Unearthed Other Relics Predating Cliff Dwellers.

Silver City, N. M .- Conducting : new line of archeological explorations in the canyons of the upper and west forks of the Gila river in New Mexico, Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Cosgrove of Peabody Institute, at Boston, made some notable discoveries last summer. In past years they had devoted their efforts to excavating cliff dwellings of the Mimbres river section, but him. He was fretful, feverish and last summer they decided to try their hands at exploring a remote region where a civilization predating that of

In the canyons of the two forks of biliousness stopped and he has had the Gila they found undisturbed homes ruins of strange buildings.

Their earlier explorations have trusted standby of mothers for over yielded a wide variety of relics of the ancients who developed their civilization in this region 2,000 years ago. Exquisite pottery, urns, artifacts of many kinds, including weapons, and a number of burials have been taken out through the excavation made by the Cosgroves. Their material, carefully assorted and classified, is regarded as of great importance in archeology.

Their finds last summer included a number of prehistoric grain storehouses. The ancient residents tilled the soil in the valleys of the upper forks of the Gila river, raising corn and small grains. At barvest time they gathered and trod or flailed out the grain. They stored it in weatherproof warehouses hewn or built for the purpose, and on this supply they drew grain to grind for their food. Many relics of domestic use also were found.

The cliff dwellings proper, the communal center, as it were, are located near the mouth of a box canyon on the west fork of the Gila river. The canyon is a gorge twenty miles long. from 500 to 1,500 feet deep and from 100 feet to a quarter of a mile wide.

Science Finds Swedish Folks Growing Taller

Upsala, Sweden.-The Swedes are he tallest people in Europe today. according to J. W. Hulterantz, professor in anatomy at the University of Upsala. This scientist also has found that the average grown Swede today is 3 centimeters (1.179 inches) taller than his father, and 6 centimeters (2.368 inches) taller than his grandfather.

The professor has made thorough investigations of the height of Swedes of twenty and twenty-one years during the period 1840-1914, and bas discovered a continuous increase in their average stature. A Doctor Talks About Cascara

It is unfortunate that many people judge the thoroughness of a laxative by its violence. The salts that rush through the system may not even pene drugs will "loosen the bowels" but what is the best way to CLEANSE them?

The world's best laxative is one that Mother Nature makes in her own labo ratory. It is the bark of a tree, called CASCARA. The Indians used to chew this bark-and reach old age without a sick day. It is the best thing there is today, for any system; best for the blood. The most beneficial in its action on the bowels, of anything yet disclosed. For many reasons:

of all, there is formed from cascara. The bowels are not weakened, but strengthened by its occasional use. The occasions when one eeds this aid grow less and less. Its influence is long-felt. You don't find yourself worse bound-up the day following. You do find the bowels more inclined to move of their own volition. The candy Cascaret that every drugstore always has in stock is the ideal form of cascara.

The butler bowed and departed. Nina's nerve was good and her life had accustomed her to the taking of chances of divers sorts. Nevertheless she was excited. She had made up her mind to do a certain thing, a thing which required an impudence amounting to courage, and yet at the last moment she had an impulse to leap to ber feet and run from the house before it was too late. She had sufficient resolution to control the impulse, and now she was making a last attempt to gather all of her resources to do the thing she had come to do.

It had been a rough world for Nina. Born into poverty, the daughter of a wayward father and an anemic mother, she was well on toward womanhood before she realized that there was anything but hardship in this world. As she blossomed into womanod and her good looks became a settled acquisition, she found that they prought her little but persecution.

But she had sense enough, while yet child, to realize that education meant increased earning capacity. She read the newspapers and discovered that there were various ways whereby some sort of education could be obtained at slight expense. There were night schools, free lecture courses, corndence schools, museums, pubic libraries. To all of these sources rom time to time she applied, with no inconsiderable results. But through all her progress from the depths of poverty and ignorance to a moderate ree of intelligence and sophistication, she had found her path beset by nen. She had found many men anxlous to improve her education, but the motives of few of these instructors turned out to be altruistic. By the time she was twenty years old she l come to regard men as a race of or with a tire do ves. She admitted no exceptions.

And it was in pursuance of this con firmed philosophy of life and action that she had come tonight to the home of Doris Colby, and now that she was here, although even her settled assur ance was a little ruffled, she had no thought of turning back.

She was not even daunted by the sudden appearance of the beautiful Miss Colby herself, when the latter came into the drawing room a moment

"How do you do," said Doris. "How do you do," said Nina.

There was a moment's mutual inspection, as always between two women who meet for the first time-and it is probable that in that fraction of a second each one of them had come to some definite conclusion about the other. Each one of them had probably said to herself: "I like her." or "I don't like her." But aloud Miss Colby : blas

"What can I do for you, Miss Morgan?-that was the name, was it not?" "Yes, Nina Morgan."

"I don't think I know you, do 1?" said the daughter of the house.

"No," said Nina, "we have never met, but I have seen you several times.

"Yes. You see, I am a secretary in the office of Stanley and Waterman." "Indeed?" said Doris. "Perhaps you bring me a message from one of them?"

"Not exactly," replied Nina, "and yet in a way, perhaps,"

"You interest me," murmured Doris 'won't you sit down?"

Nina summoned all her resolution and began: "I've come to tell you something, Miss Colby, which it is

It is a matter that concerns my happiness deeply, and your own also. perhaps even more deeply than mine But if you cannot give me your word of honor never to repeat to anyone what am going to tell you, there is nothing for me to do but shut my

"Yes," continued Doris, while the smile still lingered in the corners of ber mouth, "it shall be our little se cret. And now what is it?"

Nina lifted her black eyes from the rug and fixed them upon the eyes of the other. "I suppose," she begut 'you will be curious as to my motive You will perhaps call it revenge, and it is partly that-I don't deny it. But it is more than that. I am determined that my happiness and yours shall not be ruined by the same man, if I can prevent it."

The violet eyes widened in surprise Really," breathed Doris.

"I do hope," went on the other. 'you won't think me impertinent or impudent or curious, and I am sure you won't when you have heard me out. But the fact is that I have reason to suppose that you are considering the possibility of marrying a certain man."

"Upon my word," cried Doris, with a touch of sarcasm, "how things do get about! And how, may I ask, have you arrived at this conclusion?"

"From various sources," answered Nina. "I have seen you occasionally in public in company with the man ! mean. I have seen frequent references to the possibility of your engagement to one or two of those gossipy society papers, and what's more, I have had some talk with the man himself upon this very subject."

"I suppose," said Dorls Colby, "that l ought to ask you to go away at

"Please, please don't," said Nina quickly, and something in her sudden earnestness caught and held the other. "If you do you will regret it as long as you live, believe me."

"Very well," said Doris, after a mo ment's reflection, "but I warn you if what you have to say is merely silly gossip, actuated by a spirit of petty malice, it will have no effect whatever upon me."

"I'll take that chance," said Nina, for I know full well that when you have heard me, you will recognize that what I tell you must be the truth.

The golden head bowed slightly. "I am waiting," said Dorls. 'Very well, then," said Nina, "and again I remind you that what I am going to say is said upon the assurance of your solemn word of honer never to repent it. If you will say o me, right here and now, that you have no intention whatever of marrying Jim Stanley, why I'll say goodnight and good by, without further

"So-that's it,' said Doris quietly, "Well," inquired Nina, "shall I go n, or shall I say good night?" "Go on," said Doris briefly.

"After what I have already told you." continued Nina. "the mention of his name almost completes my story. He has wrecked my life-that is the long and the short of it." 'In the-usual way?' murmured

"Oh, yes," cried Nina passionately "I know, I know! It is the oldest story in the world, but I suppose it will be told and told and told again as long as the world stands and men are what they are." "Of course I don't believe it," said

Doris quietly.

"Why not?" said Nina.

"Because I know Jim Stanley." "Then perhaps," said Nina, "perhaps you will tell me what you think my motive could possibly be in doing a thing like this? Do you think any thing but a sense of desperation would have driven me to it?"

The shot went home, and Nina saw

"I can't believe it. I can't believe it," murmured Doris. "Jim Stanley, of all men in the world!"

"Oh, yes. I know," said Nina, "I know well enough how you must feel about him. I've been through it all. I hadn't had any too square a deal from life when I first met Jim Stanley, and when he came into my life I felt as you do, that here at last was a man I could tie to. Oh, he has a way with him."

"God forbid," replied the other. She grew suddenly cold. Little ehivers ran up and down her spine. She wanted to go away and be alone. She hated the sight of this dark woman sitting there implacably before her. She hated the sound of her voice, and the glance of those Spanish black eyes.

Something of this feeling Nina must have sensed, for she went on quickly: "Try and think what it cost me to come and tell you this. Try and put yourself for a moment in my position. So-and-so's conception of Lincoln. Senator Beveridge, however, undertook to present, not Beveridge's Lincoln, but Lincoln . . What is more. Beveridge dld what he started out to do."

How does it happen then that the real Lincoln has at last been revealed by a biographer? Perhaps the answer can be found in a statement by Mr Bowers in which he commented upon the fact that Beveridge does justice to the true greatness of Stephen A. Douglas as it has never been done by historian before. He writes "There was probably a psychological reason for the Beverldge understand ing of Douglas-for there are some gifts and careers of the two men large number of people." In America of dash and a certain masterfulness striking resemblances in both the Both were orators, fighters, possessed of manner; both won renown early; both were chairmen of the senate committee on territories and helped mold legislation that made states: both incurred the enmity of powerful elements in their own party." the same way it may be said that Beveridge had an understanding of Lincoln because both were skillful politicians who became statesmen in the truest sense of the word and in his own disappointment in the arena of politics. Beveridge could appreciate the disappointment which came to Lincoln early in his political enreer. So it seems entirely plausible coln's life when the evolution of the politician into the statesman was taking place, as it was in the period which Beveridge covers in his two volumes, there should result an adequate understanding of the forces which were shaping his life and which were to make him the great man that he was. The story of how this latest Lin coln blographer set about and accomplished his task is in itself a romantic one. Several years ago Beveridge noted principally as a brilliant erator and one of the outstanding personalities in the United States senate amazed the literary world with his two-volume "Life of John Marshall." It was balled by scholars not as only one of the finest blographies that had ever been written by an American. but as a noteworthy contribution to American history because Beveridge had made a sweeping and magnificent interpretation of the early days of the republic through the life of the great chief justice. When in 1922 Beveridge suffered his final disappointment in politics and saw that he had missed a promised greatness in this field of activity, he again turned to writing and determined to take up again the thread of the American story, interpreting a later phase of It than the Marshall phase in terms of the career of a man greater even than Marshall-Abraham Lincoln. Of that ambitious project and what it involved. Bowers says:

Needless to say, Mr. Beveridge did not approach his colossal task in the spirit of an iconoclast; nor in that of a blind worshiper, willing to prostitute his art as a biographer to the preser-vation of a myth. We have heard him say that he would hardly have had the courage to undertake the task at all had he had the slightest conception of the superficiality with which the field had been searched before.

It was a tremendous task. It meant weary months with musty manuscripts searching the long deserted avenues that promised the possibility of new light, examining thousands of old let ters, turning the innumerable pages of old, yellowing newspapers and travel-ing over the continent on many a fruitless, as well as fruitful, journey. Scarcely had he begun, when he was appalled at the discovery of how in-adequately the work had been done before, high after myth faded out before his searchlight. Thus, quite early, he said to the writer that if he were asked to speak on Lincoln he would decline. "I do not know just now what I think of Lincoln."

As he proceeded, the task grew in magnitude until, at times, he felt so utterly discouraged that he half wished to abandon it. Instead of having before him the not too laborious mission of a new interpretation, he found himself confronted with the necessity of subjecting himself to the hardships of pioneering for facts and he grimly buckled down to his job. One day he half seriously told Jus-tice Holmes, a neighbor at Beverly farms, that should be hear of the finding in the woods of a haggard old man, dead from exhaustion, he would know that it was a friend of his who had been foolish enough to attempt a

One instance of the painstaking labor which Beveridge gave to his monumental task is that wherein he obtained his information about Lincoln's career as a member of the Illinois legislature. Other biographers have hurried over this period partly because the only first-hand informa tion on it is contained in the legislative reports which are included in several huge volumes, printed in small type and having no index. What Beveridge did was to go to Springfield, dig out these dust-covered volumes and with the aid of a magnifying was, instead of a few hasty paragraphs such as other biographers have written about Lincoln the legislator, Beveridge's study devotes 137 pages to this period which had a vital importance in shaping the character and later career of Lincoln. Another instance lies in the statement that he wrote and rewrote the chapters of his books, not once, nor twice, but many times. One of them was rewritten 15 times before be was satisfied with it!

"At this point the pen of the writer stopped, leaving the chapter in its first draft." Such is the statement made at the end of the chapter on "The Great Debate" in the second volume of Beveridge's Lincoln, "At Mr. Beveridge's elbow were the volumes of the Debates and Schurz's autobiography, open at the pages whence he had taken the last quotations or references. On the table near his hand, were the heaps of notes prepared for the chapter, extracts from letters, newspapers, proceedings of conventions and legislatures, and photostats of the more important manuscripts he had found in public and private collection." For Death had stayed the hand of the great blographer of a great man. In April, 1927. Albert J. Beveridge died suddenly in the prime of his life with his story half told. Barton, another noted Lincoln biograph r, has well said of Beveridge's "Lincoln" "It ends like Schubert's Unfinished Symphony." is one of the greatest tragedles in literary history," says Bowers, who pays this final tribute to Beveridge: "However, we may rejoice in the realization that he has done for the first fifty years (of Lincoln's life) that which has never been done before, and no other could do so well. He has raised in his Marshall and Lincoln a monument to himself which will out last marble and before which future generations will pay homage to his genius as an interpreter of the American spirit."

DR. CALDWELL'S THREE RULES

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, conetipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for consti-pation is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not habit forming.

The Doctor never did approve of dras-tic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, head-aches, and to break up fevers and colds. Get a bottle today, at any drugstore and coles. Get a bottle today, at any drugstore and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open. COD LIVER OIL AIDS EARLY CHICK

Three Tests Made at North Carolina Station.

Three separate tests made lately at the North Carolina experiment stacod liver oil in the mash feed supplied to early hatched chicks. "Chicks reared in our laboratories where we could control nearly all conditions have proven the value of cod liver oil in the mash feed," de clares Dr. B. F. Kaupp, head of the poultry department at State college. "One lot of chicks fed a complete ration except for the vitamines, broke in health in the fifth week. The chicks receiving 1 per cent of the tested oil in the same kind of mash did not break in health and were strong and well developed. In a second test, the chicks which were not allowed to run out-of-doors nor receive direct sunlight gave us exactly the same results. Those receiving the oil were strong and well and were sold as broilers Those receiving only the straight mash and grain feed broke in health at the end of the fifth week. Doctor Kaupp states that a third flock was carried on the basic ration without oil out were given all the tender rape that they would eat. These broke in health in the seventh week Indicating that they secured some vitamines from the green feed but not enough to keep them in good health. In another test, at the coastal plain station, one lot of chicks was allowed to run on a fresh, green pasture three or four hours during the middle of the day with the result that they did not break in health but were not so large and strong as the chicks in the cod liver oil flock. Doctor Kaupp states that those chicks which run out-of-doors pick up other things which are required for good health and development, but usually this is not sufficient as the tests with the cod liver oil show.

As a result of all the tests, Doctor Kaupp believes that the expense of using I per cent of this oil is well worth while. It holds up the health and gives stronger constitutional vigor

Coccidiosis Is Very

Destructive to Chicks Coccidiosis is a disease of the intestines and while it affects all birds It is especially destructive to chicks up to two months old. The cause is a microscopic organism. The transmission of infection from diseased to healthy birds occurs by cont tien of the feed, water and ground. oure, thereby often preventing serious | The coccidia multiply with great rapidity in the intestines and enormous numbers are discharged in the drop-

The most prominent and characteristic symptoms in nearly all cases are white, diarrheal discharges and the rapid wasting away of the affected birds. Adult birds have considerable resistance to this germ and the disease is frequently seen in the chronic

There is no satisfactory cure for this disease in young chickens.

Balanced Ration for

Hens Very Important Until about fifty years ago chickens were fed only grain and since they were permitted to range at will they secured their essential requirements so they could live and lay some eggs during the spring. About this time it was discovered that additional protein in form of meat or milk fed with the grains became known as the balanced ration-a ration in which the surplus carbohydrates of the grains were balanced in better proportion by adding a protein concentrate. It was the balanced ration that first made commercial poultry keeping possible, but in the light of recent information on the nutrition of chickens, the poultryman's feeding problem of today is to complete the balanced ration.

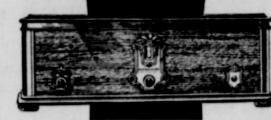

Age to Keep Hens

With Leghorns, Anconas, Minorcas and birds of this type, the hens of the right type may be kept until they are three years old. It is not usually advisable to keep them after they have reached three years of age. With the general purpose breeds, such as Rhode Island Reds, Plymouth Rocks, Orpingtons, etc., it is usually best to sell them after they are two years old. Extremely valuable hens can sometimes be kept five years, but this is quite unusual.

Thin-Shelled Eggs

Whenever there is a late spring with a great deal of cloudy weather, many flocks lay thin-shelled eggs. The eggshell quality from such a flock will begin to improve as soon as the hens get into direct sunlight. It is a comm observation that when a flock is laying thin-shelled eggs and is turned out-of-doors in the sun, the shell quality improves. It is very important in managing a flock to open the windows on sunshiny days during the winter
