The hotel management were all sympathy. Monsieur need not worry. Let him dine in comfort. The instant Mademoiselle returned or word of her arrived he should be apprised. In the meantime, why concern himself unnecessarily?

"They're right," said Hugh as we grouped in the lobby, canvassing our next step. "We've had a hard day, and we need food. Let's eat. By the way, Nikka, did you see your gypsies?

"No, and if anything much had gone wrong, I think-at least, there's a strong probability-they would spot it sooner or later and report to me." "Obviously, we have done all we can for the present," said Vernon King. "Hugh's suggestion is a good one. Perhaps food and a rest will We went to the Kings' sitting room, where we had breakfasted that morning, and sat down wearily discouraged, disheartened, more than a little dismayed. But as my uncle had said. food and wine and black coffee brightened our despondency. We were on the point of deciding that the best polley would be to risk dividing forces.

while Nikka and I attempted to investigate Sokaki Mayseri, when Watkins entered unannounced. He was very pale. His cellar was streaked with blood. There was an ugly bump on the side of his head. He dragged one foot after the other. "Oh, your ludship," be murmured.

"I beg your pardon, I'm sure your idship-no disrespect intended-fair dead beat I am, sir-my 'ead and Hugh selzed a glass of champagne and carried it to him, holding the glass to his lips.

"Where is-" Hugh's tongue boggled Betty's name.

"They-they've-took 'er, your indship," answered Watkins faintly. "How? Where? Is she alive?"

King sprang from his clair, wringing his bands. "Oh, my G-d! She is all I have!

What has happened? Where is she? Please tell me!" "Walt a minute," said Nikka quietly. 'He's all in. Give him food and some more to drink. That's right, Jack.

There's a bottle of whisky over there. Pour a stiff dram into a cup of coffee, With stimulan's to help him, and a cold cloth on his head, Watkins regained control of himself. "It 'appened so quick i don't know rightly 'ow it was," he said. "We 'ad run out beyond the Princess Islands. and I saw here was if the shipping around, your judship and gentlemen And then there was a fishing boat with power bore down on us. Miss Betty and I, we didn't think anything about it until 's was right on us. Even then we thought they'd only lost control of their rudder like. But when they bumped us and tumbled aboard knew they wasn't up to no good, your ludship."

"Miss Betty reached for 'er gun. and so did L But somebody grabbed 'er, and somebody else pushed me over, at the same time a chap lashed at me with an iron-weighted club. E thought 'e'd knocked my brains out an 'e would, too, except I fell so fast account of bein pushed I was under the level of the rall when the club 'it me and most of the blow went into the rail. Splintered It, it did. you; judship. And but for that I wouldn't be ere."

"And Miss Betty?" questioned Hugh

"I don't know, your ludship. When saw anything again I was lyin' on the floor of the cockpit, dusk was coming on and the launch was drifted far out to sea. They'd stopped the en gine. I don't know 'ow I got back 'ere. My 'ead went round and round But I thought if I could get to you. your judship and gentlemen, maybe we could think of something else to do. Just give me a chance to lay my ands on that 'ere Tootoo! I'll bash is end for im."

"They had a spare trick ready commented Nikka. "Our visit to Hill ml was part of a plot to get hold of Betty. You see, they would have caught her, whether she had gone sailing or not."

"You said this afternoon we had our back to the wall." said Hugh. "You're right. They've ficked us. Our only chance is to clean them up."

The room telephone rang. King answe ed it

"Send him up," he said. And to Nikka: "A gypsy asking for you."
"That will be Wasso Mikati," cried Nikka. "He must have tearned some thing. I thought he would. Don't be downhearted, Hugh. This hand is a long way from being played out. It to so I thought all along: we have got to meet savagery with savgery. It is a care of kill or be killed."

"I am thinking of her," retorted ! Nikka. "If we hope in rescue her we must strike hard. Give them time, let them strengthen their position--and she will go to some harem in Anatolia or to a procurer in Salonika. I tell you, I know. We are dealing with men and women who have no mercy, who fight like animals, who are animals, Well, from now on, Nikka Zaranko will meet them on their own ground."

There was a knock on the door. Wasso Mikali entered, his garish gypsy dress in striking contrast to the western furnishings and our own conventional garments.

"I greet you, son of my sister," he sald calmly. "My young men, watching in Sokaki Masyeri this evening. beheld Tokalii's party carry in a bundle in - sack, which was a body. I have bastened that you should know Nikka clasped his hand. "It is well my uncle. I thank you for the news. This is a night of blood. We shall all dip our blades before the sun rises tomorrow."

"My beart is glad," replied Wasso Mikali, with flashing eyes. "My young men's knives are eager. Their hands are ready. What is the plan?" Nikka turned to us.

"I must go with my people," he said. "Hugh, do you and Jack think a surprise attack through the drain; That would give us a chance to force the street entrance, and we should have them between two fire :

"And where am I going to se?" demanded "ernon King indignantly.

"This will be a nasty affeir, pro fessor," returned N'kka. "You ought to say out. We are younger men, and we are used to .his kind of thing."

"Betty is my daughter, and I am as able to fight for her as any you," answered King. "I know how to handle a pistol."

"We ought not to refuse, you know. said Hugh. "Every man is going to

"I certainly expect to be counted," replied King

"Me, too your judship and Mr. Nik ka, sir," spoke up Watty, lunging to his feet. "Yes, I will, gentlemen. You give me another glass of that, 'ere whisky or arak or whatever it is, and I'll fight 'em all by myself. Yes, will. And i guess I can swing a crowoar, if I 'ave got a bump on my 'ead Let me at 'em, gentlemen, only let me. That's all I ask."

it was beginning to rain when we left the hotel, with occasional peals of thunder; but we welcomed the change in the weather as a factor aid ing the surprise attack we had intended. At the Galata end of the low er bridge, which was deserted as usual after dark, we dismissed our taxi, and held a final brief council of war in a patch of shadows next to the bridge abutment, King, Hugh, Watkins and were to embark on the Curiew, while Nikka and Wasso Mikali tramped to the Khan of the Georgians and railled Mikali six young men. Then they were to go to Sokaki Masyeri and wait for a platol shot, which would be the signal that we had passed through the drain and were at grips with the enemy. Hugh and Nikka compared watches and agreed that we should be in Tokalji's ho. se not later than helfpast ten. The rain let up as we shook hands and wished each other luck, but by the time the Curtew was chugging down the Golden Fora it had set in again with tripled violence, lashed on by a notheast gale. At intervals broad splotches of lightning bathed the city to our right in a ghastly greenish glow. And when we emerged into the Bosphorus we found a fairly high ses our way along, lights out, motor run-ning at hals speed, taking bearings whenever the jagged lightning streaks illuminated the waters.

I was worried by the frequency of the lightning displays, but fortunately, as we sighted the round tower on the walls, which was our first landmark for Tokalji's house, there was a lull in the storm. We were also favored in having the old sea walls act as a lee for us and we worked in closer to the shore. The waves moderated and the fish-hook curve of the rulned jetty broke their remaining force. When Watkins had made fast bow and stern lines to a couple of masses of battered masonry the Curiew floated almost as easily as at her moorings by the Mano'-war dock But the difficulties of navigation in the darkness and the necessity for extreme care had slowed our progress, and, we were some minutes behind our schedule. The rocks of the jetty, too, were awash, and it was as much as your life was worth to slip, for a fall might mean a broken head or limb. At one point, indeed. several of us lost the jetty altogether and were obliged to swim half a dozen strokes to the beach. Watkins, who insisted on arming himself with a rowbar, would have drowned if Hugh had not hauled him in by the scruff of the neck. It was impossible to see anything, except once when a lightning flash streaked the sky and struck with a stunning report to Scutari across the Straits. And then we were so afraid of being discovered that we froze stiff as close to the rocks as possible The beach, ifke the jetty, was under water. The waves lapped up to the foot of the walls, and we stumbled desperately over submerged rocks and oowlders. Watkins, just abend of me in line, tripped, and very nearly knocked my brains out with his infernal crowbar. I begged him to drop it, but he doggedly refused.

"I'm no knife fighter, Mister Jack. sir," he said, "and I'm intending to give the persons that 'it me a taste of their own stew like."

We identified the opening of the ewer by the hollow, booming sound with which, every now and then, an inusually high wave would roll over its lip. It sounded like the beating of watery bass drum. The rain was driving down again, and the wind you. Bunglers, every one." blew overhead with a shrill vehemence that was deafening.

"We'll never be able to get through that 'ell-'ole tonight, Mister Jack, sir." screamed Watkins in my ear. "We'll be drowned with the rats." I was somewhat of Watty's opinion. myself, but managed to placate him. Hugh, without any hesitation, yelled: "One at a time!" and slipped into the sewer mouth between two waves. King followed : Im, and Watty and I brought up the rear. We were cheered to find the place less terrifying than we had imagined it. The water was thigh-deep, instead of knee-deep, as it had been when we escaped from the dungeon; but once you had fumbled your way by torchlight over the jagged moraine that blocked the first thirty knife." feet, the footing became safer and the water shallowed. Just the same, I never think of the place without shuddering. It was deathly silent, except for the ceaseless seepage of moisture, the occasionat muffled boom of a wave spattering over its mouth and the squeaking of the gigantic black rats that swam ahead of us or wriggled into cracks in the serried courses of the masonry. Our electric torches shone feebly on the mossy walls, with their sickening fungus growths, their bright green. pendent weeds. Amorphous plants hung from the root. The atmosphere was slimy, notsome, unclean. And alway there was the "drip-drip-drip" of

We breathed more comfortably when our torches revealed overhead the bars of the stone grating in the floor

"All quiet above," whispered Hugh, after ilstening intently. "Dark as b-l, too. I say, how much farther do you suppose this drain goes?"

He trained his torch into the thick murk of the immense tube which extended beyond the grating as far as our eyes could penetrate.

"I'm inclined to believe it continues into the city, probably as far as the site of the forum of Theodosius," King replied, his scholar's interest awake. That was a region of palaces which would have required such a work of engineering. It should be well worth

"Never mind that now," urged Hugh. 'We have another task on hand."

He price up the grating with Watty's crowbar, the butt of which we rested on the ledge in which the grating fitted. This secured a space sufficiently wide for us to squeeze through, and after all of us had climbed up we eased the grating back into its bed, so that there was no trace remaining of our entrance.

The dungeon was the came barren tube of dusty stone that we had left by virtue of Watkins' aid. The ropes that had bound u. were still on the floor where we had cast them. The door we had broken leaned against the wall Obviously, Tokalji and his people and never ever suspected how we es aped. It was five minutes to eleven when we gained the durgeon, and we knew that Nikka must be at a loss to account for our failure to signal him. He might suppose us to be casualties of the storm, and in desperation, attack alone on his own account. So we wasted no time, beyond shaking the water from our clothes.

The lower passage and cellars were deserted, but as we climbed the stairs leading to the central hall opening on the litle atrium between the Garden of the Cedars and the large chamber which Tokalii occupied we heard a distant murmur of voices in disagreement. Investigation proved the ball to be unoccupied, and we were presently grouped on its uneven floor, with only a curtain separating us from the drama going on in the atrium. The rain was drumming down overhead; the wind howled with undiminished force; and at intervals the thunder boomed like a barrage of 155s.

"No, you are wrong. Touton, It is everybody's business," said Hilver in French.

"You may be chief, but you have no right to risk common property," protested Sandra's resonant voice. Toutou sparled something in his guttural, indistinct, animal speech. "-ilke her, and that's enough," it concluded. "I'm tired of the rest of

"Have it your own way," said Serge, "but it's not business. She's worth so much to us."

"One might suppose you a green youth," cut in Maude Hilyer's frigid tones. "Why should you endanger our coup for a colorless chit like-" "I say there is no risk," snapped Toutou. "What do I care for them?

What does it matter what they-" "Yes, yes," Interrupted Hillyer, "but you Continentals don't appreciate the Anglo-Saxons' feeling about their wom-

They evidently went, for we could hear the shuffling of feet, with an undercurrent of muttered curses and objurgations. Hugh started forward, pistol in hand, but I checked him. This was no time for unpremeditated action. There was a moment of silence

-and a woman's cry of batred. "Leave me alone, you beast! If you touch me. I'll bite you! You can't bind my teeth. Ah-" It was Betty's voice, and Hugh shook me off and was at the curtain with his hand on the folds before I could reach nim. But reach him I did, and another interruption helped me to restrain him. King, his face white and his hands shaking, joined us. Watkins lurked behind us.

"Let me-" gasped Hugh.

one's mind a picture of paim-dotted islets girt with white sands in a tropical , sea, but geologists find coral reefs in the midst of great continents. These, of course, belong to a past age of the earth's history, but on that account they are the more interesting Within late years several remarkable reefs of fossil coral have been explored near Balnbridge, on the Flint river, in Georgia. In one case a very river, in Georgia. In one case a very iarge portion of the reef exposed consisted of coral heads, some of which were more than a foot in diameter. Relief from Gas Stomach Pains Dizziness

The doctors tell us that 90 per cent of all sickness is due to stomach and bowel troubles. You can't be well if your digestion is bad; you are likely to get sick unless you relish food and digest it properly.

Tanlac has a wonderful record as a relief from digestive troubles, even those of years' standing.

Mr. James F. Campbell, of 1012
W. Fifth St., Little Rock, Ark., says: "I had bloating after eating. My rheumatism was so had I could hardly raise my arms. Now I can eat anything and do a good day's work."

If you suffer from gas, pains in the stomach or bowels, dizziness, nausea, constipation, or torpid liver; if you have no appetite, can't sleep and are nervous and all run down, you need Tanlac. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is made today according to the original formula, from herbs and other pure ingredients. It is pleasant-tasting; thorough in the most obstinate cases; cently effective for women and children. Above all, it represents a doctor's choice of what is safe for the

Spain-Africa Bridge Planned

Spain and Africa may be connected by a gigantic bridge across the strait of Gibraltar, if the plans submitted to the department of public works in Madrid by a Spanish engineer are accepted. He would support the structure on submerged but firmly anchored floats, and equilibrium would be maintained by opposing forces, one tending to bring the floats to the surface. and the other working to draw them to the bottom by cables. To prevent damage by the weather, parts of the bridge would be covered.

Found Business Could

tion. Personally he didn't see how the concern was going to operate without him, but when the president assured him that everything would be perfectly all right he left. He falled to enjoy himself much, however, for he was continually thinking of the muddle he would have to straighten out when he returned to work. The first day back he rushed into the president's office.

"Well, Mr. Blank, I'm back now. I suppose it's been hard on you overseeing all my work."

The president smiled. "I took my he .emarked.

"Who took care on the business?" The president's smile turned into a decidedly self-satisfied smirk. "Your secretary did to a great extent." he replied, "and so far as I can see it never was run better."-Springfield

LAYING HOUSES IN NEED OF CLEANING

Scrape and Scrub Various Utensils Made Use Of.

Information to poultrymen concerning fall cleaning of poultry houses is given in a statement just issued by Hoyt M. Wells, poultryman for the Colorado Agricultural college.

"The laying house for the pullets should be given a thorough cleaning," says Wells. "All dropping boards, roosts, nesting boxes, feeders and drinking containers ought to be scraped and scrubbed with a good disinfectant. Roosts may be painted with a carbolineum product to control red mites. Old litter should be removed from the floor, and if the floor is wooden or concrete, it should be scraped and sprayed with a good dis-Infectant.

"White-washing walls and celling will give greater sanitation and pro vide more light in the house in wintertime. White-wash may be applied best with a force spray pump." This mixture gives good results: Slack lump lime with water to the consistency of cream. Take five quarts of this, add one pint of good coal tar disinfectant and one quart of kerosene, stir thoroughly, and add an equal amount of water. Strain the whitewash through a fine screen or a piece of burlap before using it in the sprayer.

"Window lights should be cleaned and broken ones replaced. Sweep down all muslin curtains, and replace with new muslin those that are too dirty or torn,

"This is the best time of the year to repair the roof, or put on a new one. Check over all seams on patent roofing for leaks.

"A good deep litter should be put in the laying house next, and new nesting material in the nest boxes. Remove old litter and replace with bright, clean straw every four weeks or oftener, if necessary.'

Scratching Found Not Essential to Fowls

Three flocks of Rhode Island Reds

and three White Leghorns at the University of Illinois indicated that hens do as well when fed grain in boxes as when they are obliged to scratch for it in deep litter. This method has the advantage of being much cleaner and more sanltary.

One lot of each breed was fed dry mash in hoppers and scratch grain morning and night in straw litter. second lot received dry mash in hop pers, but the grain was fed twice daily in shallow troughs. For the third vacation at the same time you did," lot the scratch grain was ground and mixed with the mush and the whole ration self-fed in hoppers.

No high records were made, but the egg yields were not affected mate Alstorian, was talking about the scanrially by the methods of feeding. The dal over American divorces that has test ran for 41 weeks.

The grain mixture was shelled corn. 70 pounds and oars, 30 pounds. The lawyers and court officials were takmash was made up of 17 pounds each ing bribes to push these divorces of ground corn, ground oats, wheat through. Who laid bare the scandals? bran and flour middlings, 25 pounds American lawyers. Because they of dried buttermilk, 5 pounds of bonemeal and 2 pounds of salt.

For the gosling a mixture of corn meal, bran and ground oats mixed steps. with the table scraps and moistened with milk or water to a crumbly consistency is satisfactory.

Records kept by poultry flock owners show that culling of flocks and marketing of unprofitable layers and surplus broilers are highly profitable

Eggs from hens have a higher rate of hatchability than those from pullets, and produce larger and more vigorous chicks.
