Rules Persons 21 After Feb. 1 Entitled to Vote

Austin, July 20.—Attorney General William McCraw ruled today that persons who have become 21 since February 1 may vote in the primary Saturday, regardless of whether they were able to obtain exemption certificates before February 1.

For a time it appeared that many persons just past 21 would not be permitted to vote because they were unable to procure exemption certificates before February 1. Tax collectors refused them certificates under an old interpretation of the statutes to the effect that a person was not entitled to vote unless he was 21 before the first day of February before the election.

In cities of 10,000 or more, the attorney general held, the voter who has become of age since February 1 may obtain his exemption certificate any time before he offers to vote. In cities of less than 10,000 he may vote without an exemption certificate and is required only to make an affidavit of his age if his right to vote is challenged, McCraw ruled.

The attorney general pointed out that his ruling would apply to all elections this year, but not to those in future years.

At noon and at night a barbecue dinner was served. In the afternoon a game of softball was played between Langtry and Dryden, with Dryden coming out as winner.

Those from Sanderson who attended were Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Watts and Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Gilley. The following from Dryden: Mr. and Mrs. A. Billings, Mr. and Mrs. Chester Smith, Mr. and Mrs. R. O. Kessler, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Hill, Milton Smith and Ernest Miller.

Calf roping, goat roping, steer riding, steer break-away roping and wild burro teaming will be among the different attractions to be offered. Each night there will be a big dance at the C. A. C. hall with music by the Skyrockets, radio broadcasting orchestra from Pecos.

A saddle, to be given away for the best 2-day average in calf roping, is now on display in one of the windows of the Empire Cleaners and Tailors shop.

Health Letter

HOT WEATHER CALLS FOR CAREFUL LIVING

Keeping cool, standing the heat during the hot summer months is in a large measure dependent on the individual, health authorities agree. Over indulgence in food or exercise may cause much suffering.

"The clothes we wear and the food we eat play an important role in keeping us comfortable in hot weather," said Dr. John W. Brown, state health officer.

"Summer clothing should be light in weight and color and of a porous texture. White clothes reflect the rays of the sun and are cooler. Frequent change of clothing, particularly of that next to the skin, is especially conducive to comfort.

"The summer diet should consist of light, nutritious, and easily digested foods. Fresh fruits and vegetables are particularly desirable as hot weather foods because of their ease of digestion and the wide range of variety in the manner of serving them. Meat and heavy pastries should be eaten sparingly.

"Exercise should be taken in hot weather, but good judgment must be used in the amount taken. Swimming is fine exercise and more refreshing than other forms of exercise. If sun baths are indulged in, care should be taken by exposing the body for short periods in the beginning.

"Plenty of rest is necessary in hot weather. Sleep a sufficient number of hours and eat at regular meal times. Acquire regular habits of living and develop a cheerful outlook on life, and you will find that it will help you to spend a comfortable summer at home or on vacation."

"Best in the West," Sanderson's Second Annual Rodeo, Aug. 6-7.

VOTE to Re-elect

ERNEST O. THOMPSON Railroad Commissioner

Here is the record of achievement of the Railroad Commission of Texas during the past four years, under the leadership of Ernest O. Thompson, as the Commission's chairman—

- Reduced gas rates to consumers in 51 Texas towns and cities, saving $400,000 annually for the man who pays the gas bill.
- Ordered other reductions, which when finally adjudicated by the courts, will result in substantial gas rate reductions to gas consumers of 270 additional towns and cities, if the courts uphold the Commission's orders.
- Stopped the flow of "hot oil" in Texas, conserving the people's heritage of natural resources.
- Administered the State's conservation laws so as to raise the demand for Texas oil 400,000 barrels daily, bringing into Texas $150,000,000 annually of additional new cash wealth.
- Raised common school, University of Texas, and A. & M. College annual oil income from school lands from $1,569,266.22 for the year 1932-33 to $3,797,562.27 for the year 1934-35, by wise enforcement of conservation laws. This was a clear dividend for school children of $2,228,296.05 a year.
- Stopped the waste of Texas' natural gas, amounting to a billion cubic feet of gas daily.
- Made the highways of Texas safer for motorists by strict regulation of licensed trucks and buses. Less than six Texas motorists were killed last year in accidents in which licensed trucks and buses figured.
- Saved the cotton farmers of Texas from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000 per year by obtaining permanent reduction of cotton rail freight rates. Effected additional large freight savings for growers of coarse grains, and assisted the ranchman through the drought period by emergency rates on livestock and livestock feeds.

 The groom is the son of Jim Haley, pioneer resident of Sanderson and Terrell county, and was made Sanderson and Dryden home, and attended our public schools. He is proprietor of the Last Chance lunchroom, located one mile east of town, on highway No. 3.
 They will make their home here.

DUNNAM-THOMPSON WEDDING SATURDAY
 At her home in this city on last Saturday morning, at ten-thirty o'clock, Miss Floreine Thompson became the bride of J. Riley Dunnam. The impressive ring ceremony was said by the Rev. S. M. Mims, and was witnessed by the members of the bride's immediate family and a few close friends.
 Mr. and Mrs. Dunnam left after ceremony on a wedding trip to San Angelo, Sweetwater and Midland, and after July 25 they will be at home in Del Rio at 200 St. Martin street.

 The groom is well and favorably known in Sanderson, having been employed at the Times office since 1933. He is the son of J. E. Dunnam of Sonora and a nephew of Miss Rosa Dunnam who made her home here with him. He attended Austin high school, and is now making his home in Del Rio where he is employed by the Del Rio Evening News as shop foreman of the mechanical department.

LET'S TALK ABOUT CLOTHES
 By a Young Modern (CIA)

Denton.—(CIA).—Black and white retains top billing in the season's fashion revue. The smart young women have found that nothing looks cooler, crisper, and generally more fetching on hot days than the clean cut contrast of this combination.
 Black linen is one of the best bets of the season. It's featured in suits and simple tailored frocks with starched white accessories. The classic black linen suit, for its effectiveness, depends on careful tailoring, perfect fit and spotless accessories. It's grand with a chalk-white blouse, one of those crownless, washable white gloves, bag and shoes. The black linen shirt waist dress fastens all the way down the front with big white pearl buttons. It has short sleeves slightly puffed, and dramatizes the whole effect with a white patent belt.
 For more dressy occasions girls at Texas State College for Women (CIA) suggest a white mossy crepe frock with a black yoke of the same weave. Three medium white patent buttons fasten the yoke up to a tiny collar, and a black and white woven belt gives further contrast. White ground prints with black motifs are also good for summer sheers. They are shown in jacket and tunic styles with bright accessories.
 If you happen to have a short-sleeved black crepe dress left over from spring, you can turn it into a brand new summer costume by adding white accessories and one of those chalk-white swaggy jackets of cool slippery sharkskin. A single bright color contrast in a flower will be especially effective at the neckline.

 Mrs. C. W. Barker and daughters, Mabel and Jane, left last Friday morning to visit relatives in Houston. On their vacation they will also visit in Beaumont.
 Mrs. J. W. Downum has as her guests this week her mother, Mrs. A. J. Horton of Quitman, and her brother and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Horton, of Nacogdoches.
 Mr. and Mrs. Earl Henning and children of Woodburo, Texas, came in last Thursday and are visiting Mrs. Henning's father Jim Haley, and other relatives here.
 Mrs. H. B. Shows and daughter, Juanita, enroute to their home in Beaumont from a visit in Tucson, Arizona, came in last Saturday and visited in Sanderson this week with Mr. Shows, T. & N. O. brakeman on the west end.

ZANE GREY'S 'DESERT GOLD' WITH STAR CAST AT THE PRINCESS TONIGHT

Zane Grey, noted writer of stories of the great West, will again be represented on the local screen when Paramount's screen adaptation of the novel "Desert Gold," will be shown at the Princess tonight and Saturday, July 24-25.
 Prominently cast in this western story are such prominent actors as Larry "Buster" Crabbe, Marsha Hunt, Tom Keene, Raymond Hatton, Monte Blue and Robert Cummings.
 The story deals with the abduction of a young Indian chieftain by an unscrupulous mine promoter seeking to rob the Indian tribe of a hidden gold mine. After being lashed almost to death for refusing to betray the location of the mine, the young chieftain is rescued by a mining engineer, in love with the mine promoter's fiancée. With the help of the Indian tribe, the engineer steals the girl and carries her off to the mine. A furious gun battle ensues when desert bad men headed by the promoter, attack the mine in an effort to take it and the girl.
 The sequences which follow are said to be intensely gripping and filled with vital action.

"THREE GODFATHERS" IS A FORCEFUL DRAMA OF THE DESERT

Primitive life of the desert, gripping drama of a great sacrifice, and haunting romance are all in the screen's bringing to life of Peter B. Kyne's epic story "The Three Godfathers" Monday's July 27, attraction at the Princess Theatre, starring Chester Morris, Lewis Stone, Walter Brennan and Irene Hervey.
 Kyne's tale of the three bad men who find a dying woman and her baby in the desert and who, one by one, sacrifice their lives to bring the child to civilization and safety, is told with elaborate staging in the new picture. Morris plays Bob, leader of the outlaws, a hardboiled killer, who is the last to lay down his life for the safety of the mite of humanity he and his two cohorts set out to save.
 Lewis Stone is "Doc," second of the bandits, and Walter Brennan plays Gus, who lends comedy to the trio. Morris gives a convincing, virile performance, and his scene with Irene Hervey, in which he deliberately kills the girl's love for him, is one of the dramatic highlights of a drama-packed story. Stone plays a dominant role as the oldest of the outlaws.
 Miss Hervey is charming as Molly, the minister's daughter in the cattle town on the edge of the desert.
 Filmed in the Mojave Desert, the authentic locales give added drama to the story deftly directed by Richard Boleslawski.
 Rev. S. M. Mims and children left the first of the week for Dallas where they visited the Centennial this week. They also visited in Fort Worth where they attended the Frontier celebration, and in Houston, where they visited a brother of Rev. Mims.

In the flimsily converted room where dark screens sealed in the heat, flies and the smell of frying hamburger and onions, two heavy and hot sisters clumped about on quick feet, cooking, waiting, and finding things miraculously without collision. Miller put a toothpick in his grinning mouth and leaned sleepily on the counter. "Say," he said, as if he were a policeman, "is it a good garage in this burg?"

"Is there something wrong with the car?" said Mrs. Pulsipher at once.

Miller cocked his toothpick at her. "Yup," he said. "Couple of stickin' valves. Might as well get 'em fixed up while you folks eat."

"Gad, sir, why didn't you get 'em fixed yesterday?" Kerrigan asked.

"Sleepin' yestiddy," said Miller and sucked sharply. "Come in from Chicago in thirty hours."

"Look here, speedball," said Kerrigan gravely, "we've been delayed enough already. If you crowded the heap this far, you can get through until supper time. We can sleep where we eat tonight and you'll have a lot more time there."

Mrs. Pulsipher nodding decisive approval, said "Yes."

Miller looked sheepish. "Awright—sure," he said; "but I gotta get gas 'n oil." "There's a pump outside," said one fat sister. Miller looked round at the window with slow suspicion. "Awright," he said.

The others moved upon the tables at the back of the room with apparent intent to have a meal. Hal stayed at the counter, moodily regarding the fly-specked thermometer that stood at 89. He heard Mrs. Pulsipher say confidentially "—and lots of onions over it, crisp. I'll tell you about my dessert later." "Bring some ham 'n eggs," Miller said, as if life were too short and weary a thing to permit exercise of imagination. Hal ordered oatmeal cookies at three for a nickel from under a glass bell, and a bottle of oversharp but icy ginger ale.

Then Crack came to the counter from nowhere in particular and in his unsurely pitched voice told the girl "I'll have the same as him."

Hal looked at him and found him smiling reticently, his eyes bemused and faintly speculative.

He wondered how much Barry had ordered.

"She's the only one isn't eating enough for a hired hand," said Crack. "Her and that frog sister."

Hal looked at him quickly, but there was nothing definable in the indolent amiability of Crack's light-blue eyes. "Who d'you mean by 'her'?" said Hal inhospitably, adding to himself, if that guy goes on reading my mind, I'll give it to him as a present; I won't live with it.

"The babe they thought was with me—Trafford," said Crack.

Hal finished his ginger ale in a refreshing gulp and put a dime on the counter. Then he turned for a look of frank curiosity at the faintly, rosy, unaged face beside him. Even if the fella's standards were totally different from his own, what did it matter if Hal were rude to him? The lazy, mischievous curiosity of his eyes seemed to be partly ready for rebuffs. Hal nodded briefly and went out into the hazy, dust-smelling sunlight that was just as hot and caged-in as the screened room.

He went around the corner into what was technically shade and leaned against the wall to light a cigarette.

The terrier, unleashed, trotted around, eager for smells, and then the Trafford girl came, watching him with a thoughtful smile, the conscious defense of her large eyes gratefully relaxed. The h-1 with being a stick, Hal said to himself; one honest try, and if she turns it back at me, I can jolly well be rude with comfort.

He watched her take a couple of her sure, deliberate steps. Her smile took away traces of toughness Hal thought he noticed before—accented a drawing delicacy in the slight in-drawing of her cheeks under the high cheekbones. The faint pink there was not make-up either and her frank lips wore no lipstick. They were frank lips, under their two simple peaks. There was an air about her of reticent vitality, sure and artless as the angle which gave her plain blue hat its chic.

Hal pushed his back from the wall and spoke a quiet "Hello."

Her look at him was startled, almost alarmed, but he met her eyes aggressively, smiling. It was an instant before her smile began, the parting of her lips delayed; her look was relieved, but without demonstration. "Hello," she said, as if to a pleasant little boy, and looked off to see where the dog was.

"How're you?" he said.

"Fine," she said, her smooth voice just off huskiness. She appraised his smiling eyes thoughtfully another moment before she added, "Your clothes are English."

"They're my brother's," he said at once, wondering why the devil he'd said that, when it was his own old suit and he had no brother, anyway.

"You like England," she said, not as if he would deny it, but as if he wouldn't volunteer it. "You probably went to college there."

"Yes," said Hal. "Why not?"

"You like it better than this country?"

"I'm not sure I'd say that."

"You're not sure you wouldn't, either, are you? Are you flattered when people take you for an Englishman?"

"Used to be when I was younger. Why?"

"How old are you now?"

"Twenty-six." Hal's eyes were laughing as he said to himself—Holy mackerel, what is this? Look to your balance here, Ireland.

"How old are you?"

"About twenty-three," she said, as if it were quite unimportant.

"You mean about twenty-three by count, but far older in—experience." He kept the brightness in his eyes, his smile widening.

That seemed to please her; she gave a single laugh and looked down at his mouth, then back at his eyes and off to see where the dog was. But she said nothing.

"What's the pup's name?"

"Doctor Caligari," she said, and the dog looked around from an abandoned oil drum in inquiry.

"Which part do you call him?"

"Doc," she said. "I don't suppose you ever saw that German movie a long time ago, 'The Cabinet of Doctor Caligari'?"

"Three times," he said. "One of the best five pictures I ever saw."

They both watched the dog for a moment of silence; it wasn't until afterward that Hal realized they both must have been thinking hard, that they shouldn't have been watching him.

Then portly Kerrigan ambled around the corner, the smoke wisp from the cigarette in his wide mouth drifting up past one squinted eye. He sucked a damp breath between his lips and his closed teeth as he looked at Hal.

"You a federal man?"

Hal chuckled in his surprise and searched Kerrigan's face for a hint of humor. "No," he said; "are you?"

"No," said Kerrigan. "I've tried a few things in a short life, but never had time for that."

Hal bent over and snapped his fingers at Doc. The dog came at once, hopped his forefeet up on Hal's knee, and tried to repay Hal's deft massaging with licks at his nose.

"Sounded off at that fella Crack in New York, didn't he?" Kerrigan was saying.

Hal looked up and found Barry's eyes upon him, solemn again and faintly hostile. "Yes," he said. Then, "Here, Doc." She snapped the lead to his collar, and gave Kerrigan a friendly smile, then said, "I think I'll sit in the car."

They watched her walk away, her arms swinging to the unsteady, inquiring grace of her long-legged steps. Kerrigan's brown eyes were pleased, almost genial, as he looked at Hal. "Hollywood, I guess," he said, in odd gentleness.

"Shouldn't wonder," said Hal.

"Got everything," said Kerrigan, with a sort of wistful benevolence. "Ought to make the number-one spot if she screens like her looks."

"And if Miller doesn't kill us all," said Hal.

Kerrigan sucked a wet breath through narrowly parted lips. "He seems to lead easily in his sleep. I guess he's all right. Anything happens comes under the head of experience, anyway, and that's profit."

"I suppose so."

The twinkle was more personal as Kerrigan watched him with amusement and care. "Only suppose?" he said.

Hal smiled. "Well, I haven't had such a h-1 of a lot—really."

"If fifty years can say anything to you," said Kerrigan kindly, unurgently. "I recommend the collecting of experience. Cigar bands, postage stamps, porcelains, even dollars aren't in it." He stopped before Hal expected him to.

"You have a collection?"

"Decent," said Kerrigan, without arrogance. "Decent enough. Some have escaped me because I've looked too hard for 'em; there are a couple of holes I'd like to fill."

"Such as," said Hal.

"It's probably different with different collectors," Kerrigan replied with a polite semblance of caution. "Most people would think the hole in mine was on the seamy side, perhaps." He looked at Hal in detached honesty. "I've never been alone with a man—a man who deserved to be killed—and killed him."

Hal searched for some trace of madness in the brown, wise look, but he could see none. He laughed shortly.

"I'll remember that," he said, "and let you know if anything turns up."

Kerrigan's eyes smiled in appreciative warmth, and Hal let his own answer them with an involuntary addition to civility.

The after lunch leg of the journey lay through more hopeful country. There were strata of good smells—smell of new hay, of flowers, of the fertile country richness about cow barns.

Barry's eyes, in the mirror, were deep in their blue thoughtfulness, far away from the car now, oblivious of its passengers and of Hal's studies of her smooth featured solemnity. Once or twice she looked in Crack's direction, as if wondering what he might be like; but not Hal's straight, limber back before her nor his quick gray eyes in the mirror, caught her curiosity at all.

Then in the silence, watching the endless concrete run in from the contours and white-posted curves ahead, Hal came slowly by an illusion of some presence riding with them in the car—something that had been there all along but was perceptible only now that the first stiff fringes of strangeness had been talked away—were being dozed away.

It seemed faintly, very faintly, when Hal tried to fix it and examine it with his eyes and off to see where the dog was. But she said nothing.

The man's driving is getting me, Hal thought; at my time of life, too. Or is it because the low hour of the day's coming, without sign of a bath or clean clothes or of whisky and soda?

Hal was honestly trying to marshal some innocent and friendly remark to draw Barry from her isolation—and scare off his own faint uneasiness, when somewhere down on the floor the impetuous rattle of a smothered alarm clock hurried into the silence. Doc sprang up, barking, and Mrs. Pulsipher dove forward with a scared grunt, as if for the start of a shoe-tying contest. Burrowing with grim diligence into her black, near-leather hold-all, she brought up the alarm clock and stopped it just before it could trail off wearily by itself.

"Why did you wind it again, John?" she said all in a breath, her face red, her eyes angry as if she had been lucky to escape with a mere fright.

John was terribly embarrassed. "I—I—I— don't know," he said. "I—I—I— don't know."

In the mirror Hal watched Barry's look at John's bewilderment—an indulgent look, with a hint of amused tenderness, as if John were another dog who might be friends with Doctor Caligari. And then her reflected look met his. The tenderness went from it, her eyes barely remembered him—shared nothing with him, remained on him for only a second of half-hostile disinterest before returning to the moving roadside.

That faint visit of ominousness was finished now, with every one awake, cramped stretching and resettling. Or was it finished? Had it simply returned to its hiding, to wait again? Silly thought. What could there be ominous in this shabby car, except the way Miller drove?

The flat strap of concrete now curved, dipped, and ran on into Pennsylvania and found the steel cities. Mrs. Pulsipher gave the impression of knowing it was a conspiracy—entered into by her husband, among others—that kept them from reaching Harrisburg while visibility was good. John half-heartedly tried to get her to admit that the bridge lights, contained in glass stars, were beautiful, but she wouldn't. Her voice, as she asked Kerrigan what river this was, rang grim in familiarity with martyrdom. And her "Oh," when he told her it was the Susquehanna, implied she might tomorrow find out it had been the Tiber or the Yang-tze, and she robbed of the glamor.

Something was at work clearing the moody sluggishness from Hal's head. A drifting sense of loneliness, of melancholy that had seemed to belong with the broad river slowly mourning the sunset, ran away out of his spirit. He was, after all, a human being—with faculties compactly contained in a fit and useful body, and with rights to his own character. He was on his way to California, to a job, and to the confusion of his father.

Sullenness was wasteful nonsense; premonition was nonsense. What could happen that he didn't want to happen? Why make a whole fertile week blank by wanting nothing to happen? His father had said Hal didn't know people, among other things—among almost all other things; well, he would arrive on the coast knowing at least seven and ready to dare the Old Man to believe any two of them.

"You like it better than this country?"

"I'm not sure I'd say that."

"You're not sure you wouldn't, either, are you? Are you flattered when people take you for an Englishman?"

"Used to be when I was younger. Why?"

"How old are you now?"

"Twenty-six." Hal's eyes were laughing as he said to himself—Holy mackerel, what is this? Look to your balance here, Ireland.

"Shouldn't wonder," said Hal.

"Got everything," said Kerrigan, with a sort of wistful benevolence. "Ought to make the number-one spot if she screens like her looks."

"And if Miller doesn't kill us all," said Hal.

Kerrigan sucked a wet breath through narrowly parted lips. "He seems to lead easily in his sleep. I guess he's all right. Anything happens comes under the head of experience, anyway, and that's profit."

"You have a collection?"

"Decent," said Kerrigan, without arrogance. "Decent enough. Some have escaped me because I've looked too hard for 'em; there are a couple of holes I'd like to fill."

"Such as," said Hal.

"It's probably different with different collectors," Kerrigan replied with a polite semblance of caution. "Most people would think the hole in mine was on the seamy side, perhaps." He looked at Hal in detached honesty. "I've never been alone with a man—a man who deserved to be killed—and killed him."

Hal searched for some trace of madness in the brown, wise look, but he could see none. He laughed shortly.

"I'll remember that," he said, "and let you know if anything turns up."

Kerrigan's eyes smiled in appreciative warmth, and Hal let his own answer them with an involuntary addition to civility.

The after lunch leg of the journey lay through more hopeful country. There were strata of good smells—smell of new hay, of flowers, of the fertile country richness about cow barns.

Barry's eyes, in the mirror, were deep in their blue thoughtfulness, far away from the car now, oblivious of its passengers and of Hal's studies of her smooth featured solemnity. Once or twice she looked in Crack's direction, as if wondering what he might be like; but not Hal's straight, limber back before her nor his quick gray eyes in the mirror, caught her curiosity at all.

Every audit of State departments declared his books "correct"—millions of dollars of Texas school children had been honestly handled.
