Health Problems No Longer Matters of Sectional View

By DR. JOHN POMEROY, California Health Officer.

THE one big outstanding fact of the United States today is that "everybody is our neighbor." I mean that literally. No longer can we successfully put up state bars or county bars, or even community bars, to keep out illness or infection. With the coming of the motor, the completion of transcontinental and north and south highways, the old isolation is gone forever, and this means that we must have greater standardization of health laws—more uniform safeguards. New Yorkers play in California's "backyard," and the neighbor's children from Minnesota select Florida playmates, so to speak.

Even a moment's reflection serves to convince us of this. The impossibility of quarantining against any disease, when thousands of tourists of necessity begin a week on one side and finish it on the other—when an average family may meet at breakfast on Monday morning in Michigan and go in bathing on Saturday afternoon at the southern tip of Florida, is self-evident.

So, since distance is annihilated, and with it the old-time safeguard of segregation in infection, there must be a standardization of health work, a tremendous increase in the county and city health departments. It used to be that the country was conceded to present higher standards of health than the city, but this time has passed. Sources of water supply in the country have been infected by city dumping, indifferent tourists have contaminated the landscape, and the country people themselves, who go-a-touring quite as frequently as their city cousins, have brought back the possibility of disease.

American Citizenship Entrusted With Sacred Duty Toward the Dead

By HANFORD MAC NIDER, Assistant Secretary of War.

The so-called Reds are in reality not dangerous. They are usually foreigners who do not understand or appreciate America. They can be cured by education, experience, information. The real danger is not in the foreign Red, but the native yellow. These native yellows are the defeatists of our national life.

What they need more than anything else is a good course in American history, properly administered—the kind of history that was written at Belleau, Vaux, Soissons, St. Mihiel, Mont Blanc and the Argonne.

In the Belleau wood stands with us a great shadowy legion—the men of the Second division who did not come back—four thousand American boys. Whenever we of the Second gather together, unseen, unheard, they gather with us. All through life they will march beside you. Your citizenship must count double. They died that you and your children might enjoy American citizenship.

We who have seen American citizenship exemplified under every adversity know what its worth can be. We shall be unworthy of our trust if we do not teach that conception of citizenship to our sons and if we do not insist that that which we shall leave them shall be kept inviolate.

Duty of Modern Teachers to Make War on Materialism and Cynicism

By REV. ROBERT NELSON SPENCER, Kansas City.

Cynicism makes its appearance in children very early these days. I don't know where they get it, but young children sometimes think we are dancing down the road of life like butterflies. "I don't know where I'm going, but I'm on my way," aptly expresses a prevalent attitude. Teachers are faced with a smug satisfaction in prosperity. Too many believe it is easy to get on, therefore they will get on.

From our higher institutions of learning comes the cry that many young men and women look upon the institutions as fashionable clubs where they may while away a few years happily and earn a reputation of having been educated.

Modern teachers must "be true to the heavenly vision," having in mind Paul's plea before Agrippa.

A vision is not a dream. A dream comes when one is not entirely awake nor entirely asleep. A vision is born of the complete consciousness; it comes when we are awake, when our energies are at the superlative of attention. I beg you not only to impart knowledge, but to inspire. Teach the vision of the higher education, of the clean and decent life.

Danger of Food Famines in Reduction of Farm Population

By FRANK O. LOWDEN, Ex-Governor of Illinois.

The American farmers' combined capital has shrunk $5,000,000,000 in five years.

There is grave danger of repeated food famines in the future unless steps are now taken to make agriculture more scientific and productive.

The year 1924 was a better year for the farmer than any of the preceding four years. Yet, after a wage allowance of less than common labor receives in other industries, his net return upon capital was 3.8 per cent, without deduction for depreciation of machinery or depletion of the soil.

It is clear that the great agricultural plant of America has been running down at a dangerous pace. Of course, this affects the farmer, but it involves the very life of the nation as well. If the farmer does not receive an adequate price he cannot go on producing indefinitely.

The farm population was reduced by almost half a million during the last year. This trend cannot go on long until there is a shortage of food.

"Misfit Children" Direct Contradiction of Great Scheme of Nature

By WILLIAM McANDREW, Superintendent Chicago Schools.

There are no misfit children. There are misfit courses, misfit textbooks, misfit methods, but in the nature of things no misfit children. As well say a man does not fit his clothes rather than that his clothes do not fit him.

Repetition of grades is too expensive a proposition to be required on the old unproved theory of withholding reward. It is expensive in money and to the children. In nothing you do is there more need of intelligent judgment than in the assignment of pupils at the close of the term. The essential thing is to put children where they will profit best.

Most Valuable Player in League

Senator Frank B. Willis is shown here presenting to Roger Peckinpaugh of the Nationals a diploma stamping him as the most valuable player in the American league in 1925. Peck's teammates are shown gathered about him during the ceremonies held at the Griffith stadium.

Boy Golfer Lauded

Ronald MacKenzie, the boy golfer of Washington, D. C., received great praise from the English newspapers for his expert playing in the British amateur golf championship at Muirfield, when he defeated W. J. Guild of Murray field, and won 3 and 2. MacKenzie made the first nine holes in 38, which included an eagle and three birdies.

BASEBALL SQUIBS

The Blue Ridge league is employing the double umpire system this year.

Harry Albers, star second baseman on the St. Xavier college team, with the Cincinnati Reds.

The current season is the best the National league ever has seen, says President John Heydler.

Pete Donohue, of the Cincinnati Reds, has pitched twenty-one consecutive victories over the Phillies.

Clyde Sukeforth, catcher from the Cincinnati Nationals, has been bought by the Minneapolis Association club.

In a recent game between Pittsburgh and Brooklyn, Umpire Jim Sweeney was struck six times by foul tips.

Babe Ruth is definitely coming back. There was a picture of him in the paper the other day signing a bushel of baseballs.

McNeely has apparently won himself a permanent place in the Washington outfield this year through his consistent hitting.

Seventy-five per cent of a ball team's success depends upon its pitching, according to Joe McGinnity, the "Iron Man of Baseball."

Another current double-play combination that lacks some of the haunting music of the older trios is Bluege to S. Harris to J. Harris.

In no sport but baseball do athletic heroes hold over for more than a few years. Boxing, football and swimming stars have a brief reign.

A cynic is one who preserves half a dozen copies of the baseball expert's pre-season prophecy and mails them to him one by one during the year.

After twenty-two years of service, "Doc" Crandall is still puzzling batters in the Pacific Coast league and hopes to win his usual twenty games for the Los Angeles club.

Unlike most baseball catchers, "Mickey" O'Neil, Brooklyn backstop, has the hands and fingers of a clerical worker. They are as perfect as when he first started in the National league six years ago.

Pop Bottles Barred at the Newark Park

There will be no more pop bottles at the Newark (N. J.) park as the result of a "glass-ware shower" directed at Umpire Magerkurth following a recent game. Incensed at Magerkurth's decision, fans hurled bottles at the umpire as he fled from the park at the finish. One of the bottles struck James R. Reilly, one of the stockholders, on the head, severely injuring him. President Davids immediately issued an order that no more pop in bottles would be sold among the fans and paper cups have been substituted.

Volk Ends Career

When the last man was out in the ninth inning of the Mines-Colorado university game at Golden, Colo., the curtain was rung down on the athletic career of one of the greatest conference athletes of all times, "Rut" Volk. Fifteen letters were won by the scrapping Miner, all of them in the most strenuous of sports.

Sporting Squibs

The English Derby is considered the greatest racing event in the world.

Golf courses for their own use are being laid out by farmers in the Canadian Northwest.

Betting on racing greyhounds, one of the greatest sports of Florida, will be barred in the future.

That lie-detecting machine would just ruin some of those good golf scores or catches of large fish.

Germany is developing many swimming stars by making the instruction compulsory among school children.

In some distant day another great figure may arise in this country to proclaim emancipation of the slaves to golf.

The Hollywood (Calif.) American Legion presented Charley Hoff of Norway, with a wrist watch as a token of esteem.

The national amateur junior and senior bicycle road races will be held in Philadelphia September 10, 11, and 12, as part of the sesquicentennial sports.

Instead of following the usual custom of naming a permanent captain, Stanford university will appoint a field leader for each game in football, baseball and other varsity sports.

New Golf Handicap Quite Interesting

One of the most unusual handicap proposals in the history of golf has been presented to the Riverside Golf club (Portland, Ore.) handicap committee by Arthur K. Trenholm, chairman of that committee.

According to the plan, players would start out on even terms but the winner of the first hole would give his opponent one stroke on the second hole. If the winner of the first hole repeats on the second one, then he grants his opponent two strokes on the third hole.

In Trenholm's opinion this method of ascertaining handicaps would make for better golf and more interesting matches.

LACROSSE HURTS BASEBALL GAME

Its Inexpensiveness One Reason for Increase.

Lacrosse is rapidly forging to the front as a leading sport in college circles and in a number of cases has already displaced baseball, is a statement made by Ralph G. Leonard, assistant professor of physical education at Pennsylvania State college and coach of the Nittany lacrosse team.

No other sport has made such rapid strides among the colleges in recent years, according to Leonard, who recently completed a survey of the sport for the annual meeting of the National Collegiate Athletic association.

He points out that almost thirty colleges have taken up the sport during the past two years and are now placing it on an intercollegiate basis. Among the institutions that he mentions are Dartmouth, Brown, Williams, Union, Lafayette, Carnegie Tech, University of Pittsburgh, University of Virginia, University of Tennessee and Georgia Tech. During the more than forty years since lacrosse was first established as a college sport in 1881, it is the only sport that has not become professionalized in America, points out Leonard.

Among the reasons advanced by the Penn State mentor for the growing popularity of the game are the following: The rules have been improved to the point where the game is clean and scientific. Because of its bodily contact, lacrosse appeals to the American youth. It builds character.

One of the main purposes of physical education and athletics. The game is inexpensive, being probably 50 per cent less costly than baseball or track. And, finally, although requiring a high degree of skill to play, the sport is easy to teach.

Visits of a combined Oxford-Cambridge team to this country three years ago and a return visit to England of a Syracuse team one year later have placed the game on an international basis, says Leonard. The Oxford-Cambridge team will play a schedule of ten games in this country next spring as a furtherance of this international relationship.

Cubs Get Stephenson

Riggs Stephenson (shown in photograph) hard-hitting outfielder and Shortstop Schreiber of Indianapolis have been traded to the Chicago Cubs for Maurice Shannon and Outfielder Munson. Stephenson was one of the leading hitters in the American association.

Briton Claims Money Is Help to Us in Sports

"Although athletic victories cannot be purchased like 'old masters,' money does certainly give the Americans a good start in sport." Lord Wodehouse, international poloist and sportsman, thus summed up American ascendancy in sport.

"I do not mean to say that it is their wealth which gives them their prowess in polo or any other sport," said Lord Wodehouse. "There is no getting away from the fact that they are keen, and seem to have a knack of giving themselves as wholeheartedly to any special line of sport as they do to the organization of a factory."

"I mean that by reason of their great wealth Americans are able to buy the best implements and the best tuition."

"Another advantage that the Americans have, in my opinion, is the fact that they are able to play all the year round in one part of the country or another."

Picnicking With Peter

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

IRENE tore open her brother's letter as she made her way out of the crowded little post office and, because her eyes were preoccupied with the pages in her hand, she collided with a young man coming into the post office in haste. But he was a rather nice person to collide with.

He mumbled an apology, made a quick gesture with his hand toward his head and, remembering that he wore no hat, buried the hand deep in his pocket and continued his way into the post office.

Irene smiled, and again began to read her note.

"My old friend Peter Yard expects to be down at Sandy Beach for a few days," the letter informed Irene. He's gone down to visit a rich aunt who has a place somewhere down there, but I gather there's no life 'round the aunt's place. He dreaded the visit. I gave him your address and told him to look you up. He's a fine fellow and I'll appreciate anything you do for him. By the way, Peter's wild about picnics!"

By this time Irene had reached the general provision store where she had to see about laying in the day's supplies for her family, and crumpling her brother's letter in her sport pocket she thought no more about it.

Irene was bending over a barrel of green corn, trying to select a dozen ears that were worth cooking. Suddenly she looked up and narrowly avoided a second collision with the young man in tweed. Again he muttered an apology, and then going toward the proprietor of the store asked him whether he could direct him to the Bronson cottage.

"I'm Irene Bronson," said the girl, coming forward.

It turned out of course that this was Peter Yard, and he was losing no time in finding the cottage belonging to his friend Ned Bronson.

"I'm so glad you found me," said Irene. "Because, you see, we're getting up a picnic for this evening and we need another man. We go down the beach to the dunes and eat our supper there. Could you come with us?"

Peter said he would be delighted, and then finding no excuse to take up more of pretty Irene Bronson's time, he snatched back to his aunt's imposing summer home some way inland. Then Irene hurried home. She sought out and found her aunt, who was for the time being staying with Irene there at the cottage. Irene told her aunt of her plans for a picnic.

"Honestly, Irene," said the aunt, "it seems as if I couldn't stand another picnic."

Irene did not urge her aunt to go, but she did not change her plans. Next she telephoned to a friend named Alice. She told her of the proposed picnic.

"Irene, you're crazy," answered Alice. However, Irene was persistent and Alice gave in.

It was a week after Peter's arrival at Sandy Beach. Peter and Irene sat facing the ocean while the sun was sinking behind the dunes at their back.

"Irene, Irene," Peter was saying in a boyish, impulsive manner that quite captivated Irene. "This has been the most wonderful adventure in the world. I first saw you, ran into you in fact, scarcely a week ago, and after seven glorious days I have dared to tell you I love you—and, Irene, I can't believe you love me, too. And I don't want you to say you do unless you really mean it!"

Irene protested that she really and truly meant what she said and that from the time she ran into Peter at the post office she had loved him.

"And as soon as I knew that you were the Peter my brother mentioned in his letter, I made up my mind then and there to have a picnic—and I've had picnics every evening since. No one else will come to them now, Peter. They're all so sick of picnics, but I love you so much I have forgotten how I felt about them."

"It just proves that I really love you," went on Peter, "feeling the way I do about picnics!"

"But Peter—Ned said you were crazy about picnics. It was in that letter I was reading when I bumped into you!"

"Me—crazy about picnics?" asked Peter. "Let's see the letter." Irene had put her hands deep into the pockets of her sports coat to find the letter that she had never even finished.

"Peter's wild about picnics—he said he didn't want to go away for his vacation, for fear he'd have to go on picnics. He's just come home from an expedition across the desert. He was gone for a year and didn't eat at a table all that time. So don't try any of your sandy suppers with Peter. He'll froth at the mouth and hate you if you do."

Irene finished reading the letter. "Peter, dear," she said, and her eyes were almost teary, "can you forgive me?"

"I can," said Peter, helping Irene to her feet. "If you'll let me throw what remains of this picnic supper as far as I can out to sea, and if after that you'll take me home and give me a real meal in a real dining room—with out any sand in it!"

COULD NOT PUT ON HER SHOES

Mrs. Daugherty Was so Weak

In a little town of the middle West, was a discouraged woman. For four months she had been in such poor health that she could not stoop to put on her own shoes. Unable to do her work, unable to go out of doors or enjoy a friendly chat with her neighbors, life seemed dark indeed to Mrs. Daugherty.

Then, one day, a booklet was left at her front door. Idly she turned the pages. Soon she was reading with quickened interest. The little booklet was filled with letters from women in conditions similar to hers who had found better health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"I began taking the Vegetable Compound," Mrs. Daugherty writes, "and after I took the third bottle, I found relief. I am on my eleventh bottle and don't have that trouble any more, and feel like a different woman. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to everyone I see who has trouble like mine, and you can use these facts as a testimonial. I am willing to answer any letters from women asking about the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. E. DAUGHERTY, 1308 Orchard Ave., Muscatine, Iowa.

The Wife-Ship Woman

By Hugh Pendexter

Then he was inspired to add: "But why not let me stay here while you take mademoiselle. She would wish you for her guide. She was a young wildcat when we tried to stop her from entering the village before you gave the word."

"I am the one Damoon must capture or kill. Every one else, even mademoiselle, comes second in his plans. He will not leave the feast so long as I am there. It must be as I say. Wander about the village and use your wits in looking for a loop-hole. I will talk with mademoiselle."

To the girl I briefly repeated the orders I had given to Labrador and Six Fingers and told her I would work out the details during the day. As I had anticipated she immediately interposed objections. She would go nowhere with Six Fingers unless I was present. Labrador's company made no difference. She would not leave the village unless in my company.

"But I will overtake you," I insisted. "It is most important that I reach Virginia with the least possible delay. I shall not waste any time in following you."

"And if not for me you would already be well on your way there," she murmured. "Oh, monsieur, you are very brave! I wish I could have told you different when you spoke to me of your heart!"

Her naivete in bringing up what I supposed to be most strongly forbidden caused my mind to swirl in confusion. I could only mumble:

"We were not to speak of that again."

She further bewildered me, as, with the innocence of a child, she corrected me:

"Not for you to speak of, of course. But surely it is for me to speak of when I wish." Then sympathetically, "And does it hurt monsieur too much if I speak of it?"

"I think it does," I promptly answered, beginning to feel very uneasy. "Yes; I am quite sure."

"Then it must not be mentioned," she sighed. "I did not fully understand. I only wanted monsieur to know I regretted."

"It is all ended. You will be ready to go with my friend?"

"Yes, I will go."

I bowed and backed from the opening. She followed me a few paces, and I was disturbed to see she was fighting to control some violent emotion.

"Monsieur."

"Yes, Mademoiselle Dahlsagnarde."

"If I knew I was never to see you again there is something."

"Yes? Something?"

"Something I think I should say."

My curiosity pricked; for she was such a mixture of enigmas that one could never guess where her words would land. I had seen her as haughty as a marquise. Now she typed extreme youth and an entire lack of worldly wisdom. So conscience stifled curiosity, and I declared:

"But you will see me again. Tonight. On the river. My leaving this place is nothing. There will be a feast. Damoon will be there to watch me. His Indians will be there to help him. That gives you a free road. When I decide you have made a good start I shall laugh at them and leave."

"Merci, monsieur," she stily said. "You have saved me from an indiscretion. I have all confidence in your confidence."

And yet, as I walked away, there was the temptation to go back and ask her to tell what she had withheld. I tried to blame my interest in her shifting moods to my long withdrawal from civilization and its types of dainty womanhood. This, in defense of my peace of mind. The sight of Damoon leaving the stockade in company with the chief's grandson helped me to tear my thoughts from the girl and concentrate on the grim problem of the night. For, notwithstanding my assurance in talking with mademoiselle, I had no idea just how I was to escape that night.

On reaching the cabin I found Labrador waiting for me. His dark face was anxious, and he asked:

"Where is that old pirate?"

"I thought he was with you."

He shrugged his shoulders helplessly.

"Ah, that old pirate! He was with me. At my heels. Then, poof! He was gone. Hell! snatch him! I have walked and walked around this cursed death-trap, peeping into every cabin, and he is not."

I resigned myself philosophically to Six Fingers' disappearance. If he was gone then that was an end of one of mademoiselle's worries. I remembered seeing Damoon leaving the village. I began to suspect his going was a part of the game to catch Six Fingers out of bounds and do him to death. It was while I was expounding this to Labrador that Six Fingers entered the cabin and stood grinning at us in a peculiar manner.

"Back again? Where have you been?"

"Adrift," he coolly answered. "I grew tired of this devil's cage. The women interested me for a bit, but they blacken their teeth, and when they smiled I ran. I went outside."

"You are lucky to be back alive. What is the matter with you? Your legs and arms are wet?"

"I went to a brook and washed."

"How did you go without my seeing you, little spider?" asked Labrador.

Six Fingers chuckled.

"It was as simple as sailing into the wind. In the fence back of mademoiselle's cabin is a hole. It is covered from sight by vines. I saw a fowl enter the vines. She did not come back. I cruised inshore and cast the lead. I found the hole. Labrador, the big pig, was sailing before the wind. I slipped through the hole and went to the brook. And here I am, all safe and sound."

"Yet you are lucky," I warned. "Damoon and his Choctaws have been outside all the morning."

This washed the grin from his wrinkled face.

I was not satisfied with Six Fingers' explanation of his excursion outside the stockade. How could I know that he had not met Damoon outside the village and had made a compact with him? Narbonne was dead, and there was no possible chance to continue the quest for Acanibas. I warned Labrador:

"Say nothing to Six Fingers about tonight's plans. There was a look in his eyes that tells me he is trying to hide something from us," I said.

"When I start with mademoiselle tonight I shall give him no chance to spoil the plan. Of course we shall go through the hole in the stockade?"

"Of course. And I will keep Six Fingers with me. He frightens the girl."

At midday I went to mademoiselle's cabin and called her out and informed her of the hole in the palings and warned her to be ready to leave by means of it.

"You are determined not to go with me?" she asked.

"If I planned that way none of us could go. I shall be right behind you. I shall keep Six Fingers with me."

She was relieved to know Six Fingers was not to accompany her.

"I will not fail you, monsieur," she whispered.

There remained nothing now but to wait until evening. Owing to the brief time allowed for preparations the hunters could not roam very far, and some of these were returning continually, usually with strings of small game. I tried to get some rest against the exertions of the night, but each returning hunter was greeted with much shouting, and sleep was impossible.

It was twilight when Damoon returned to the village. He went out of his way to pass within a rod of me, and the look his dark eyes gave me was one of triumph. Yet I could not comprehend any immediate danger. The peace smoke would not blow away without some warning, plus an announcement as to when it could be renewed.

With the going down of the sun the Huma women began running about the village, cackling excitedly. Fires were started in the opening before the chief's cabin. Kettles were hung over the fires and the various kinds of game were dumped in, the contributions ranging from squirrels and water-fowl to deer meat. Damoon kept to the other side of the village and had his Choctaws posted about the exit. He believed he had us bottled up until the protection of the calumet had ended.

When it grew so dark there was no danger of being closely observed I walked to the girl's cabin, and was pleased to find the Indian women had succumbed to the temptation of the twinkling fires and had left mademoiselle unattended. I instructed her:

"After I have gone back I want you to steal behind the cabin and see if the hole is there as Six Fingers described."

"It is there. I saw him when he came through it."

"Then be ready for Labrador to call for you. When he comes you must act swiftly. Do as he says."

"The other?"

"I've told you he stays with me. He is acting queer. He's been up to some mischief. He may have bargained to sell us out."

To my astonishment she instantly denied this possibility, declaring:

"He would never sell me. No, no, monsieur. He is evil, but he wants me to escape from this village and from the man you call the Fox."

More of the mystery! I made no comment, but repeated my request that she be in constant readiness to go with Labrador. Then I wished her a stout heart and good luck.

She came to me and took one hand in both of hers and held it to her heart, and without a word retreated inside the cabin. I began to realize how horrible the whole situation must be for her. She was denied the tonic of action and must dully wait, always fearing the worst. I was back at my cabin in time to meet Little Turkey and six warriors, who, as an escort of honor, came to lead Labrador. Six Fingers and me to the feast. As we walked between them and entered the freight I beheld the chief's grandson and a delegation of warriors performing the same courtesy for Damoon the Fox. Behind Damoon came all of his Choctaws except four left to guard the exit.

The chief gave the sign for the feasting to begin. Minute portions were tossed over the shoulders for the ghosts, and the peace calumet was hung up on a pole by the side of the chief and was made the recipient of scraps of meat and rations of beans. Strong Bow looked up and down the double line of men, boiting the meat like dogs, and asked me why the white woman was not standing among the Indian women to watch the feast. I told him she was a queen in her own country and not used to standing while men ate, and that she preferred remaining in her cabin until the dancing began, when she would appear. Damoon grinned widely and murmured:

"She will stand while I eat, my friend."

I pretended not to hear, and Damoon stared at me curiously, trying to fathom my mind. Like the fox he feared a trap, but so long as I and my male companions were within immediate reach he could not reason out where we had a single chance. Six Fingers never raised his eyes from his food, and yet he was not hungry. Labrador devoured huge portions of under-your English head for two days if it was known that you had broken the law?"

There was no guessing his meaning, although he meant death. I scoured my brains, but could find no signs which would lead me to his hidden trail. I was still pondering on this new attitude of his when the freshly painted warriors, armed with axes and bows and arrows, leaped in between the fires and began their war dance. Damoon suddenly turned his head and fiercely demanded:

"Where is my woman?"

I eased my ire by reminding him: "Your scalp shall pay the whole price."

He leaped to his feet and spoke to the chief's grandson, who was reluctant to do what was asked. Damoon then spoke to me, saying:

"If the woman does not come the Humas will bring her."

As Labrador and the girl had had time to get far down the river trail I knew this would be some task for the Humas to accomplish. Yet I fought for more time by appealing to the chief's sense of justice, urging him to declare the white woman need not show herself at all unless she so desired.

Only the fear of Bienville, whose "word-bearer" he knew Damoon was, caused him to hesitate. He would hunt with the French and run with the English; and he suggested: "It would make the hearts of the Humas very light if the white woman would come and watch them dance."

"So be it," I said. "I will go and ask her."

I do not believe Damoon would have suspected any ruse had it not been for Six Fingers' frantic haste to follow at my heels.

"Let them stay here!" shouted the Fox. "The Iron Hand will fall and crush the Humas if they do not stay here."

"Stop," cried the chief, now in panic at the threat of the Fox, word-bearer of Bienville. "The eyes of the Humas would be made glad at sight of the white woman. I, Strong Bow, chief of the Humas, will go and ask her to come."

Damoon chuckled contentedly, and said to the chief: "We will wait a moment. There is a present the white man has prepared for his woman. He had it hid in the woods but my Choctaws found it. We will have it ready when she comes to see the dance."

He whistled shrilly, and very soon two Choctaws came trotting from the exit with a long object carried between them. As it was carefully deposited on the ground I noticed the blanket was one of those taken from Narbonne's progre by Six Fingers when we came ashore to hide in the Indian village.

"Veer off. Hell's to pay! It was hid at the brook! The cursed scum found it!" huskily whispered Six Fingers, his deep-set eyes glaring at the two Choctaws as they took hold of the blanket. "There a black spot on my luck!"

Damoon motioned his Indians back, and because of his love of the dramatic assumed full charge of the proceedings. Striking an attitude and pointing a finger at me he harshly cried out to the bewildered Humas:

"The present of the English spy to his woman!"

And he snatched a fold of the blanket away and revealed to our horrified gaze the body of a dead Huma woman. And what was more terrible she had died by violence and her two arms had been cut off below the elbow. We were stupefied by the fearful exhibit; then with the hiss of a thousand serpents came the breath of the Humas. Damoon had opened a smaller parcel and was exposing the two severed members of the poor creature, still decorated with their bracelets of brass.

"You frog-eating fool!" madly shrieked Six Fingers at Damoon. "They are gold and you could have had half if you'd kept your meat-trap shut!"

It was as simple as sailing in the wind. In the fence back of mademoiselle's cabin is a hole.

done meat with the philosophy of one who makes the most of the hour which is his. In a short space of time the kettles were emptied except what was reserved for the women, and the warriors retired to paint for their dance. I called to Labrador in French and requested him to wait on mademoiselle and ask her to come and see the dancing.

Damoon demanded my attention by asking:

"So we renew the peace smoke in two sleeps, eh?"

There was so much exultation in his tone, so much diablerie in his grinning face, that I knew he was up to some new trick, something I had not dreamed of. I guessed frantically and could not imagine what it was; yet I knew he had his plans all laid before the feast began, and that he was not dependent upon the interval between the end of the first smoke and the beginning of the second.

"Much may happen in two days," I carelessly replied.

"As true as heaven," he mocked. "And much may happen in one day—before another sun."

"What are you planning to try tonight?" I bluntly asked.

He laughed merrily, and protested: "I try? Parbleu! Think I would break the law of the Humas? But if you should break it, eh? Come now, would the peace smoke hover over

SAFFRON SKIN FROM SOUR BILE

SOUTH GEORGIAN DRIVES OUT ENORMOUS QUANTITY SOUR BILE WITH DODSON'S LIVER TONE.

After a long period of the worst form of weakness and the terrible feeling of sickness that comes from a system loaded with sour bile, Mr. Sam Puckett says: "When I kept getting those bilious attacks reckon I took enough cologne to kill a mule. Got worse all the time. Finally I turned saffron color all over. My wife happened to read about Dodson's Liver Tone in the Weekly Constitution, so we drove to town and got a bottle. It was like magic. No more quart of sour bile out of me as black as ink. From that day I have felt as if I had a new liver, and whenever I begin to feel weary and bilious, with no appetite, a dose of Dodson's Liver Tone puts me to rights."

This wonderful, quick-action, liver starter ought to be in every household, if for no other reason than to stop the use of dangerous cologne. Dodson's Liver Tone is pleasant to take, even for children, and never makes you sick.

Dodson's Liver Tone is personally guaranteed by every druggist who sells it. A large bottle costs but a few cents, and if it fails to give relief in every case of liver sluggishness and constipation, you have only to ask for your money back.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

By Mary Graham Bonner

MRS. GIRAFFE

"Girls require more fussing, they require more attention and when I say they require it I mean that they need it," said Mrs. Giraffe.

"Now if I am going to have a dear little girl giraffe to look after I take a longer time getting ready for her arrival than I do if a little boy giraffe is coming."

"Of course," continued Mrs. Giraffe, "there may be people who would not think the little girl was so very little, or the little boy so very little, but what mother wouldn't call her baby a little one?"

"What mother wouldn't do that?" Mrs. Giraffe ate some clover and lay, took a nap and when she awoke she said:

"I am so tired of people thinking I am queer looking."

"I think they are just as queer looking if they really want to know it."

"It seems perfectly, absolutely absurd to me to see people with their heads so near their shoulders and with no nice necks at all."

"But I don't suppose they ever think of the way I may regard them."

"I don't suppose they ever wish their heads were further away from their shoulders."

"But when they think I'm funny they realize that I, from my giraffe point of view, have a perfect right to think they are funny."

"And every reason to think so, too. They think my neck is so very, very funny."

"It's not funny!"

"It's a neck—that's all. They, the people, don't know what a real neck is like when they think their necks are all right."

"But then I suppose it is ignorance," continued Mrs. Giraffe, who wasn't really so very clever or smart herself.

"Yes," she went on, "I suppose it is ignorance and they don't know any better."

"At least they have enough sense to stare at me and gaze at me and admire my great and tall beauty, my markings, my legs, my neck."

"But when they're admiring me, I do wish they would not laugh at me."

"For it only makes me think they don't want the stupid giraffe to have such a poor opinion of their good sense."

"Just because they aren't used to seeing me around corners and meeting me at the market or at the general store, or because they don't see me sitting on stools drinking soda waters as they say they do, they think I'm an unusual sight, a very unusual sight."

"Well, I am."

"But I'm unusually handsome and not unusually funny."

"I'm generous as to neck and legs. They're very stinky with neck and legs."

"And as for sitting and sipping soda water through a straw, and taking rides in boats and rowing and diving head first into the swimming pools and all the absurd things they do—well they shouldn't talk about Mrs. Giraffe."

"They should think of how they appear to us. That's what they should think about."

"But do they?"

"No, they don't seem to at all, not at all. But that is the way they are, poor, laughing, short-necked creatures!"

Hard Family to Settle

Returning from the fair with her mother and father, little Janey had an awful present. "Mother, you bought me so many nice things."

"Well, I like that," said the father; "what about the presents I bought you?"

"Oh, yes, daddy, you bought me three and mother bought me three."

"It's too late," said her father, "you can't fix it up now."

Janey looked quite perturbed and, with a deep sigh, said, "You just can't settle this family."

Blue and White, Black and White

Polka Dots, Stripes, Plaids Are in Fashion for Summer Season.

One style that has become almost a tradition is the navy blue and white polka-dotted frock. Its popularity, observes a fashion writer in the New York Times, may be dimmed by monotony after many seasons, but it comes back with unfailing regularity. There is a certain clean-cut freshness about a frock of this sort that is becoming to everyone and makes it a delightful possession. It is almost as much an institution as the black gown in the wardrobe of the average American woman; and, judging from the number of intriguing models that emanate from Paris, the wearers are much in agreement as to preference in dress.

The one black gown in this day has many variants, and just now is one of the dominating conceptions. The polka dot, especially in blue and white and in black and white, belongs essentially to the summer outfit and it is very much in vogue this season in New York. All the possible combinations of color, with white as the background or in reverse order, are presented in the latest designs. There are crepes, silks, voiles and chiffons, printed in soft tones of brown or beige; green, blue or red, in all shades; with the two-color plan carried through the ensemble. These are charming, but the polka dot that commands enduring popularity is that in some color combined with white.

Curiously enough, the matter-of-fact polka dot is one of the few patterns relatively independent of quality for its dignity. Handsome satins and silks are embroidered in dots, large or small, and somehow have little the advantage of muslin, especially if it is one of clear blue and white or black and white muslins with trimmings or accessories in white and, this season, a dash of scarlet in addition. This naive design is being shown in countless variants, within obvious limitations, some built to answer the requirements of a more or less dress occasion, while others are simple utility warm-weather frocks.

The most popular model of the latter type is one in which plaid material and a polka-dot pattern are combined. This is extremely smart in frocks done in black and white or navy blue and white. One dress copied from the French original is made of crepe in blue and white polka dots, with a sounce of plain blue chiffon added to the bottom of the tunic in the scalloped line now so fashionable. This additional band is wide enough to give the effect of godets and is extremely graceful. Narrower bands of the plain goods are used to finish the sleeves, forming a flare cuff, and a jabot of the chiffon placed at the V-neck tapers, fluttering to the waistline.

Brown Velvet Ribbon Added

This model is proving especially attractive, for it may be varied in many charming ways as to arrangement of lines in handling the materials, as well as in combinations of color. A crepe de chine, with dots of havanna brown on a ground of sand color, is combined with brown georgette; and,

Top Coat of Checker Tweed is Smart for Sports Wear.

In this particular gown, brown velvet ribbon is added, with the ensemble completed by a hat of brown neapolitan.

The little trotteur or jumper frock of polka-dotted stuff is altogether chic, the kind that will be of great service all through the summer and practically for all the year. In some of these the entire dress is of the dotted material, usually crepe, and the skirt is frequently plaited, while the jumper or tunic is simply tailored. In others, the upper part of the suit is of plain goods, the skirt of the figured, finely plaited, or in reverse order.

The ingenuity with which these polka-dotted materials are handled is both interesting and amusing and taxes the skill of the designer. Some of the French designers use a pattern of polka dots printed in different sizes on the same piece of fabric, an idea that was anticipated by the manufacturers in advance of the season. This being a year for small patterns, the smaller the dot the smarter it is considered to be. But some very fashionable costumes from both French and American designers are in large dots—too large to be called dots. These are very effective in black and white, and even patterns which in colors would be flashy have a certain distinction in this combination.

One gown just brought out by an exclusive New York importer is of black georgette, with large spots of white, distributed in groups. This fabric, which was given a preliminary presentation last season, is much in vogue now and is made more striking by the addition of a contrasting color in plain sheer goods. In the crepe a model that is much liked is one in which the jumper tunic is of Brittany blue and white-dotted pattern, the short skirt of plain blue, laid in clusters of inverted plaids. The sleeves of this frock are long and cut to gather in a slight fullness at the wrist. Plain blue, in a band with upstanding battlements, is applied around the bottom of the tunic, and a collar, tie and narrow strap belt are also made of the plain blue.

The Craze for Red. With the present craze for red, some dashing frocks are made of scarlet and white polka dot materials—some all of one pattern, others very effectively combined with a plain color—and a few uncommon and original costumes are shown in which a touch of black is added, as bright red is used in the frocks of navy blue and white. This little splash or line of brilliant color, geranium, flame or coral, has the effect of quite transforming an otherwise commonplace polka dot gown.

In the general feeling for plaid fabrics this season, the bold plaids, figures and flower patterns have suffered eclipse, and most of the designs that are now in vogue are modest and concise, and in gentler tones. This background makes more striking the exception in checks, large plaids and stripes that are shown in models from some of the best houses. Black and white have inspired some very smart gowns and coats. The colors are combined to form large blocks in the arrangement of contrasts, most effective when done in satin.

The Kodier materials are displayed in some ultra-smart frocks and coats especially designed for sports and traveling, stuffs in which both Chanel and Chanel are having conspicuous success. One from Chanel—a long coat—is made of wool in reds and browns; and that from Chanel is in brown and beige, each of these wraps showing an enormous plaid pattern.

Among the frocks that are made of plaid materials, some in taffeta are fascinating in their quaintness. The first of this type were sent over by Yvonne in advance of our regular spring season and proved popular at once. Among these plaids are lovely combinations in cool greens with white and gold, copper and yellow, blues, grays and browns, the very type of design suggesting the old-fashioned dress with full skirt and wide sleeves. A somewhat fitted bodice and sometimes a kerchief are employed. It is a refreshing model that is attractive equally to youth and maturity.

Black-and-white, so very smart this season, is also charming in the plaids and checks of both worsted and silk. In the large patterns this combination has somewhat more dignity than the plaids in colors, and the small black and white checks. The shepherd plaid and others in various sizes of pattern are shown in some of the smartest models from France—Martail et Armand, Premet, Drecol, Paquin. Check patterns in black and white have always been liked by American women, and now that they are again modish, they will probably last through several seasons.

A new note in sleeves is the short cape which had such a long period of favor several seasons ago when the sleeve disappeared altogether. Long sleeves, so especially becoming in sheer goods, are still regarded as better style; but the short sleeve will be chosen for its comfort in warm weather.

BIG ENOUGH

HERE'LL come a time, it won't be long. When things begin to happen wrong: When stockings start to disappear, And other happenings as queer Will make you wonder now and then Where all your gloves are gone again. If now and then he misses one, He'll likely find it on his son; And even daughters have been known To wear the ties that fathers own. Yes, overshoes or dinner rings, They're big enough to wear your things.

There comes a time when you declare That Sonny's old enough to wear A dinner coat; and you decide To fill him full of joy and pride With yours. But, when you go to seek The coat, you hunt about a week. And wonder where that coat is gone— Then find that Sonny has it on. They seldom wait till someone brings. When big enough to wear your things.

And yet in this you often find A comfort of another kind: For children old enough to wear Your clothes are old enough to share A little of your burden, too— And how I hope your children do! When sons put on a man's attire, When daughters wear a woman's gayer, The man and woman that it brings Are big enough to help with things. (© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

As Told by Irvin S. Cobb

THERE'D BE AN UPRISING

THE revivalist was the mouthpiece of a new cult, an offshoot of an older denomination. In his interpretations of the Scriptures he saw no possible hope for any members of the human family who refused to accept his particular brand of religion, as distinguished from all the other brands.

Before an awe-struck congregation at a camp meeting he was describing what would come to pass with regard to those stiff-necked and perverse non-believers who were found outside his own fold on the day of judgment. "My brethren," he declared, "there is no middle course. By the word of the Holy Writ I have proved to you that mankind either must take the true doctrine as it has been expounded here or accept the awful consequences. I can close my eyes and see the awful picture right now."

Over there in shining robes stand the little group of the elect and the saved. And down below in the fiery pits of perdition millions of the unregenerate are roasting in the undying fires through all eternity while the millions of the devil heap hot coals upon their heads and give them molten lead when they beg for water to cool their parched tongues. That, my brethren, is what will come to pass."

From the body of the house a small elderly gentleman rose up. "Excuse me for interruptin'," he said "but there ain't no chance for such a thing to happen. Why, the people just natchally wouldn't stand for it."

"Purges" and "Physics" Bad for Old Folks

While Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, knew that constipation was the curse of advancing age, he did not believe that a "purge" or "physic" every little while was necessary.

To him, it seemed cruel that so many constipated old people had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to "regulate" the bowels of old folks. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but each dose helps to strengthen the

A resolution proposing an amendment to Art. 7, of the Constitution of the State of Texas by changing Section 3, eliminating the provision authorizing the Legislature to create special districts and making an appropriation therefor.
Be it Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Texas:
Section 1. That Section 3, Article 7, of the Constitution be so changed as to read as follows: (creating new Section.)
Section 3. One-fourth of the revenue derived from the State Occupation taxes and poll tax of one dollar on every inhabitant of the State, between the ages of twenty-one and sixty years, shall be set apart annually for the benefit of the public free schools; and in addition thereto, there shall be levied and collected an annual ad valorem State tax of such an amount not to exceed thirty-five cents on the one hundred ($100.00) dollars valuation, as with the available school fund arising from all other sources, will be sufficient to maintain and support the public schools of this State for a period of not less than six months in each year, and it shall be the duty of the State Board of Education to set aside a sufficient amount out of the said tax to provide free text books for the use of children attending the public free schools of this State; provided, however, that should the limit of taxation herein named be insufficient the deficit may be met by appropriation from the general funds of the State and the formation of school districts by general laws; and all such school districts may embrace parts of two or more counties, and the Legislature shall be authorized to pass laws for the assessment and collection of taxes in all said districts and for the management and control of the public school or schools of such districts, whether such districts are composed of territory wholly within a county or in parts of two or more counties, and the Legislature may authorize an additional ad valorem tax to be levied and collected within all school districts heretofore formed or hereafter formed, for the further maintenance of public free schools, and for the erection and equipment of school buildings therein; provided that a majority of the qualified property tax paying voters of the district voting at an election to be held for that purpose shall vote such tax not to exceed in any one year one ($1.00) dollar on the hundred dollars valuation of the property subject to taxation in such district, but the limitation upon the amount of school district tax herein authorized shall not apply to incorporate cities or towns constituting separate and independent school districts, nor to independent or common school districts created by general or special law.
