has forsaken his business interests in Oklahoma to coach the athletes of Occidental college.

The defeat of Mickey Walker opens up a lot of room for fights in the welterweight class. Now if Joe Dundee gets a crack at the title, Baltimore is likely to have a champion fighter.

One of the largest trapshooting tournaments to be held in the United States will be a feature of the grand lodge reunion of the B. P. O. E. at Chicago in July. Every member is eligible to enter the contest.

A golf expert says that children should be taught the game at ten years of age. If this practice were generally followed, we should be happily rid of the nuisance who learns golf at fifty, and then talks about nothing else.

ANOTHER EMELINE LETTER

Emeline writes one of the most interesting letters. She writes them to her grandmother, who is the most active and energetic and busy grandmother you could possibly hope to have.

Emeline lives on a farm, quite a ways north. And this is some of the news that Emeline gives her grandmother:

She tells her how busy she has been. She tells her that she and her friends have been putting on a play and that it was a great success, but that they were quite very, very, very busy with the rehearsals and costumes, for they made the costumes themselves.

Then she tells her grandmother that she has been helping with quilt making and also fixing over the chicken house and house cleaning.

She is also very much interested in hearing music and the prices of grain and live stock and the weather report over their radio.

The quilts that she is helping with are a cotton one which is being recovered, and also the filling for a wool quilt. She carded the wool and did almost everything herself. She fixed them so they would be warm but not too heavy.

She also tells her gran that they have four little black calves and a darling little new pup.

But, most important of all, she tells her grandmother of the fine sales they have made with their roosters and that with the new eggs they are about to set the hens hatch, they are thinking of marking each egg:

"Please be a rooster."

That will make them able to do so much more, as roosters sell well.

She tells her gran that the crows and bluebirds and some hawks are back and that the roads are better again.

During the spring they were so bad that the horses found it hard to get about, they were so deep in mud.

Then she tells how she gets dinner and of what a lot she has still to do.

But she simply adores it all—she adores helping on the farm and in the house and in seeing about the animals and in having her pet dog follow her wherever she goes.

Her gran is delighted whenever a letter comes from her.

It is so interesting to get the farm news, for her gran lives a part of the year in the city, and so this of the year by the seashore, so the rest is her only farm news.

Emeline likes to hear about the seashore and about the city, but she wouldn't exchange her farm life for anything.

Why, in the city she couldn't have all the animals and all the space in which to get about, nor could she have the big, old wagon and the horses.

Oh, no, it is much more fun just to hear about the city and maybe when she gets bigger, to pay the city a visit once in a while.

But that will be all for Emeline. She would never, oh never, want to live where they wouldn't allow you to keep horses and chickens, roosters and hens, dogs and cows and calves.

And her gran says they would never allow that in the city!

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he constantly advised mothers to give only a harmless laxative which would help to establish natural bowel "regularity."

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin mothers have a regulating laxative which they can depend upon whenever a child is constipated, bilious, feverish or sick from a cold, indigestion or sour stomach. All children love its pleasant taste.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine and just use for yourself how perfectly it cleanses and regulates the bowels of infants and children.
