CHAMBER OF COMMERCE ELECT NEW DIRECTORS

Following a successful launching the first meeting of the Terrell County Chamber of Commerce was held on Thursday evening March 3 at the Kerr Hotel. Twenty-one members were in attendance. The organization was perfected and the following elected directors:

Joe Kerr, Judge G. J. Henshaw, Max Bogusch, Chester Smith, H. R. Laurence, Ed Downie and W. J. Ferguson.

In a quiet but effective way the Chamber hopes to accomplish many things which will be of lasting benefit. As a constructive unit in our social and business life it can do much good by uniting all of the people in Terrell County in a community spirit.

OBJECTS AND AIMS OF TERRELL COUNTY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

By Joe Kerr, President

In this article I am, without further comment, merely going to state the objects and aims of our organization taken in full from the constitution and by-laws:

To promote the general welfare of Terrell County and the citizenship thereof.

To foster and cultivate a genuine spirit of harmony and co-operation in all things.

To encourage the growth and development of Terrell County and Sanderson by all legitimate means.

To bring about the use and development of the unused and dormant resources of Sanderson, of Terrell County and tributary territory.

To assist in acquiring new industries for Sanderson and Terrell County and in enlarging those already located here.

To contribute to the fuller development of civic improvements, city beautification and community improvements in Sanderson.

To seek to extend the trade territory of Sanderson and Terrell County and help to more fully utilize that now held.

To assist in conserving public health.

To promulgate the doctrine of true Americanism and to serve our government faithfully at all times.

To advertise the resources of Terrell County and of Sanderson, and to give reliable information relative thereto to all inquirers.

These are self-explanatory. Each contains possibilities of which if even a small percentage can be worked into action it will result in Sanderson and Terrell County being a better place wherein to live.

If any one has something to suggest, a call or letter will be appreciated, even if not a member, outlining what in their opinion might be done towards improving things or perhaps contribute to the welfare, comfort and prosperity of our citizens.

Notice!

On and after March 21, the Electric Process Laundry will be operated by Mrs. Myrtle Taylor. We take this opportunity to thank our friends and patrons for the support and co-operation they have given us, and we hope the same good will and patronage will prevail in the future, for Mrs. Taylor who is well known in Sanderson.

TEXAS NEWS IN PARAGRAPHS

The strawberry movement is getting under way at Alvin with a rush.

With an output of $350,000,000 per annum, the mineral resources of Texas are as yet in an early stage of development.

Galveston building permits for the month of February amounting to $217,083.50 brought the total for the year up to $803,746.

Miss Ruth Mimms of Austin has been named assistant secretary of the state highway commission. The office is newly created.

San Angelo, at the junction of three Concho rivers, within the last seven years has doubled its population, now estimated at 20,000.

It cost $768,714.45 to run the city of Houston in February, according to the monthly report just completed by H. A. Giles, city controller.

The Taylor-Coupland Highway to the Williamson County line has been completed, making an excellent gravel road for about 10 miles out of Taylor.

Credit of 12 per cent to be deducted from the final fire insurance rate has been granted Wichita Falls because of a good fire record for the past three years.

In line with other moves for civic improvement made at Alvin, women of the community have gone on record to make Alvin a city of beautiful homes.

Kerrville's 1927 building program is getting away to a good start. Construction costing approximately $100,000 has been started in Kerrville since February 1.

Customs district collections at Galveston for the current fiscal year to date amount to $5,965,004.88 as compared with $4,929,451.46 for the same period last year.

With $12,000 as their goal, the realty board of Harlingen will soon launch a drive to raise funds for the Harlingen Chamber of Commerce during the present year.

Gain of 4,196 producing wells was registered by West Texas pools during 1926. There were 15,291 producing wells in the district on January 1, 1947 on December 31.

At the conclusion of this year's session of the University of Texas there will be approximately 250 students seeking positions as teachers, according to present indications.

Receipts of the state from oil and gas royalties and from payment on lands sold total $3,605,359 for the first six months of the fiscal year, J. T. Robison, state land commissioner, announced this week.

A survey of outstanding allotments of state highway aid has shown that it will be possible for the state highway commission to cancel at least $4,000,000 of so-called allotments, it was learned Friday.

Capitol reservation lands, a tract of 3,000,000 acres set aside by Texas for a capitol building when it was annexed to the United States, are now playing their part in the agricultural and petroleum development of the Panhandle country.

That all of East Texas is interested in the success of the first annual convention of the East Texas Chamber of Commerce to be held in Tyler April 20 and 21 is evidenced by the spirit of co-operation which has been manifested by the several cities in the Tyler section.

The deed to a 50-acre tract near Mineral Wells, donated by the Mineral Wells Chamber of Commerce to the state to be used as a site for the Texas National Guard encampment, was signed by Brig. Gen. Jake Wolters of the guard and Attorney General Claude Pollard recently.

Though the potato acreage in the Lower Rio Grande Valley has been doubled this season, reaching a total of 14,000 acres, the production will not exceed that of last year more than 20 per cent, according to a report made public by the Rio Grande Potato Growers Association.

Mobilization for the joint Army maneuvers to be held in the San Antonio center during May will commence about April 15, when the Fourth Field Artillery, less one battalion, of Fort McIntosh will proceed to Fort Sam Houston to report to the corps area commander in connection with the maneuvers.

Dates for the State American Legion Convention in Houston were set for July 4, 5 and 6 at a meeting of the state executive committee in Austin recently.

Operations of the state prison system for 1926 showed a loss of $598,422, according to the annual report of the board of prison commissioners which was received by members of the legislature recently. These figures were supplied by Halsey Davis, chief accountant, who reported that "one item of $206,673 charged to profit and loss represents depreciation on live stock which had not been adjusted until this year."

On April 5 the voters of La Grange will vote upon a proposed bond issue of $5,000 for drainage purposes.

Menace to Journalism in Commercialism of the Press of the Nation

By DON C. SEITZ, Outlook Editorial Staff.

STRIKING the popular chord has become one of the menaces in journalism. Big interests buy up groups of papers, and they are run according to a formula. Commercialism has come into play by which newspapers are captured and submerged. No woman will buy anything now unless she sees it widely advertised in the papers. This condition does not dominate the paper in morals, but it puts upon its physical side such a load that the intellectual side becomes smaller. The submergence of the daily press and the equal leanness of the cultural press mark a different path.

The press has no means of reaching the vacant mind, unless you make it feel that there is something higher than the baseball score to read, and that the age you live in is always the golden age.

The only real criticism that prevails in America today is that we are too slow. Every precaution has been taken to reduce thinking to its lowest. We have become a nation of button pushers, and we forget that under all this convenience is a vast servitude. The public relies upon the clergyman, the teacher and the editor to do the thinking it won't do. The editor has the most difficult tasks in some respects. He has to coax subscribers, entertain them by all kinds of things, and he does this frequently in the dark. The cultural publication has to reach a public widely scattered, but it is the saving grace in the making of American journalism.

Too Many Seem to Have Lost Sense of Their Relationship to God

By REV. RALPH W. SOCKMAN, Methodist Episcopal.

Too many persons are spiritual orphans. Our sense of relationship to God is like that of a lad whose parents had died before the boy was old enough to know them. The orphan knows from pictures on his wall and the accounts which he has heard that his parents had lived, but he has not the joy of their companionship.

Likewise, many people believe that there was a God who created the universe and that there was a Jesus who lived in Galilee, but they have no feeling of personal relationship.

To such persons Christmas is a second-hand affair, like the impersonal festivity arranged for orphan children by some institution.

The spontaneous joy and personal devotion which characterized apostolic religion are missing in so many of our churches today. Just as the adult goes through the same motions, but not the same emotions as does the child at the appearance of that bewhiskered gentleman called Santa Claus, so the modern churchman goes through the same motions, but not the same emotions as did the first-century follower of Christ.

Formalized and organized religion has lost so much of its lift and thrill. It is as if we had kept the words of the Hallelujah chorus without the music.

First Five Years of Life Really Determine Mental Condition of the Adult

By PROF. ARNOLD GESELL, Director Yale Psycho-Clinic.

The first five years of a child's life have more weight in determining the mental condition of the adult than any equal length of time from the age of five to twenty-four.

By making extensive studies of a number of children from the age of one month to five years, and discovering what most children are able to do at a given age, it will be possible to lay down rules as to what a normal child's reaction is.

When we have established these rules, we will be able, by testing children in the light of them, to discover whether or not a child is normal, subnormal or above normal.

It is our hope to gather a great deal of knowledge of child life and to apply it in remedying the children who need special training during the very early years of their lives. It is then that they are more plastic. We do not believe that all the mental weaknesses of later life are predestined. We believe that they are, to some extent at least, plastic; that it is largely a matter of proper regulation and habit formation in the pre-school period.

Nation Must Have Better Parents Before It Can Have Better Children

By L. A. PECHSTEIN, Dean of University of Cincinnati.

We shall have better children when we are better parents. Human nature changes not and all education is as water passing through a sieve so far as nature's biological mandate is concerned.

The tangible things of our evolving civilization, such as industry, custom, literature, law, home, invention, et al, change, and in adjusting to these, youth seems different.

Society's major institutions for shaping character have been first, the home, second, that of work. Formerly tied together, now hopelessly separated, a void is created which literally cannot be filled.

If a home is always a place where the companions of one's children are welcome; if it exists for their wholesome enjoyment; if parents can enter into the group sports and activities with a pleasure belying their years; if they seek ways of keeping their children unsophisticated as long as possible so that all the thrills of life may not become exhausted while the juvenile still exists, then energies, which will out, become directed into channels worthy of approval.

Apathy of Public Opinion Over Crime Conditions Must Be Overcome

By NEWTON D. BAKER, Ex-Secretary of War.

Less maudlin sympathy by the public for criminals and more sympathy with law enforcement are needed to control crime conditions. Today, instead of making the world safe for democracy, we must make our cities safe to live in. To do this we must organize public opinion to overcome apathy for crime conditions and the maudlin sympathy displayed for the criminal.

There must be more sympathy for the victim of the criminal, for the police, the prosecutor and the judge who bend their efforts to bring him to justice.

Crime in this country can be curbed only when there is adequate legislation by all states and the federal government to regulate the sale and distribution of all firearms.

FOR EMERGENCY AND DEFICIENCY NEEDS

Appropriations Totalling More Than $3,000,000 Passed by House and Senate.

Austin, Tex.—Emergency and deficiency appropriations totaling slightly more than $3,000,000 for state institutions and departments are provided in bills passed to date in the house and senate.

Both houses passed the $1,060,628.21 bill to finance needs of state educational and eleemosynary institutions, departments and higher judiciary from now until the end of the fiscal year, August 31. The lower house also ground out and sent to the senate appropriation measures as follows: Prison system debts and operating expenses for remainder of the fiscal year, $1,609,080.03. Deficiencies in the livestock sanitary department, health department, Texas Technological College, A. & M. College building repairs and the comptroller's department, $189,921.28. Deficiencies in operation of the lower judicial system, $63,629.99. Both houses wrote into the first bill $35,000 additional appropriation each for eradication of root rot and plant diseases. The house also amended its bill to carry a total of about $30,000 to pay back taxes for four years on the prison farms in Fort Bend and Brazoria counties. Texas Technological College figured prominently in the appropriations. For deficiencies it got $25,000 contingent expenses, $45,000 for administration fund, $20,000 for departmental maintenance. In the emergency appropriations it got $5,000 for fuel, light, heat and power, $61,262 to pay teachers and employees already engaged, and $47,350 for summer school.

Congress Adjourns. Washington, D. C.—In writing its legislative history Friday, the Sixty-ninth congress placed upon the statute books a number of major laws, but it will pass on to its successor many perplexing problems. In its two years of office it eased the nation's tax burden by nearly $400,000,000; approved foreign debt settlements aggregating $3,000,000,000, and expanded the country's defense forces by air and by sea. Chief among the administration bills to fail of passage was the $93,000,000 deficiency measure, carrying important money allotments for the army, for veterans' loans and seed loans to farmers and for pension increases.

George M. Bailey Honored. Houston, Tex.—Forty-five years of eminent journalistic service were crowned for Colonel George M. Bailey Friday night, when his friends gathered to pay him tribute in a testimonial banquet at the Rice Hotel. From his home city of Houston they came; from other cities in the state, and other states in the union; more than 800 substantial citizens heaped high before the veteran editor of the Post-Dispatch, for his writing brilliance and editorial ability, flowers of admiration and love.

Plea to Cut Cotton Acreage. Austin, Tex.—A plea to the farmers of the state to plant at least 25 per cent less cotton this year than they did last year has been issued by George B. Terrell, state commissioner of agriculture. Terrell also stresses the need for a marketing organization to enable farmers to have cotton properly classed, stapled and "sold collectively."

Counties Exempt Certain Fish. Austin, Tex.—Fishermen in about 40 Texas counties, situated mainly in the central western region, can take carp, shad and related fish during July, August and September, with seines. A bill to amend the law to exempt these counties, passed by the Legislature, was signed Friday by Gov. Moody.

La Porte Road Contract Let. Houston, Tex.—The first contract under the $7,000,000 road building program of Harris County has been let to a Fort Worth company, who agrees to build seventeen miles of concrete highway to La Porte for $506,857.87, plus a $6,000 bonus for completion of the project in 200 days.

Rail Commission Pay Boosted. Austin, Tex.—Increases of $2000 each in the salaries of the railroad commissioners were approved by the senate Friday when it passed a bill by Senator Bledsoe amending the present law.

Search Law Bill Killed. Austin, Tex.—The Woodward bill to repeal the search and seizure law which finally passed in the senate after overcoming strong opposition, was killed in the house Friday.

Charges Against Daugherty Dropped. New York.—The jury in the Daugherty-Miller trial Friday found Thomas W. Miller, former alien custodian, guilty of conspiracy, but disagreed on a verdict for Harry M. Daugherty, former attorney general.

Texas Lawmaker Found Dead. Austin, Tex.—Representative A. J. Durham of Sabinal was found dead in his room Friday, presumably a victim of a heart attack.

Safe Now When Others Come Close!

The Secret of Keeping a Perspiring Body Sweet

Do you know why thousands of people who never have to take a laxative, do eat a candy cascara now and then?

They have found that cascara sweetens the whole system—brings an immaculacy of person that means everything. It prevents bodily chemistry from ever making one unconsciously offensive to others. And what a perfect regulator of the bowels!

Salts affect the lining of the bowels. Mineral oils leave a coating that the blood must carry off through the pores. How much better to cascade the system, and cause the bowels to expel everything by normal muscular contraction! To say nothing of the cleaner, sweeter condition that lasts for days—a wholesome condition that makes the use of deodorants quite unnecessary in January or July! Men and women whose years have brought on sluggishness often find that a cascara only once a week is all the tonic they need.

Cascara is splendid for children, too, and they love the taste of this candy laxative which every drugstore has for 10c and 25c.

"ONE DANCE used to undo all my precautions for personal daintiness. All waste in my system seemed to come out through the pores. Today, I don't worry; I keep clean all through, with just occasional use of—

The GIRL in the MIRROR

STORY FROM THE START

Laurie Devon, successful playwright, but somewhat inclined to wildness, attends the wedding of his sister, Barbara, to whom has been left the great Devon fortune. He had been a young chap, but for the last year he has been losing the mark, through the efforts of Barbara. Laurie, who is wealthy, refuses to settle down to work, announcing his intention of resting and seeking adventure.

Laurie grinned, and the grin infuriated Bangs. He whirled away from it. A footstool impeded his progress, and he kicked it out of the way with large abandon. It was his habit to rush about a room when he was talking excitedly. He rushed about now; and Laurie lit a cigarette and watched him, at first angrily, then with a growing tolerance born of memories of scenes in their plays which Bangs had thrashed out in much the same manner. The world could never be wholly uninteresting while Rodney pranced about in it, cutting the air with gestures like that.

"Here I am," snapped Rodney, "ready with my play, the best plot I've had yet. You won't let me even mention it to you. Here's the new season. Here's Epstein, sitting on our doormat with a check-book in each hand, waiting to put on anything we give him. You know he's lost a small fortune this fall. You know it's up to us to give him a play that will pull him out of the hole he's in. Here's Haxton, the best director in town, marking time and holding off other managers in the hope that you and I will get down to business. And here you are, the fellow we're all counting on—" He stopped for breath and adjectives.

"Yes," Laurie politely prompted him. "Here I am. What about it? What am I doing?"

"You know d-d well what you're doing. You're loafing!" Bangs fired the word at him as if it were a shell from a Big Bertha. "You're loafing till it makes us all sick to look at you. We thought a week or two of it would be enough, when you realized the conditions; but it's gone on for a month; and instead of getting tired, you're getting more and more into the loafing habit. You abuse time till it shrieks in agony."

"Good sentence," applauded Laurie. "But don't waste it on me. Put it into a play."

Bangs seemed not to hear him. He was standing by the room's one window, now, staring unseeing out of it, his hands deep in his pockets, taking in the knowledge of the failure of his appeal. Under the realization of this, he tossed a final taunt over his shoulder.

hands still in his pockets, stared dependently at his outstretched legs. "That's all it means to you," he went on, morosely. "Our partnership is one in a thousand. It's based on friendship as well as on financial interest. If I do my bit, it represents a combination of brains, ability, backing and prospects that comes only once in a lifetime, if it comes at all. Yet in one year you're sick of it, and tired of work. You're ready to throw it all over, and to throw over at the same time the men whose interests are bound up with yours. You're dawdling in cabarets and roadhouses and restaurants, when you might be doing work—" Bangs' voice capitalized the word—"real work," he added fiercely, "work other fellows would give their souls to be able to do."

He ended on a flat note, oddly unlike his usual buoyant tones, and sat still as if everything had been said. Laurie lit a fresh cigarette, drew in a mouthful of smoke, and exhaled it in a series of pretty rings. In his brief college experience he had devoted some time to acquiring this art. Admiringly watching the little rings pass through the big rings, he spoke with studied carelessness.

"It was a pretty good scene, Bangs," he said. "And it showed careful re-hearsing. But it would be a lot more effective if you had a real situation to base it on. As it is, you're making a devil of a row about nothing. I worked like a horse all last year, and you know it. Now I'm resting, or loafing, if you prefer to call it that, and—"

—he bit off the words and fairly threw them at his friend—"it will save you and Epstein and Haxton a lot of mental wear and tear if you will mind your own business and let me alone."

Bangs raised his eyes and dropped them again. "You are our business," he somberly reminded his partner. "I've got so I can't work without you," he added, with a humility new to him. "You know that. And you know I've got the plot. It's ready—great Scott, it's boiling in me! I'm crazy to get it out. And here I've got to sit around watching you kill time, while you know and I know that you'd be a d-d sight happier if you were on the job. Good Lord, Laurie, work's the biggest thing there is in life! Doesn't it mean anything at all to you?"

"Not just now," Laurie spoke with maddening nonchalance. "Then there's something rotten in you."

Laurie winced, but made no answer. He hoped Bangs would go on talking and thus destroy the echo of his last words, with which the silent room seemed filled. But nothing came. Rodney's opportunity had passed, and he was lost in depressed realization of his failure. Laurie strolled back to the mirror, his forgotten tie dangling in his hand.

"We'll let it go at that," he said then. "Think things over, and make up your mind what you want to do about the contract."

turn to town; and all for what? He himself had brought out of the foolish experience nothing save a tired nervous system, a sense of boredom such as he had not known for a year, and, especially when he looked at Bangs, an acute mental discomfort which introspective persons would probably have diagnosed as the pangs of conscience. Laurie did not take the trouble to diagnose it. He merely resented it as a grievance added to the supreme grievance based on the fact that he had not yet even started on the high adventure he had promised himself.

He was gloomily considering both grievances, and tying his tie with his usual care, when something in the mirror caught and held his attention. He looked at it, at first casually, then with growing interest. In the glass, directly facing him, was a wide studio window. It was open, notwithstanding the cold January weather, and a comfortable, middle-aged, plump woman, evidently a superior type of caretaker, was sitting on the sill, polishing an inner pane. The scene was as vivid as a mirage, and it was like the mirage in that it was projected from some point which itself remained unseen.

Laurie turned to the one window the dressing-room afforded—a double French window, at his right, but a little behind him, and reaching to the floor. Through this he could see across a court the opposite side of his own building, but no such window or commonplace vision as had just come to him. In his absorption in the phenomenon he called to Bangs, who rose slowly, and, coming to his side, regarded the scene without much interest.

"It's a cross projection from a house diagonally opposite us," he said, after studying the picture a moment. "It must be that old red studio building on the southwest corner of the square. If we had a room back of this and looking toward the west, we could see the real window."

"As it is," said Laurie, "we've got a reserved seat for an intimate study of any one who lives there. I wonder who has that studio?"

Bangs had no idea. He was grateful to the little episode, however, for spreading over the yielding ground beneath his feet the solid strip on which he had crossed back to his chum. He threw an arm across Laurie's shoulders and looked into his face, with something in his expression that reminded young Devon of a favorite colt he had loved and lost in boyhood.

"All right now?" the look asked, just as the dog's look had asked it of the little chap of ten, when something had gone wrong. Rodney's creed of life was held together by a few primitive laws, the first of which was loyalty. Already he was reproaching himself for what he had said and done. Laurie carefully completed the tying of his tie, and turned to him with his gayest smile.

"Hurry up and finish dressing," he cheerfully suggested, "and we'll go out to breakfast. Since you insist on waiting round for me like Mary's little lamb, I suppose I've got to feed you."

Rodney's wide grin responded, for the first time in many days. He hustled about, completing his toilet, and ten minutes later the two young men started out together with a lightness of spirit which each enjoyed and neither wholly understood. Both had a healthy horror of "sentimental stuff" and a gay, normal disregard of each other's feelings in ordinary intercourse. But in the past half-hour, for the first time in their association, they had come close to a serious break, and the soul of each had been chilled by a premonitory loneliness as definite as the touch of an icy finger.

In the quick reaction they experienced now their spirits soared exultantly. They breakfasted in a fellowship such as they had not known since Barbara's marriage the month before. If Bangs had indulged in any dream of a change of life in Laurie, however, following this reconciliation, the next few days destroyed the tender shoots of that hope. Laurie's manner retained its pleasant camaraderie, but work and he met as strangers and passed each other by. The routine of his days remained what they had been during the past five weeks. He gadded about, apparently harmlessly, came home at shocking hours, and spent most of the bracing January days wrapped in a healthful slumber that infuriated Bangs, who wandered in and out of their apartment like an unhappy ghost. On the rare occasions when he and Rodney lunched or dined together, Laurie was entirely good-humored and when Epstein was with them seemed wholly impervious to any hints thrown out, none too subtly, by his producing partner.

"Listen, Laurie," said that disgusted individual, almost a month after the new year had been ushered in, "the new year's here. That's a good time for a young fella to get busy again on somethin' worth while. Ain't I right?"

Laurie suppressed a yawn and carefully struck off with his little finger the firm ash of an excellent cigarette. He was consuming thirty or forty cigarettes a day, and his nerves were beginning to show the effect of this indulgence.

"I believe it is," he courteously agreed. "It has been earnestly recommended to the young as a good time to start something."

"Well," Epstein's voice took on the guttural notes of his temperamental nature. "I believe it is," he courteously agreed. "It has been earnestly recommended to the young as a good time to start something."

"Not yet," he said. "Not till I've had my adventure."

"The greatest adventure in life," he stated dogmatically, "is to make a lot of money. I tell you why. Because then you get all the other adventures you can handle, trying to hold on to it."

Bangs, who was developing a new and hitherto unsuspected vein of tact, encouraged Epstein to enlarge on this congenial theme. He now fully realized that Devon would go his own gait until he wearied of it, and that argument or persuasion could enter his armor-clad mind. The position of Bangs was a difficult one, for while he was accepting and assimilating this unpleasant fact, Epstein and Haxton—impetuous men by temperament and without much training in self-control—were getting wholly out of patience and therefore out of hand. Haxton, indeed, was for the time entirely out of hand, for he had finally started the rehearsal of a new play which, he grimly informed Bangs, would make "The Man Above" look like a canceled postage stamp.

Bangs repeated the comment to his chum the next morning, during the late dressing-room which now gave them almost their only opportunity for a few words together. He had hoped it would make an impression, and he listened with pleasure to a sharp exclamation from Laurie, who chanced to be standing before the door mirror in the dressing-room, brushing his hair. The next instant Bangs realized that it was not his news which had evoked the tribute of that exclamation.

"Come here," called Laurie, urgently. "Here's something new; and, by Jove, isn't she a beauty?"

Bangs interrupted his toilet to lounge across the room. Looking over Laurie's shoulder, his eyes found the cynosure that held the gaze of his friend. The wide-open studio window was again reflected in the mirror, but with another occupant.

This was a girl, young and lovely. She appeared in the window like a half-length photograph in a frame. Her body showed only from above the waist. Her elbows were on the sill. Her chin rested in the hollows of her cupped hands. Her wavy hair, parted on one side and drawn softly over the ears in the fashion of the season, was reddish-gold. Her eyes were brown, and very thoughtful. Down-dropped, they seemed to stare at something on the street below, but the girl's expression was not that of one who was looking at an object with interest. Instead, she seemed lost in a deep and melancholy abstraction.

Laurie, a hair-brush in each hand, stared hard at the picture. "Isn't she charming!" he cried again. Bangs' reply revealed a severely practical side of his nature. "She'll have a beauty cold in the head if she doesn't shut that window," he grumpily suggested. But his interest, too, was aroused. He stared at the girl in the mirror with an attention almost equal to Laurie's.

Who is this girl in the mirror?

Last Echo of Fort Dearborn Tragedy

Mrs. Mary Robinson Rager

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

TRY to picture a simple little frame house standing on the wooded shores of a lazily-flowing stream only a few miles from a great city where the roar and clatter of traffic never ceases day or night. But out here these sounds are muffled and lost in the rippling of the stream and the murmur of the wind in the branches of the elms and maples around the house. There sits a gray-haired woman, eyes dimmed and head bowed by the weight of nearly a hundred years, dreaming perhaps of the long ago when her father's people ruled a wilderness into which but few white men had dared to venture.

That was the picture which you might have seen until recently in the Cook county forest preserve near Chicago where Mrs. Mary Robinson Rager, daughter of Alexander Robinson or Chee-Chu-Pin-Quay, chief of the Pottawatomi, Chippewa and Ottawa, made her home for more than three-quarters of a century. The other day she slipped quietly into endless sleep and her death snapped the last link between the modern metropolis, Chicago, and the little stockaded Fort Dearborn from which it sprang. It was the last echo, too, of the Fort Dearborn massacre, a frontier tragedy which in the history of the Middle West is curiously analogous to the Fort William Henry massacre in the East, which forms the climax in Cooper's "Last of the Mohicans."

For her father, Alexander Robinson, was one of the friendly Pottawatomi chiefs whose friendship for the whites saved that bloody affair from being one of utter horror. Robinson himself was a half-breed, the son of a Scotch trader and an Ottawa Indian woman, who was born at Mackinac, Mich., in 1789. He made his home with his mother's people and saw the Ottawa and other confederated tribes crushed by "Mad Anthony" Wayne at the Battle of Fallen Timbers in 1794. Although he was only five years old at the time Robinson retained a vivid recollection of what he saw on that memorable occasion and in his later years often told his thrilling story to his white friends. Later he married a Pottawatomi woman and became a chief of that tribe.

At the outbreak of the War of 1812 Robinson was living near Fort Dearborn, which had been built on the present site of Chicago in 1803. He had formed a fast friendship with John Kinzie, often called "the father of Chicago," a trader and silversmith who settled near Fort Dearborn in 1804, and it was this friendship which probably influenced him to play the role which he did on the fateful day of August 15, 1812.

For some time previous to the massacre the little garrison commanded by Capt. Nathan Heald had been alarmed by various hostile acts of the Indians who were hanging around the post, but affairs did not become threatening until the middle of the summer. Then on August 9 Heald received orders from General Hull at Detroit to evacuate the post, destroy the arms and ammunition, distribute the stores from the government factory among the friendly Indians and proceed to Fort Wayne, Ind. Although Heald realized fully how perilous the execution of this order would be, he had no other choice but to obey. So the evacuation of the fort was planned for August 15.

Fort Dearborn

John H. Kinzie

Chief Alexander Robinson

In the meantime Capt. William Wells, a famous frontiersman who had scouted for Wayne, hastened to Dearborn from Fort Wayne with 15 friendly Miami Indians to escort Heald's command to the post in Indiana. Wells' favorite niece, Rebekah Wells, was Heald's wife, and Wells, knowing well the temper of the Indians around Fort Dearborn, was willing to risk his life, if need be.

The day before the evacuation the goods were distributed among the Indians who had begun to swarm around the post as soon as the news that it was to be abandoned had spread, but all of the extra ammunition and a large store of whisky were destroyed. Although it is virtually certain that Heald's command would have been attacked anyway, this destruction so infuriated the Indians that the garrison's doom was sealed then and there. That evening Black Partridge, a friendly Pottawatomi chief, came to Heald and warned him that his young warriors were bent on mischief and that he probably could not restrain them from attack on the morrow. But it was too late then to turn back.

The next morning there issued forth from the fort "the saddest procession Michigan avenue has ever known"—the garrison of Fort Dearborn marching to what they realized was their death. At the head of the column rode Captain Wells, his face painted black in anticipation of his fate. Next came the regular soldiers and in the rear, in wagons, rode the women and children, guarded by the citizens who lived near the fort and who had been enrolled by Heald as militia. A mile and a half south of the fort the Indians, hidden among the sand hills, attacked. The struggle was brief, but in the short time it lasted there were deeds of heroism which would fill volumes.

When the battle was over, 25 regular soldiers, 12 militia, 2 women and 12 children were dead and the remainder were in the hands of the Indians as prisoners. Captain Heald had surrendered to Black Bird, the principal Pottawatomi chief, when he saw that further resistance was useless and would mean the death of all after they were overcome. Both he and his wife were badly wounded. Some of the prisoners were tortured to death that night and others saved for ransom. Among the latter were Captain and Mrs. Heald, because the Indians realized that they could demand a large sum of money for the commander, and they were turned over to Alexander Robinson.

The next day their captors set out for the St. Joseph river in Michigan where the Healds were left in the custody of a few Indians while the other Indians sped away to take part in an attack on Fort Wayne. In their absence, a chance to escape presented itself.

Alexander Robinson was prevailed upon to conduct them to Mackinac in his birchbark canoe, for which service Heald was to pay him a hundred dollars. Disregarding the danger to himself when his tribesmen returned and found that their prisoners had escaped, Robinson, accompanied by his wife, set out on the 300-mile journey. They paddled the entire length of Lake Michigan and after 16 days arrived at Mackinac where the Healds were turned over to the British commander, Captain Roberts. They were treated kindly and eventually paroled and allowed to return to their home in Louisville, Ky.

The Indians had burned Fort Dearborn after the massacre, but it was rebuilt in 1816. Robinson again made his home near the fort and became known as a steadfast friend of the whites. At the outbreak of the Winnebago war in 1827 it was due to his efforts and to those of two other Pottawatomi chiefs, Shabbona and Sauganash (Billy Caldwell), that the Pottawatomies did not join the Winnebagoes and attack Fort Dearborn.

Again in 1832 Robinson held his tribesmen in check when they would have joined Black Hawk, the Sac leader, in his war against the whites. Instead of turning hostile, Robinson and some of his warriors served as scouts for the armies of General Atkinson and General Henry which finally subdued Black Hawk. Robinson served as interpreter for Gen. Lewis Cass at the treaty with the Chippewas in 1820 and his name appears on the two treaties of Prairie du Chien of 1829 and 1834.

By these treaties the sum of $5,000 was granted to Robinson for his services to the whites and each of his children, a son and two daughters, was given $400. In addition he was given a large tract of land on the Desplaines river near Chicago and there he lived until his death in 1872. His wife and son died the next year and the land came into the possession of his daughter, Mary Robinson, who had married Francis Rager, a trader.

Later the principal part of the land was purchased by Cook county to be used as a forest preserve, but ten acres, including the plot where her father, mother and brother are buried, were reserved for her during her lifetime. There she had lived for the last 75 years on the border of civilization but utterly apart from it. During all her lifetime she never rode in a street car or automobile and during the last 30 years of it she never visited the city of Chicago. There in the tiny fragment of the wilderness that had once been, she lived in the forgotten past until her death on January 8, 1927, closed forever the last chapter of Indian history in the old Northwest.

tributes his longevity to a diet of rice and eels. This restricted and gentle regimen may seem somewhat strange to his Japanese compatriots, but to westerners with a fondness for health foods it must be quite acceptable. Eels are surely full of vitamins, and even if they are not, the civilization that fell for Metchnikoff's sour buttermilk cannot find anything outlandish in an eel-rice dietary.

Sparks of genius have nothing in common with love making.

Better Than Farce

The commercial traveler found himself stranded in a manufacturing town in Lancashire and decided to visit the local music hall. He found the place closed, however. On the way home he happened to pass a large hall whence issued roar after roar of hilarious laughter. He walked up to the entrance and inquired of the doorkeeper what was taking place.

Thinks Tanlac Great Tonic

Mrs. J. P. Ming, almost crippled in left arm and knee, now supple and free from pain. Gained 10 lbs. and feels much better in every way. Give Tanlac credit for a work.

"I had a worn-out, no-account feeling," said Mrs. Ming, of 2913 Junius Street, Dallas, Texas. "I was hardly able to drag myself around. At times I could not bend my left arm, owing to stiffness and pain. Nor could I straighten my left knee. My husband, knowing that Tanlac had helped me once before, brought home some more and urged me to take it.

"All the old nauseating sensation soon left me. My appetite picked up and my digestion improved. Dizzy spells which used to frighten me, stopped altogether. I've gained 10 lbs. and am now completely free of all pain, swelling or stiffness. I'm not troubled with the old biliousness either. Tanlac banished all my suffering, and did it in a surprisingly short time. I think Tanlac is one of the greatest tonics in the world."

Are you feeling below par? Try Tanlac. Nature's own remedy made from herbs, roots and barks. Your druggist has it. Over 52 million bottles sold.

LUMBER CAMP SONGS INNOCENT DITTIES

Writer Traces History of Ancient Tunes.

Montreal.—Coincident with the decision of the Quebec government to appoint a committee of prominent men to study the speech of the French-Canadians with a view to putting a quietus once and forever on the slender opinions of tourists who believe, from contact with cab drivers and others, that the only language in French-Canada is a jargon of French and English, comes the publication by Mr. J. Murray Gibbon of Montreal of translations of thirty of the songs of French-Canada.

Instead of the swaggering, blustering, devil-may-care lumberjack and river driver singing songs best heard in deserted districts of the forest and river, the secret is out at last, namely, that the songs most sung by these lumberjacks are in reality children's songs in the main, brought over from France hundreds of years ago, and the first white man's music to be heard in North America.

Traces Old Tunes. "Canadian Folk Songs, Old and New," the book just published by Mr. Gibbon through Dutton & Co., New York, not only is an education to lovers of music who gain some idea of the spirit in the songs, but it contains a somewhat lengthy treatise on the history of the music. The translator believes that some of the tunes date back to the Twelfth century, others corresponding to those in the Tudor and Stuart periods in England. Strangest of all, it is stated that the tune of the famous old Scotch song, "Ye Banks and Braes o' Bonnie Doon," was discovered in a Seventeenth century manuscript in France.

"En Roulant Ma Boule," one of the favorite French Canadian songs was originally sung by French children at play-rolling balls. Another colorful selection has to do with a French trapper who saved the lives of his companions when threatened by the Iroquois, at the expense of his own. When his body was found, beside it lay a poem written in blood.

Purest of French. The Quebec government points out that the purest of French is spoken by prominent French Canadians, even purer than that in France, and this book by Mr. Gibbon will no doubt also dissipate another mistaken impression that the simple French pastourelles were of questionable merit, held by people who are unable to read French.

Wild Horse Elimination Sought by Cattle Men

San Francisco.—The last of their type, wild horses of the once "wild" West are becoming victims of a campaign of extermination, because of their encroachments on civilization.

Thousands of these wild mustangs, descendants of those used by Indians, before the advent of the white man in the West, have roamed in small bands from their mountain wilderness into sparsely settled country to prey upon the grass of cattle and sheep ranges.

Stockmen, co-operating with forest rangers, have formed wild horse hunting parties, with the result that in Utah recently more than 1,000 were eliminated and in Nevada a campaign netted 1,238.

In the north coast section of California the wild horse problem has become so serious a conference has been called to outline plans for extermination. Similar action has been taken in Idaho and Montana. The horses are declared to be of no economic worth and their elimination of decided value to cattle and sheepmen.

Wisconsin "U" Leads With 40,450 Students

Madison, Wis.—Wisconsin university leads the universities of the country in service. If figures in the current issue of a magazine devoted to education are correct, more individuals are now receiving instruction in and from the Badger Institution than in other universities or colleges in the United States.

The Wisconsin state school, with a total of 40,450 students, including 8,220 full-time resident and 32,130 extension students, is well ahead of its nearest competitor, Columbia university of New York city, where there are 37,734 students.

The University of California ranks second to Wisconsin in the number of extension students, but has less than half the Wisconsin number in that branch. The western state leads all the others in full-time students registration, with 17,101.

Fruit Growers of Ozarks Will Have Banner Year

Kansas City, Mo.—Fruit growers in the Ozark mountains are to have one of the greatest years on record, according to report of one of the principal fruit growers' associations. More than 20,000 acres of strawberries will be under cultivation and from 2,500 to 3,000 carloads of berries are expected to be shipped to the city markets. Officers also stated that about 2,000 carloads of grapes would be shipped this year.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

MARY GRAHAM BONNER

CURING THE DOG

"Oh, you poor little doggie," exclaimed Dorothy.

She and Douglas were on their way home from school.

"What is the matter?" asked Douglas, who had been looking at some skates in a shop window.

"The doggie is hurt," said Dorothy, who, by this time, was almost weeping. "What shall we do?"

"Uncle John told me," said Douglas, "that there was a place to ask people what to do with animals that were hurt—a society that looks after sick animals."

And, as luck would have it, Douglas and Dorothy, as they were walking along, carrying the dog and trying to remember where Uncle John had said the place was, came across a sign upon a door which read:

"Cat and Dog Hospital."

"Oh," said Dorothy, "stroking the head of the little dog, 'this city has places to cure little dogs like you.'"

The dog didn't know quite what she meant but her voice was so low and she spoke so gently and so kindly that he bravely tried to wag his tail and his eyes said so plainly:

"Thank you. You are good to me."

Dorothy carried the dog while Douglas told her to follow him.

As the door opened, they asked a man who was dressed in white and who looked like a doctor, if they could bring the little dog in.

"Is he your dog?" asked the man.

"No," said Dorothy, "but he is hurt, and I want to look after him until he is well and until I can find his master or his mistress."

And the man took the children to the dog doctor.

The doctor took the dog in his arms. The poor dog shivered with fear, but he did not utter a sound, nor did he whine.

For animals are often far more brave than people and they are always so good and nice when they are treated well. With all the pleasure they give, they certainly deserve good treatment.

"Ah, I see," said the doctor. "Just put your hand on his head and talk to him." He added, looking at Dorothy.

Poor Dorothy was so frightened. She couldn't bear to think of the little dog being hurt. But she knew it was all for the best (although that wasn't always such a comfort), so she patted his head and said:

"Nice doggie, good doggie." "There!" said the doctor. "He is all right. He had a horrid splinter in his foot which was hurting him badly."

With a leap the dog had jumped from the doctor's lap. First he licked the doctor's hands, then Dorothy's, and then Douglas'. He was so happy now to be free of pain.

Outside they found the dog's mistress looking for him, and how grateful she was when she heard what had happened. For he had wandered away from her when the pain was so bad, as he had not wanted to worry her.

As Douglas and Dorothy walked off they decided that this had been one of the happiest experiences they had had in the city, for they had found out that there were hospitals for sick animals. Later Uncle John told them of the society which found sick animals and made people care for them and treat them properly.

"I think," Dorothy said, "that this has almost been my happiest day, for I do like to feel that in the city they have time for their animals."

And Douglas, who was devoted to animals, decided the very same thing.

Pinched for Speeding

Dorothy kept running from room to room making a lot of racket, and when her mother told her to stop, she did not obey, so she was punished by having to sit quietly on a chair.

When daddy came in from the garage, noticing Dorothy sitting so quiet, he asked her if she felt sick, to which she replied: "I'm not sick, daddy; I'm pinched for speeding."

Fists Might Get Mad

Bobby and his playmate, although the best of friends, often disagreed on certain things. One day a disagreement arose and Bobby was heard to say: "Be careful, Bill, my fists might get a mad at you."

Have Kidneys Examined By Your Doctor

Take Salts to Wash Kidneys if Back Pains You or Bladder Bothers

Flush your kidneys by drinking a quart of water each day, also take salts occasionally, says a noted authority, who tells us that too much rich food forms acids which almost paralyze the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken; then you may suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sour, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you get rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To help neutralize these irritating acids, to help cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

Guard Against "Flu" With Musterole

Influenza, Grippe and Pneumonia usually start with a cold. The moment you get those warning aches rub on good old Musterole.

Musterole relieves the congestion and stimulates circulation. It has all the good qualities of the old-fashioned mustard plaster without the blister.

First you feel a warm tingle as the healing ointment penetrates the pores, then a soothing, cooling sensation and quick relief. Have Musterole handy for emergency use. It may prevent serious illness.

To Mothers: Musterole is also made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole.

QUEER TAXES LEVIED ON PEOPLE OF WORLD

Humorous Levies Relic of Feudal Times.

Washington.—A delegation from the Virgin Islands recently appeared before a congressional committee and appealed for the removal of the export tax on sugar.

"That an export tax is unconstitutional is a matter of common knowledge to American news readers, and since the Virgin Islands belong to the United States, some may question why the delegation should peacefully plead for the removal of the levy when it could be attacked as unconstitutional from the time of its imposition," says a bulletin from the headquarters of the National Geographic society in this city.

"But the Constitution does not say that there shall be no tax on articles exported from the United States and its possessions. It declares that 'No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any state.' And, according to the courts, state in this case, means a state, not a possession.

Export Tax Odd to Us. "While an export tax seems odd to a citizen of the United States, it is not compared with some of the humorous levies in foreign countries," continues the bulletin.

"Since feudal times the kings of England have received miscellaneous articles as taxes on valuable property.

"Two knives, six horseshoes and sixty-one nails are sent to the king's court by the city of London each year for the use of a parcel of land near the famous Strand, while a school occupying a piece of property near the Tower bridge, sends a bunch of roses. The land is worth $10,000, but as long as the roses are 'paid,' the school is permitted to continue in peaceful possession. Peppercorns (pepper berries) are paid by the Royal academy for its London site.

"To hold his land the owner of Aylesbury manor provides three geese. If the king visits Aylesbury in the summer and three live eels if he goes there in the winter. The owner is also bound to put clean straw on the king's bedroom floor three times a year if the sovereign stops there. Straw on the bedroom floor was one of the luxuries of feudal times.

"The tenant of Copeland manor is required to hold the king's head should he get seasick while crossing the stormy waters of the English channel from Dover to Whitstaid bay.

"A crossbow is contributed by the ancient city of Chichester, while the lord of Bryndon, Dorset county, is bound to make a yearly presentation of a stringless bow and an unfeathered arrow for his majesty's use should he decide to war with Wales.

"Instead of paying an assessment in money, knights, to whom large parcels of feudal land were granted, were bound to perform 40 days' service in the king's military establishment and to equip themselves for duty.

"Property owners in England a few hundred years ago also accounted for the number of hearths and chimneys in their buildings, for each one of them was levied upon. Windows also were taxed and today one occasionally sees evidence of the evasion of this levy where old windows have been bricked up.

Blocks of Salt Paid Taxes.

"For centuries blocks of salt were sent to the rulers of China from the provinces bordering the sea to pay taxes. Rice and silk vied with salt in importance. Today, in some parts of the republic, rice supplements silver in payment of levies. In ancient times some tribes sent elephants' teeth while the Cantoneses, it is related, made payment in crabs, frogs, snakes and crickets.

"Travelers from one city to another in China soon became familiar with other ways of raising revenue, than that collected from land owners. Linn or 'squeeze' stations, which might be compared with our nearly obsolete toll gates, are met with at frequent intervals along the highways. Eight of these stations are encountered during the 84-mile trip from Shanghai to Soochow. At each station one's effects are ransacked and, while every article is not taxed at each station, before the traveler reaches his destination at least three levies have been paid on each article.

"Tibetan taxes are usually paid in goods. Sheep, wool, meal and native cloth are principally used. In one section of the hill country, the grass and water the Tibetan cattle consume are taxed, but not the cattle."

Plan Statue of Miles Standish at Plymouth

Plymouth, Mass.—Transfigured into bronze, Capt. Miles Standish, first soldier of the Pilgrim colony, may soon return to this little town, the birthplace of America.

Plans are under way here for the erection of a monument of the military leader of the early settlement. A site on the grounds of the Plymouth Memorial building is being considered.

In Duxbury, where Captain Standish once lived, a granite shaft already stands in his memory.
