Chemical analysis of samples of the laboratory of the State Health Department, showed the product to be of extremely low grade, and according to Dr. Livingston Anderson, who supervised the analytical work, "Unfit for numan consumption." Dr. Anderson did not make public the names of the counties from which the samples were submitted.

Gasoline production of the Texas Panhandle continued to increase during the month of November, it is shown in reports covering that branch of operation for that month. During that time 8,645,000 gallons of gasoline were run off through plants in Potter, Carson, Hutchinson, Wheeler and Gray counties. This is a substantial increase over the month before when the total gallonage of the field was just above the 8,000,000 barrel mark.

The civic beautification committee of the McAllen chamber of commerce has secured the use of the right of way of the Missouri Pacific railway, just east of the chamber of commerce building and a cactus garden will be planted, according to Maynard Kreidler, chairman.

Harris county and South Texas have experienced the greatest road building boom in their history during the past 12 months. Mile after mile of new highway have been put down while almost countless other miles are being worked on.

For the first time in several years farmers in the Bastrop section will not be compelled to look to outside markets for feedstuff to carry their stock through the winter months, as most of the barns are bulging with home-raised feed. With a total of $2,628,060 worth of building permits issued during 1927, Corpus Christi has completed the greatest year of building in its entire history. The permits issued during 1927 totaled more than $547,000 over the permits issued during 1926 which amounted to $2,081,039.

Modern Industrial Machinery Opens Road to HUGE INCREASE the Ending of All Poverty

> The equilibrium between supply and demand can therefore be maintained under conditions of an increasing production if all savings are during the first six months of the year

Since primary forces are increasing the purchasing power of the masses, the maintenance of this fundamental situation is more important than to overpersuade in the matter of buying. If unemployment can be production this year over the total for kept down and wages kept up, there will be a constancy of ever-increasing purchase power.

Increasing Lack of Business Opportunity for the College Graduate

By PROF. WILLIAM ALLEN HUGGARD, DePauw University.

There is evidence of a lack of opportunity for college graduates at the present time. If the situation continues three things are likely to hap pen: First, that only superior graduates will have a chance for desirable sitions; second, the college will become increasingly restrictive as regards enrollment; third, the college will be frank to say that it can guarantee nothing, but it will attempt to survey the various fields to find wherein opportunities lie for its graduates and vocational guidance will be emphasized more than it is at present.

If we could have students who come for the pure love of learning, unmoved by the thought of any bread and butter return, we would not need to worry about this new problem. But as long as our colleges draw their students largely from families of very moderate means it seems to me next year. A greater interest is nothat the college has a vocational responsibility-at least it should inform the students concerning this important vocational system.

The opportunities for college men and women have decreased only in the last ten years. It has always been customary to regard college men and women as the hope of the future, and the belief was common that any boy who went to college could become nothing less than a senator or financier whose word controlled the policies of some enormous business and the Nechez river, where a big enterprise. In fact, ten years ago the world was all before us; where to modern concrete and steel bridge is choose was our pleasant privilege. At present, however, there is evidence of a relative lack of opportunity for college graduates

National Policies Prove Inadequate to Meet Needs of American Agriculture

By GEN. JOHN J. PERSHING.

It is obvious even to the casual observer that something is wrong in the adjustment of industry to the complex conditions of the present day. We are forced to the inevitable conclusion that our national policies have not been at all adequate to meet the needs of American agriculture, especially in this postwar period. Unless some way through national effort is found for raising the level of prices on our basic products sufficiently to meet production costs and give a margin of profit that will enable the actual producers to hold their land and provide for its constant im- by the war department. The order provement, then the small farmer is doomed.

During the war we insisted that the American farmers should expand their efforts to the utmost to feed our armies in the field and the armies and civilian populations of the allies as well. With the war's end, we failed to consider that there was a certain responsibility upon us as a nation to aid the farmer to escape from the disastrous aftereffects of excessive production and competition.

IN CROP VALUES

Texas Given First Place Among States of Nation in 1927 Values

Austin, Tex.-Texas was given first rank among the states of the nation in 1927 crop valuations, issued Friday by H. H. Schutz, head of the federal crop reporting bureau, stationed at Austin. The year's crops in this state were valued at $750,000,000, a gain of Texas crop averaged 96.5 per cent, based on the average yields for the past 10 years. Shortage of moisture over much of the south and west portions reduced yields and delayed planting. Excessive rainfall, on the other hand, over the northeast fourth of the state early in the season was followed by moisture deficiency and high temperature which severely reduced yields of growing crops. Fruit crops were cut short by late freezing temperature and cotton insects and dis ease were more prevalent than in several years. For 1927, Texas ranks first in production of cotton, grain and sorghums, sweet potatoes and pecans; fourth in rice; fifth in peanuts; third in sorghum syrup; fifth in sugar cane syrup; sixth in broomcorn; ninth in pears; tenth in peaches; tenth in oats; eleventh in wheat; thirteenth in wild hay; seventeenth in barley; twen ty-third in grapes; twenty-ninth in tame hay; thirty-seventh in Irish potatoes, and forty-first in apples. STORY FROM THE START

Dr. Ronald McAlister, famous Dr. Ronald McAlister, famous in his special work—applied psychology—employs his leisure time in the elucidation of crime mysteries. As the narrative opens he is interested with Assistant District Attorney Ashton in the murder, in the small town of the Ridge, of a recluve, Henry Morgan. The murdered man, his papers reveal, had been in New Zealand, where Doctor McAlister had lived in his youth. Will Harvey has testified he saw a woman wearing a green cloak in the Morgan home the night of the Morgan home the night of the murder. Doctor Reinhardt, friend of McAlister, telephones he has a queer case in his hospi tal and invites McAlister to see the patient. Doctor Reinhardt's patient proves to be a young woman, who in unconsciousness mutters in a language Reinhardt does not understand. McAlister sees a possible connection be-tween the murdered New Zealander and the girl. A carefully hidden map is discovered. A girl enters the house in the darkness and escapes, leaving a green cloak behind.

"I was on the point of telephoning for you," he said, "but you've saved the precious hour or two by coming on your own account. Mallory reported to me here at six o'clock this morning, having come all the way from Oak Ridge on foot, and without getting the slightest trace of the mysterious woman who invaded the Morgan house last night. I confess that her appearance throws a different light on Harvey's testimony. And I think you'll agree that, in all probability, she is the criminal." "I've no doubt myself," said Doctor McAllster, "that it was her hands that strangled old Morgan."

"Well, then, she's the criminal, isn't she?" said Ashton; and regarding the answer to this question as too obvious their normal activity. "That's one to Mallory, certainly," he said at last. "He was right and I was wrong."

"How do you make that out?" I "Didn't L'folt you-that Mallory suspected Harvey of some active connection with the crime, and thought that he was lying to shield himself? The discovery of the clouk makes it evident that he was right. He knew who the actual criminal was, knows now, and was undoubtedly associated with her. He probably thought to save himself by giving us the clew that would lead to her detection. In his eagerness, he overreached bimself and told too much, told more than he could possibly have seen, if his testimony as to how he saw it were true."

He broke off there with a short laugh. "But corrfess," he said, turning to my chief, "confess that this discovery of Phelps puts your theory of associative illusion completely out of court. Harvey testified to a blackhaired woman in a green cloak, and denies that he saw more of her than her silhouette upon the shade. We know now that a black-haired woman in a green cloak was actually there. from which it follows that Harvey lied, knew that he lied. And to have fied thus about a matter which he knew to be vital and significant, he must have some powerful, and probably guilty, motive. I don't believe that you can get away from the logic of that."

"Your conclusion is probable," said my chief, "but it's not inevitable," Ashton dismissed the denial with a mere tolerant shrug, and set it down to the obstinacy of old age. "You brought the cloak to town with you, I suppose," he went on presently. I nodded. "You'll want it, I pre-

"You promised me a chance at Harvey after you got through with him. Do you remember?" said the doctor, 'I hope you don't mean to withdraw

Ashton stared at him. "You still that covert?" he asked incredulously. "Oh, well, I've no objection to your trying. I'll have him arrested at once and brought to town. Where do you want him? At your laboratory?"

"Yes," said the doctor. "When may we expect him? This afternoon, some

"Yes," said Ashton. "Not later than four o'clock." The doctor swallowed the last of his coffee, pushed back his chair, and rose to his great ungainly height. "Now, let's have an understanding." said he. "I've given you, freely, all the information you've asked for. It comprises pretty much all the information you have which can be of any service to you in the solution of the mystery of this crime. That, of course, is partly due to luck. I believe that I can solve that mystery by my methods. I believe that with your methods you will fail. Phelps and I are going to set about trying to find that girl for ourselves, in our own way. we find her, we will examine her in our own way; and we sha'n't tell you anything about it until our investigation is complete."

Ashton smiled. "Of course you know," said he, "that you are proposing something that, under my oath of office, I can't permit. If you find that girl-I don't think it very likely that you will, but if you do, I shall be obliged to take her away from you and put her in safe keeping. And the methods I'll use to determine her gullt or innocence will be my methods, and not yours."

The doctor laughed. "That's under stood," he said. "You're welcome to take her wherever you can find her, in my laboratary, or anywhere else. But if you don't find her-"

"That's thin ice, Doctor McAlister," Ashton interrupted earnestly. "If you proceed with that express determination of yours, I may find it necessary, little as I'd like to, to have you watched, as persons suspected of compounding a felony."

"All right," said the doctor. "That's understood. Watch away all you like. But you'll still let me have a chance at Harvey?"

Ashton shrugged his shoulders with a vexation that was half-genuine, halfsimulated. "You don't deserve it," he said, "but I've made a promise and I'll stick to it."

CHAPTER V

I fully expected that after the grilling he had received at the hands of the district attorney, Harvey would prove a recalcitrant and reluctant subject for the tests we wished to try upon him. He was nervous, it is true, and it took a good deal of reassuring of the most tactful sort, on Doctor McAlister's part, to get him quieted down into anything like a normal state of mind; but he was perfectly willing.

His first sight of the queer, mysterious-looking instruments which our big person room contained did nothing to counteract that fear. To the eye of ignorance it must look like a torture chamber from the Inquisition, brought down

My chief spent the better part of an hour taking the young man around and explaining the different instruments to him, and it was not long before young Harvey began to show an nclination to test himself by every electrical and mechanical piece of apparatus in the laboratory. He had forgotten the Oak Ridge mystery, forgotten Ashton, forgotten his recent arrest, forgotten, even, the detective who was waiting in the corridor outside.

He was ready at last for our real experiment. Nothing about Doctor McAlister's manner suggested that there was any difference, from our test which he now proposed.

"I'm going to see how quickly you can think," he said. "You're to sit derstanding of dates. down in this chair, and Mr. Phelps "Last year the 11th of October had instant he reads a word, you are to of October which say, aloud, the word it makes you is celebrated as think of-say it just as quickly as you | Columbus day, for can. "The favorite dish of the killer whale

The killer whale is the undisputed | is the succulent tongue of the real whale," the writer continues. "Its method of killing the whale is curious. When the big fellow comes up to breathe, the killer fastens its faws on the whale's blowhole and does not let go. Finally, dying of suffocation, the whale thrusts out its great, agonized tongue. The killer nips this off and goes bifthely on its way. It is a common sight to find a tongueless dead whale floating in the water."
