WOMEN WILL HAVE WASHINGTON BUREAU

Commencing with our first issue in January The Times will be able to give its readers the most authentic news of what is going on at the National Capital. Our news bureau is to be located at 24-25 Wyatt Building the heart of the business district of our National Capital. William P. Helm Jr., a writer nationally known and a Washington correspondent of long experience, will be in charge of the office. This service is at the disposal of our readers and without charge.

This is just one of the many improvements we have hopes of making in our plant for the coming year.

Here's Your Chance.

Luella Lemons, county and district clerk, announced to The Times force this week that she would issue the first 1928 marriage license free.

As next year is leap year and Cupid may be unusually busy, now is your chance girls. However, all may as well get busy now and try for the free marriage license which is to be given away in 1928. And, who knows, maybe Judge Henshaw or Judge Howard will donate their part.

Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Kuykendall spent Christmas here with Mrs. Kuykendall's brothers, Joe and Jim Kerr and families. Mr. Kuykendall returned home Monday, Mrs. Kuykendall remaining for a longer visit.

PROMINENT COUPLE MARRY AT UVALDE

The many friends of both parties were pleasantly surprised to hear of the marriage of Miss Grace Whitworth and Dr. D. A. Harrison Jr., which was solemnized at Uvalde last Saturday at high noon. The nuptials were performed at the Methodist parsonage with Rev. McKay, Methodist pastor there, performing the ceremony. The immediate families of both the bride and groom were in attendance.

The bride is the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Whitworth, prominent Edwards County ranch people, and is one of the prettiest and most popular girls to have ever been reared here. After finishing her school work at the Rocksprings High School, she attended the University of Texas, where she was very popular in school activities. For the past few years she has been employed in the law office of T. A. Williams, where her business ability has been well displayed. Her pretty face and pleasant, cheerful disposition will be greatly missed here.

Dr. Harrison is the only son of Dr. and Mrs. D. A. Harrison Sr. of Batesville and has made his home in Rocksprings for several months. Since making this his home he has impressed everyone as being a perfect gentleman, a clean young man with an excellent future in his chosen profession, medicine. He has taken an active interest in local civic affairs since residing here and is of the calibre to make any town a good citizen. He is also a former student of the University of Texas.

Immediately after the wedding the happy couple left for Dallas for a short wedding trip and will be at home in San Antonio after the holidays.

The Record joins the public in extending congratulations and best wishes to the young couple who have chosen to undertake the future united.—The Rocksprings Record.

D. A.'s many friends here wish for him much happiness and prosperity.

Mr. and Mrs. John Clark spent the holidays with relatives in Animas, N. M.

A. J. Basel of San Angelo visited Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Griffith Monday.

Minton White of the University of Texas, spent the holidays here with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. White.

W. D. Hunter returned Wednesday from a business trip to Tucson, Ariz.

COMMENCE REGISTERING CARS NEXT MONDAY

J. J. Nance, sheriff and tax collector, stated to a reporter of The Times the first of the week that his office would be ready bright and early Monday morning to commence registering cars.

Due to a recent ruling that forbid the registering of cars before January 1 a big rush is anticipated. In order to facilitate matters the tax collector asks that all automobile owners observe the following:

By all means bring with you a headlight certificate which has been secured within 30 days prior to Jan. 1. Without this certificate the tax collector can't sell you a new license. So don't forget this. Have a complete description of your car such as weight, make, year, engine number and old license number. To expedite this matter bring your old license certificate, or if a new car don't forget this.

Mr. Nance stated that the owners of cars would be given 15 days in which to register their cars.

Joe Jansa and Kendrick Harrell, who are attending Schreiner Institute at Kerrville, spent the holidays here with relatives and friends.

Opening of the new Olmito water system has been effected, with running water from a large sediment tank supplied to the residents of the town. Pipes have been run to all sections of Olmito.

The new but incomplete house of former Governors James E. and Miriam A. Ferguson in Austin, was considerably damaged recently by fire resulting from an explosion in the furnace room.

The Railroad Commission has postponed from December 19 to January 19, hearings on three rate cases. They are: Petition for revision of rates on express shipments of onion plants, less than carloads. To cancel special rates of 50 cents per ton on sand, carloads, from Enos and Huan to Houston. Petition for establishment of rates on sweet potatoes and sorghum syrup, mixed carloads.

Thousands of Mexican blue quail, chachalacas, deer, ducks, geese and pheasants abound in the Valley, as well as numberless fowl and animals. Game Warden Charles G. Jones says that scarcely a day passes without seeing at least three big bucks which hunters have bagged. Many of them, he said, range around 19 points. Several deer killed this season have been 14-point bucks. All game in the Valley section of the country is exceptionally well fed this year, deer being especially fat and sleek.

DEFICIENCY BILL IS SIGNED BY COOLIDGE

Appropriation Measure Carries Slightly Over $200,000,000 For Various Activities.

Washington, D. C.—President Coolidge Friday signed the deficiency bill carrying emergency appropriation of $200,000,000 for government activities.

The total in the bill was so large because it included the second deficiency bill which was blocked by a senate filibuster in the last session plus $75,000 for government expenses since that time.

Among the bill's provisions was one of $940,000 for raising gun elevations on two battleships to increase their firing range.

The bill also included $5,500,000 for the Cape Cod Canal and $7,000,000 for emergency flood control work in the Mississippi.

Ready to Fight Cane Pest.

Austin, Tex.—Governor Dan Moody Thursday gave impetus to a movement now under way for combating the cane borer and cane beetle, which spread alarmingly among the corn and cane crops of South and East Texas this year. "I will do all I can," Moody told a committee of agriculturists, who called on him, seeking financial assistance from the state in launching a campaign of control and eradication of the pests. It is proposed to engage a competent entomologist to make a survey of the infested district as early as possible with headquarters at Amelia experimental station, near Beaumont.

Mexico Inaugurates Tourist Campaign.

San Benito, Tex.—Plans of the Mexican government and the Confederated Chambers of Commerce to spend thousands of dollars, beginning January 1, in an intensive campaign to attract tourists to that country from the United States were revealed at San Benito recently in a communication received by J. E. Bell, president of the South Texas Secretaries Association. The Mexican government, Bell was informed, has issued telegraphic instructions to all immigration agents on the border to aid tourists and visitors from the United States in every way possible.

U. S. Farm Crops $6,428,626,000.

Washington, D. C.—This year's harvests of important farm crops, including fruit and commercial truck crops, were valued by the department of agriculture at $6,428,626,000, compared with $7,793,480,000 last year. The values were based on December 1 or seasonal prices paid to farmers. Corn production was placed at 2,784,283,000 bushels, valued at $2,914,725,000. The combined winter and spring wheat crop was 571,691,900 bushels, valued at $975,694,900. The cotton crop, combining the value of lint and seed, was valued at $1,462,571,900. Hay, including tame and wild, totaled $1,320,524,000 in value.

Railroad Revenue Declines.

Austin, Tex.—A decrease of $1,645,127 in Texas railroad passenger revenues for the 19 months period ending October 31, as compared to revenues of the corresponding period last year, figured largely in the $4,983,156 slump in the net railway operating income noted Friday in a report from the Texas railroad commission. Freight revenues, however, showed an increase of $6,654,778 over last year.

Big Money For Wolf Scalps.

The estimate figures 60,000 acres in the Lower Rio Grande Valley are planted to citrus and the plantings increasing 1,000,000 trees per year. Hundreds of growers are extending their fruit acreages, and throughout the entire Valley huge citrus fruit projects are being developed.

VONCELL, VIKING ON HER HORSE "BROADWAY" IN WASHINGTON

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

NOTHING so good for the inside of a man as the outside of a horse—so sayeth the doctor.

So runs an old saying (author unknown) and apparently there are a great many Americans who believe it. Of course, there aren't as many of us who answer to the call of "boots and saddles" as there were in the old days when "westward the course of empire takes its way." For this is the motor age, and today you hear more often the drone of airplane engine or the pop of automobile exhaust than you do the creak of saddle leather and the clip-clip of horse's hoofs. But for all of that, this form of travel still retains a wide popularity and there are even those who point to a decided increase in horseback riding for pleasure, if not for business, within recent years.

For despite the fact that modern America is the main gale about its business now on pneumatic tires, there's still enough "ridin', ridin'" to keep the saddle manufacturers in business for several years yet. Perhaps one indication of a rather widespread interest in equestrianism is the amount of newspaper space that has been given within recent months to certain long-distance riding feats which have been under way. A recent news picture which was widely published was that of Frank Heath of Silver Springs, Md., standing with his horse at "Milepost One" in Washington, the point for the measurement of distances from the capital over all the highways of the United States. Mr. Heath, who is a war veteran, had been "ridin', ridin'" to recover his health and in the course of a journey of some two years and a half on his eleven-year-old horse he had covered 11,387 miles and visited every state in the Union.

Last year press dispatches carried the news that Bert J. McCloud of Fort Morgan, Colo., was about to set out on a 30,000-mile trip on his eight-year-old Arabian horse, "Chief Sitting Bull." He was to attempt the feat of riding from Denver to New York and then criss-cross the United States and Canada several times. He, too, expected to visit every state in the Union, and at the start of his trip he estimated that he would cover the 30,000 miles in 1,200 days. So far as is known he is still "ridin', ridin'" for at the end of his trip is a prize of $25,000 if he makes it successfully and complies with all the requirements, one being that he must call on all governors at the state capitals and also upon the President at Washington.

McCloud, who is fifty years old and a former cowboy and Arizona Ranger, finished a 20,000-mile trip at Phoenix, Ariz., two years ago. During this trip he crossed a strip of desert in the great Southwest in which sealed instruments recorded a heat of 180 degrees and it took him 72 hours to make 72 miles. Up from the South another horse-

BADGER CLARK

Ridin'

There is some that likes the city—

Grass that's curried smooth and green, Theatres and stragglin' collars Wagons run by gasoline— But for me it's hawses and saddle Every day without a chance, And a desert sun a-blaazin' On a hundred miles of range.

Just a-ridin', a-ridin', Desert rippin' in the sun, Mountains blue along the skyline— I don't envy anyone When I'm ridin'.

When my feet is in the stirrups And my hawses is on the bust, With his hoofs a-fashin' lightnin' From a cloud of golden dust, And the howlin' of the cattle Is a-comin' down the wind Then a fner life than ridin' Would be mighty hard to find.

Just a-ridin', a-ridin'— Splittin' long cracks through the air, Stirrin' up a baby cyclone, Hippin' up the prickly pear As I'm ridin'.

I don't need no art exhibits When the sunset does her best, Paintin' everlastin' glory On the mountains to the west, And your opey looks foolish When the night-bird starts his tune And the desert's silver mounted By the touches of the moon.

Just a-ridin', a-ridin'— Who kin envy kings and czars When the coyotes down the valley Are a-singin' to the stars, If he's ridin'!

When my earthly trail is ended And my final bacon curled And the last great roundup's finished At the Home Ranch of the world

I don't want no harps nor haloes, Robes nor other dressed up things, Let me ride the starry ranges On a pinto hawses with wings!

Just a-ridin', a-ridin'— Nothin' I'd like half so well As a roundin' up the sinners That have wandered out of And a-ridin'.

BADGER CLARK.

the marquis of Donegal at a dinner party in London, that she could ride from New York to Los Angeles in 100 days. Mayor "Jimmy" Walker of New York bid her godspeed about the middle of October last year and within two weeks she and her horse "Broadway" clattered up Pennsylvania avenue to the capitol. And at the present writing she's "ridin', ridin'" somewhere in the great interior of these United States.

"Ridin', ridin'" —does that have a familiar sound? If it does it's because it's a sort of refrain in a poem by Badger Clark which has become a classic out in the wind-swept West where men know what "ridin'" is and know whether a man knows what he's talking about—whether it's in verse or prose—when he's talking about "ridin'." Evidently they believe that Badger Clark knows, for his "Ridin'" is probably the best known and most often quoted single poem in the whole West. Last year when the people of Kansas staged a big pageant in celebrating the famous Medicine Lodge Indian treaty and other events in the growth of their country, the printed programs for the pageant included several verses from "Ridin'" in the introduction to the episode depicting the day of the cowboy. And that's only one of innumerable instances of its popularity. You'll come across it repeatedly in newspapers, you'll hear it recited at gatherings of all kinds in the West, and when an old-timer sets him down to write his reminiscences, the chances are that somewhere in the book he'll quote "Ridin'" or some other Badger Clark poem.

"Ridin'", itself, has had an interesting history, as have some of the other of Clark's poems. After a varied career, including an experience as a plantation manager in Cuba where tropical fever all but wrecked his health, Clark went down in the cow country of Arizona to recuperate. In a letter to his mother he found prose too weak to express his content with the wonderful desert country in which he found himself and he tried to express it in verse. The result was "Ridin'." His mother, with natural pride, sent the verse to a magazine, the old Pacific Monthly, and it was immediately accepted and published. Thus Badger Clark started as the "poet laureate of the West" and gave to the West its best-loved verses. Easterners who discovered the West last summer for the first time, when President Coolidge's decision to establish the summer White House in the Black Hills of South Dakota brought to that section a horde of tourists, also discovered this "poet laureate" and acclaimed him. But for all of their praise of him, the only authoritative word is that uttered by an old cowman, when he said, after reading a book of Clark's verses, including "Ridin'": "You can break me if there's a dead poem in the book. I read the hull of it. Who in h—l is this kid Clark, anyway? I don't know how he's known, but he KNOWS."

man is "ridin', ridin'." He is A. Felix Tschiffely, an Argentine schoolmaster who started from Buenos Aires two and a half years ago and who recently arrived in Mexico City on his way to New York City. His journey was begun to demonstrate the endurance of the native horses of the Patagonian pampas and he is doing it on two of them, one seventeen years old and the other sixteen. When he has completed his journey he will have some 10,000 miles of "ridin', ridin'" back of him and a host of thrilling experiences to tell about to his friends. But not all of these long distance riders are men. The latest one in the field is Miss Voncell Viking, a twenty-two-year-old Roewell (N. M.) girl, who has started out to win a wager of $25,000, said to have been made with

Modern Version

Edwin, two and one-half years old, is much interested in Mother Goose rhymes. After each repetition of "Little Red Riding Hood," he would immediately beg, "Say it again!" At length his mother, becoming tired, said, "You say it for me, this time." He gave it as usual to the point where Red Riding Hood says, "Grandma, what makes your ears so big?"

Here he paused, then dramatically exclaimed: "Grandma, what's the big idea?"—Los Angeles Times.

Accounted For "Anger sweetens the blood" is the Literary Digest's heading of an article about the German doctor's discovery that it really increases the sugar content. Probably the extra sweetness anger puts into the blood is that which it takes out of the disposition.—Boston Transcript.

The well and tree design so often seen in silver platters is intended to catch the gravy and juices from the meat so that the gravy can be served readily as wanted. The well and tree form is that which is best adapted to the purposes. The design has no other significance. The origin is unknown.

Nation Should Sever Relations With Countries That Are Girding for War

By SOLOMON LEVITAN, Wisconsin State Treasurer.

THE President of the United States should sever diplomatic relations with all countries which spend large sums of money preparing for war. It is our duty now to profit by the bitter lessons war has taught us so that in the future we shall enjoy the gains of peace and not again suffer the losses of war.

Will, hate and selfishness are the contributing, if not the culminating, factors that led to the destruction of human life and property.

You men of the American Legion who have been the heralds of war and death can be the wise apostles of peace and life. You whose mission it was to tear down and destroy now have a mission to build up and save. The trophies of peace are as dear and as costly as the relics of war. Of these trophies you must be the future keepers and guardians. To this great trust your country now calls you.

It is my belief that you are willing to join me in the fond hope that during the centuries to come human life will not again be exposed to the peril and cruelty of war.

It is time to tell the men who represent the governments of the world that war is a crime. Let us not follow in the footsteps of the dead past. Let us rid our minds of the childish thought that war is a game of sport and that it can end only in victory.

Five-Year Marriage Contracts, Renewable, One Solution of Divorce Problems

By JUDGE CHARLES S. BURNELL, Los Angeles.

Divorce laws are making liars out of thousands of persons who want nothing more than to be allowed to continue their lives alone. Couples should be permitted to enter into marriage contracts for periods of five years, renewable by mutual consent for additional periods. Divorces under the term-marriage plan would be granted on two grounds only—incestancy and extreme cruelty.

Division of property and custody of children of a couple desiring to separate at the end of a five-year period would be settled by court decision. The abolition of the present interlocutory divorce decree is one of the provisions of the term-marriage plan.

When a young man and woman totally unacquainted with the future and what it will bring, take an oath to "love, honor and cherish" each other for the rest of their lives, they are making promises that may be impossible to keep. Present laws often force them, in seeking a divorce, to accuse each other of moral crimes, often obviously mere subterfuges to comply with the law.

If unhappy married couples could look ahead and see a decent way out of their troubles, I believe they would be willing to put up with things until the time for relief came.

School Has Responsibility for Moral Training of the Coming Generation

By DR. EDWARD O. SISSON, Reed College, Oregon.

Education and moral training in the schools, particularly in the lower grades, are inseparable. In moral education there is no stopping the clock. An individual either develops morality or immorality. Character education is mostly a by-product of all other education, and the by-product is far more important than the direct product. In the training of young minds formation of right habits is the most vital part of education. However, no one institution is entirely responsible for moral training. It is absurd to say that the school is entirely responsible and it is equally absurd to say that it has no responsibility.

The term "moral" has come somewhat into disrepute because of its continued use in a negative way. Thus it smacks of restraint, repression, the killing of joy and the hampering and narrowing of life. If education is to be used in the promotion of character this negative crippling idea must be done away with and a new idea to the effect that moral training is to aid the child to discover good things that he wants to do and to cooperate with him in doing them, be substituted for it. All merely negative morality ends disastrously.

Faith Without Good Works Not All That Is Necessary in a True Christian

By REV. DANIEL A. POLING, New York.

A formal, lifeless, hed-ridden faith is useless and a curse. Truth is often known but not employed usefully and faith alone, without active good works, is often thought to be all that is needed in religion.

Truth is still truth in the club where liquor is distributed and sold contrary to law; in the village where officers of the peace protect the bootlegger; in the bucketshop where greed and ignorance are exploited to make thieves richer; in government where certain administrations have betrayed their trust; and in love, where gentleness and innocence have come upon a Judas. Truth is still truth, but for the time being, it is a shut-in, an invalid, a palsied giant unable to rise from the bed.

In every church there are two extremes in the matter of faith. Some people believe that faith itself is everything and that whoever follows all the forms of religion is a good Christian. The other extreme is those who think that they are being good Christians by leading righteous lives without faith.

Inventive Genius Must Devise Occupations for Workers Rendered Jobless

By JAMES J. DAVIS, Secretary of Labor.

A quiet industrial revolution has taken place in the United States during the past two decades, through the rapid displacement of workers by labor-saving machines, and a new type of inventive genius must be enlisted to devise industries and occupations for the working men rendered jobless by the development of machines.

Labor is agreeable to the development of more machines so long as the purchasing power of the men who operate them is not curtailed. The Golden Rule is stronger today than it ever has been in the 2,000 years of Christianity and it is responsible for the healthy and happy state of American labor today. But we must be careful in the immediate future, while scrapping old methods and old machinery as fast as we find it obsolete, not to scrap men.

Simply Had to Wear a Number Ten Shoe

The kind lady noticed an old man, whose right leg was gone, standing on a street corner with a perplexed look on his face.

"My poor man," she said, "are you lost?"

"No ma'am," he replied. "I'm looking for a fellow that got his left leg shot off in the Battle of Bull Run."

"What is his name?"

"I don't know that," was the reply, "but he wears a number ten shoe."

"For heaven's sake, if you don't know who he is, how do you know he wears a number ten shoe?"

"I ain't sure he does, but it stands t' reason that if he don't, one or t'other as 's his gold' to have trouble with his bunions. Lady, I'm looking for a right-legged fellow t' go partners with on a new pair of shoes."—New York World.

The GREEN CLOAK

STORY FROM THE START

Dr. Ronald McAllister, famous in his special work,—applied psychology—employs his leisure time in the elucidation of crime mysteries. As the narrative opens he is interested with Assistant District Attorney Ashton in the murder, in the small town of Oak Ridge, of a recluse, Henry Morgan. The murdered man, his papers reveal, had been in New Zealand, where Doctor McAllister had lived in his youth. Will Harvey has testified he saw a woman wearing a green cloak in the Morgan home the night of the murder. Doctor Reinhardt, friend of McAllister, telephones he has a queer case in his hospital and invites McAllister to see the patient. The doctor sees a possible connection between the murdered New Zealander and the girl McAllister and his friend go through Morgan's papers. An immense collection of maps interests them. The doctor finds a noose and a pipe, used as a tourniquet, the instrument of the killing.

"There must have been some standard, some test that he tried those stand- lines by. When they did not fit it, he destroyed them. That test or standard may have existed solely in his memory. If not, it was a thing committed to paper, then we can find it. Whatever it was, he must have been in the habit of referring to it constantly. In that case, I have no doubt that it's somewhere in this room. Take the lamp and hold it at the other end of the bookshelves—so. Now raise it so that the light will fall horizontally along the top shelf."

the compelling grip of his muscular hand thrust me back into my chair, and my sentence trailed off into a sort of gasp.

"So, for a moment, we sat breathless."

"Somebody's getting in," I whispered presently. "It must be Mallory."

"Mallory has a key," he retorted. "Listen—"

No, that was not Mallory. It was not anybody trying to get in, for somebody had already succeeded—somebody who was already making his way, with swift, almost incredibly stealthy steps, up the stairs from the second floor to the room where we were sitting.

We drew back into an obscure corner and stood close together, half-crouching, eyeing the door.

Presently we saw it opening. And then there emerged from its shadow a face we both knew—a face neither of us is ever likely to forget. The eyes in that face had never been seen before, for they had been closed the last time we looked at it. Now they were about all we could see. The black hair lost itself in the shadow which enveloped the doorway, and the olive-brown skin was itself a shadow. But the eyes—they burned with the flaming green intensity of a leopard's.

The doctor and I shrank back into our corner and waited, breathlessly, to see what she would do. The first thing was curious, and little to be expected. She closed behind her the door by which she had entered. Then, with brisk certainty, but with no noise at all, she moved toward the desk. That brought her a little nearer us.

She had got within arm's reach of the swivel chair, when suddenly, like a flash, all the motion of her body was arrested. Her attitude had some- thing of the frozen alertness that one sees in a setter dog when he points game. We could see her face better now; it was turned squarely toward us. But, apparently, she did not see us. That was natural, for we were deep in the shadow. But she knew we were there. The next moment I perceived that she knew by virtue of the same sense that the setter uses. She had caught our scent. Her head went back a little, her nostrils dilated, and she seemed to be drawing in a deep breath.

I have no command of English to describe the suddenness and unexpectedness of the thing that happened there. She stood there before us, as I have said, like one frozen, so still was she. And then, with no preliminary motion whatever, no crouch, no visible gathering up of the forces for a spring, she flashed across the room toward the open window, like a dancing shadow. For just an instant I saw her etched in profile as she poised upon the sill. And then she was gone.

I had followed her to the window as swiftly as my clumsy, human motions would permit, and looked down, expecting to see her lying bruised and broken on the frozen ground. Instead of that, I saw the fleeting shadow of her moving swiftly across the snowy lawn toward the gate.

A moment later, bare-headed, bare-handed, I was running at top speed down the rough, frozen country road in the direction I had seen her take.

Before I had gone fifty yards, I heard other footsteps pounding along behind me, and a momentary fear that my old chief had been reckless enough to risk his bones in such a chase caused me to pause and turn back. It was not Doctor McAllister, however, but the detective, Mallory, and as he panted up alongside me, he said:

"I saw her coming down the rain- plpe. She might almost as well have fallen, she came down so fast. What was she like? I don't suppose you got anything of a look at her, though."

"No," said I. "The wind had just blown out the lamp, and we were there in the dark when she came in."

"It doesn't matter," he said briefly, as we plowed along, side by side. "I'll know what she's like well enough when I come up with her. But there is no use in your keeping up the chase. I'll get her alone, never fear. Nothing that wears skirts can outrun me."

I was already half inclined to take his advice and turn back, for the pace was beginning to tell on me, when I tripped over something and fell head- long.

By the time I had picked myself up and shaken some of the loose snow out of my sleeves, he was already a hundred yards ahead down the road. I was about spent, so, regretfully, I turned back.

But for one moment I passed curi- ously to investigate the cause of my fall. It had been something soft, something that gave a little as my foot struck it, and then clung. It had been entirely covered by the snow, which had fallen out here in the country to a depth of nearly six inches.

I scuffled around in it with my feet until I found it. Then I stooped and picked it up. It must be a shawl or a blanket, I thought, as I shook the snow out of its folds and held it out in both hands. No, it was neither. It was a cloak; a green cloak, and the collar was cut high in the back.

I cast a glance over my shoulder. Mallory was already out of sight in the distance. I threw the cloak over my arm and trudged back to the house.

CHAPTER IV

Early the next morning Doctor Mc- Allister and I took one of the trains upon which the male population of Oak Ridge habitually goes to town upon its several and various business. We had by no means exhausted the possibilities of discovery which still lay concealed, we felt sure, within that lonely old house where we had passed so strange a night; nor had we solved its mystery. But matters of a more instant importance compelled us, for a while, to abandon it.

In the first place, we knew that, little as we liked the prospect, it was our clear duty to report to Ashton what we knew of the mysterious, wild creature who had escaped from the hospital and was now at large. By one means or another, she must be found as quickly as possible. She had already destroyed one life—of that we were practically sure—and until she was safely under restraint again, we could have no guaranty that she would not destroy others. To thwart that possibility, we must call in Ashton and the police, however little to our liking such a course might be.

We deferred our breakfast until our arrival in town, memories of the dinner we had had the night before mak- ing it easy to go hungry for a while. We were later getting in than we ex- pected to be, for a combination of fog and freezing sleet delayed our train. Out of the car windows we could see as we crawled along, that the tele- graph wires were already sagging un- der their white armor of ice. As soon as we got in, we drove straight to The Meredith.

In the restaurant we found Ashton himself, just sitting down to break- fast. He welcomed us with an eager- ness that showed that he had already heard some report of our adventure of the night before.

Cats Alike Fond of Traveling and Home

The glare of limelight that recently beat upon Fluffy, the London Victoria station cat, who boards the 10:45 train to Dover every morning, lunches upon nice creamy milk at the buffet there, and returns to town by the afternoon train, is a reminder of a curious fact about cats; they are at once the great- est travelers and the greatest "home bodies" of all domesticated animals.

Other cats in England, and indeed, in most countries, regularly journey long distances on trains, usually in the restaurant car, but sometimes with the train crew. As for seafaring cats, there must be hundreds of thousands of them, from North cape to the Horn, Southampton water to Nagasaki bay. Most liners carry quite a number; there are White Star vessels with five- and-twenty aboard. There was an amusing incident not long ago when one of the Adriatic's cats, that had failed to turn up when the ship sailed, reappeared for the next voyage with its tail proudly waving in the breeze and five little kittens trotting along behind.—Manchester Guardian.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale MARY GRAHAM BONNER

THE BIGGEST PIG

"I," said Plenty, "was the biggest pig at the fair this year, but my, but I was lonely."

Plenty was the name of the pig. He kept growing bigger and bigger and really in his pig way he was very handsome.

The family did not know what to name him. They kept wondering what they would call him.

Then one member of the family said: "It's hard to know what to call him, but there's certainly plenty of pig there."

"There's nothing small about him," they started calling him Plenty of Pig, but of course even for a big pig that was too much of a name so they called him Plenty for short.

Plenty was back now with the other pigs. They had all been anxious to hear the news of the outside world.

"What was it like, Plenty?" they asked. "Well," Plenty began, "I went to the fair in an automobile."

"They tell me that in old times, and even now for that matter, most pigs don't travel in automobiles."

"But I did. I had a special ride. Well, the trip to the fair didn't amount to much."

"I saw a few farms and other an- imals on the way and then came to something they called a village."

"None of us would care for it. A lot of houses and flowers and no pig pens and no mud."

"Oh, no, if one talks about a village don't bother to listen. It's not worth talking about."

"And then we came to the fair. There were lots of people at the fair and they were all fixing their animals."

"There were pigs and cows and hens and roosters and chickens and pigeons and horses and rabbits."

"There were people talking about the pies they had made and the wreaths of flowers and the jams and the jellies and the quilts and the embroideries."

"And there were children wonder- ing when the balloon would go up and there were merry-go-rounds and peo- ple taking pictures on tin! And shows and everything you can imagine."

"But I was nervous at first for fear some of the other pigs would be considered better and finer than I."

"I wanted to be a pride to my mas- ter and the pen."

"And I thought it would be fine to win a prize for my own glory, for my own pig glory and ambition."

"Well, I won the prize, and I set- tled down in that little bit of a pen they gave me for all the time the fair lasted."

"My master came and took good care of me. I enjoyed the talks I heard."

"The children who came to look at me over the side of my boarded-up little pen rather amused me and I gave them half-winks out of my pink eyes and twisted my little tail for their amusement."

"But oh, I was lonely. I was so glad to come home."

"It's all right to see the world. Pigs, but it's wonderful to come back home. I wonder if anyone thought of that before?"

And Plenty looked so pleased with himself.

Waiting for Jimmy

Jimmy Lee was to visit the Fox children on Saturday. The Foxes loved Jimmy and all week they ant- icipated his coming. They imparted the good news to all the other chil- dren in the neighborhood. Saturday came, and when Jimmy and his moth- er alighted from the bus a block from the Fox residence, a strange child ac- costed them.

His greeting was: "Are you Jimmy Lee?"

"Yes," answered Jimmy. "Well," said the little stranger. "The whole Fox family is waiting for you."

New York Short of Equestrian Statues

A Gothamite who has been on tour with a number of summer visitors finds New York to be exceedingly short on equestrian statues. Having dived for many years in Washington, where the horse plays such a conspicu- ous part in memorials, he has noted the death of bronze chargers in the home town. Evidently the sculptors who designed the statues that adorn New York's parks and streets were not as horse-minded as their fellows at the capital. Some humorist once remarked that every one who owned a horse had a statue erected to his memory in Washington. The eque- strian statues in Manhattan are few and far between. There is one of Washington in Union square, one of General Sherman at Fifth avenue and Fifty-ninth street, and two on Riverside drive. The drive statues commemorate Gen. Franz Sigel and Joan of Arc.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Paid for His Neglect to See Fire Was Out

That it pays to "be sure the camp fire is out," was brought home with unusual force, says the forest service of the United States Department of Agriculture to a Mr. Jones of Price, Utah, a recent national forest visitor. Mr. Jones and his wife camped at Cottonwood lake on the Wasatch national forest. Departing on a hiking trip to a near-by summit, they left a spark of the camp fire burning. On their return that evening they were met near the camp site by a group of smoke-faced sawmill men, who directed them to where a new and expensive auto had stood when they left. Nothing remained of an exceptionally complete camp outfit and the car but a pile of ashes and a smoldering wreck. No damage was done to the forest, but the campers' loss was fully $2,500.

Men and Homemade Bread

It is frequently said men "run their homes. How about homemade bread, then, asks Ed Howe, who doesn't be- lieve they do. "I scarcely know a man who does not want homemade bread," he adds, "and cannot get it; the bakers have persuaded the women that bakery bread is better, as barbers have persuaded them about bobbed hair. And look at the clothes the men milliners have persuaded the women to wear. . . . Well, look at them. They are more comfortable and san- itary than men's wear. Women don't run around in warm weather wearing enough woolen goods to cook a goose.—Capper's Weekly.

Not According to Hoyle

While telling a long story of falling out of a boat in the middle of the lake and his struggles in the water, Jen- kins stopped abruptly.

"And how did you finally get out?" asked a listener.

"Well," the narrator replied, "after I had come up the second time and was preparing to go down for the third and last time, I happened to think all my past hadn't risen before me like a dream, as it was supposed to do, and so I gave up the whole business and swam ashore."

MANY ACTIVITIES
HERE DURING YULETIDE

The Yuletide found our community in good spirits and the past week has been one of many activities. A Christmas program was greatly enjoyed at the Presbyterian Church on Sunday the 18th, and the Rev. I. E. Owen preached a good Christmas sermon Christmas night, which was enjoyed by a good congregation.

Several dances were held and was very much enjoyed by not only the young folks but the older ones as well. However, the music loving public was very much disappointed that Mrs. Clyde Mills had to postpone her musical recital which was to have been given Christmas Eve night. It was due to the physical condition of her son, Jimmy, who was recently shot, that Mrs. Mills had to postpone her recital. However, she plans to have it soon.

With the spirit of good Christmas cheer and the prosperity that all have enjoyed the past year our community is looking forward to a prosperous and even better year in 1928.
