In an altercation Sanchez allegedly used a knife on Mike Garcia, inflicting serious wounds, which required a total of 42 stitches to close.

Sanchez, at large for ten days, fled to his home here early Monday morning, and sent word to his parents to come and get him. He was indicted by the grand jury in several days ago, charged with assault with intent to murder. The sum of $500 was posted, which was made, and Sanchez was released Monday.

Court Order Granting Divorce and Division of Property Ends Cleveland Case; Custody of Child Given Father

The suit of Wilma Cleveland against Leroy Cleveland for divorce and division of community property was ended in district court at Marfa last week end by an order entered in the minutes of the district court. Mrs. Cleveland was granted a divorce, a 3,840-acre ranch known as the Young Ranch, with running water and cross-fenced and debt free.

W. T. Cleveland, father of Leroy Cleveland, was awarded 4,400 acres in settlement of a $33,000 debt against the community property of the couple. Custody of the child, Amy Jean, was given to the father, and the mother was granted permission to visit her at any time. The child is with the father in Old Mexico now. Arthur Kerr was named trustee by the court to handle the Young Ranch for the benefit of Mrs. Wilma Cleveland. Mrs. Cleveland has been ill, and her father is with her. Judges Selected For Sheep-Goat Exhibit Oct. 3-11

Fort Worth.—The judges who will have the responsibility of selecting the prize winners in the sheep and goat, wool and mohair department of the Official Texas Centennial livestock exposition in this city October 3-11, have been announced. All of them are men well known in sheep and goat circles. One comes from Illinois, one from Washington, D. C., and three from Texas.

Approximately $9,000 in premiums is being offered for this department. Classifications include Rambouillets, Delaine, Merinos, Hampshires, Southdowns, Corriedales, Dorsets, Cheviots, Oxfords, Suffolks, Lincolns, Cotswolds, Romneys and Karakuls.

Angora goats are divided into two groups: B-type, or animals with a preponderance of flat locks and C-type, or animals with a preponderance of ringlets.

Professor W. G. Kemmlade of the University of Illinois, will make the awards in the fine wool breeding classes; Roy W. Snyder of the Extension Service and A. K. Mackey of the Animal Husbandry Department, A. & M. College of Texas, will judge the medium and long wool sheep classes; Fred Earwood, executive vice president of the Sonora Wool and Mohair Company, will make the awards in the Angora goat breeding classes; and Frank Grayson of the Livestock, Meats and Wool Division of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, Washington, D. C., will judge the wool and mohair show. Grayson formerly was employed as wool and mohair grader at the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station.

In announcing the judges, D. G. Talbot, manager of the livestock department, and J. M. Jones, superintendent of the sheep and goat department, call attention to the fact that entries on sheep and goats, in fact, on all classes of livestock, must be received by September 4. Henderson is charged with killing James Leroy Patton, 50-year-old beer parlor proprietor, when he found him in a room with Mrs. Leona Henderson, the cattleman's 24-year-old bride.

Postponement of the trial was due to congested court calendars, and the desire of the defense for more time to prepare its case.

$105 AT PRINCESS

For six weeks persons whose names were called for the cash award of $15, failed to be present, and the fund has accumulated to a total of $105, which will be tidily sum for some lucky person.

Austin Aug. 17.—Orville S. Carpenter, Texas old age pension director said today 10,000 additional checks would be sent out this week and that a concerted effort was being made to add to the rolls by September first every eligible aged person who is "in distress."

"We are making immediate investigation of distress cases all over the state," he said.

With enlargement of the rolls to approximately 70,000 by the end of the week, Texas would be leading the nation in the percentage of persons over 65 years old receiving pensions, the director said. He stated Texas would be paying 23 per cent compared with 22 per cent in Illinois, 20 per cent in Ohio, and 8.6 per cent in New York.

Carpenter declined to change his previous prediction that revenues from liquor taxes and licenses would be sufficient to carry the load until late fall.

The treasury department said the existing balance in the fund was $770,764 of which about one-fourth was federal money. Mailing of July and August checks to the 10,000 added pensioners would reduce it to less than $500,000.

The liquor board estimated approximately $500,000 more would be available around Sept. 1. This would be about twice as large as the usual revenue, the increase resulting from permit renewals for the next fiscal year.

WILL RETURN NEXT WEEK

Word was received here Thursday morning from Dr. Mallory stating he would not be able to return to his medical practice here until Saturday, August 29. Dr. Mallory has been kept in San Antonio for the past week due to the illness of Mrs. Mallory.

VISITS WITH FRIENDS

Mrs. P. J. Holman enjoyed a brief visit Tuesday evening with two of her friends, Miss Mary Havel and Mrs. Fred McRoberts of Chicago, who were on the Powers' Tours special train, enroute to California.

OKLAHOMA BOUND

Andy Anderson, erstwhile ice-man for the Community Public Service company, left last Saturday for Shattuck, Okla., where the Mistas and children have been visiting her parents for the past three weeks.

Upon his return to Del Rio on Tuesday from Washington, D. C., Roger Gillis, president of the Texas Sheep and Goat Raisers' association, stated that no plans for the conservation of soil on Texas ranges were worked out with officials of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

Mr. Gillis and three other committeemen representing livestock interests of Texas, conferred with government officials in Washington last week on a soil conservation program.

Mr. Gillis made the following statement which appeared in the Del Rio Evening News Tuesday: "The Agricultural Adjustment Administration has made no definite plans in regard to the program. During our conference on last Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, we made three suggestions which officials of the AAA neither approved nor disapproved."

"They were: (1) That the participation of the livestock board be on a wholly voluntary basis in the soil conservation program; (2) That the program should not in any respect include or contemplate the production control of livestock; (3) That if range improvement program is adopted and put into practice, it should be made permanent, and not a vehicle for a processing or excise tax on the livestock industry."

On the committee besides Mr. Gillis were T. F. McGill, of Alice, president of the Texas Cattle Raisers' Association; J. Taylor of Amarillo, president of the Panhandle Cattle Raisers' Association; and W. L. Nesbit, connected with the Texas A. & M. Extension Service.

One other committeeman from Oklahoma, failed to arrive in Washington for the conference, Mr. Gillis stated.

DIONNE QUINTS IN RETURN ENGAGEMENT

Five new stars at one swoop were added to the Hollywood firmament when Darryl F. Zanuck secured the adorable Dionne Quintuplets to head the cast of "The Country Doctor."

A courageous doctor of the Canadian backwoods is the hero of the picture, played by Jean Hersholt. He is a simple earthy man and the picture follows his triumphs, his tragedies, his near-defeat and ultimate victory as he fights the pains and ills of his people.

Hersholt's blunt manner incurs the wrath of the company men. He returns to find that Whalen's romance with June Lang has antagonized her father, Robert Barret, who is manager of the post, and that he has been shorn of power, ousted from his post to face a desolate old age.

HYPNOTISM GAVE HER THE INDIAN SIGN ON ALL

In the language of the day Dracula's Daughter had the Indian sign on everybody. While science scoffs at belief in vampires, it credits and puts to use the practice of hypnotism.

Hypnotism is the strongest influence exerted by the vampire over her victims in "Dracula's Daughter," the Universal drama which will be shown at the Princess Theatre, Saturday, August 22, for one night only.

Hypnotism has two effects, one on the body and the other on the mind. Physically, the condition of the hypnotized person generally shows a change in the rate of respiration and pulse.

TINKLING TUNES, DANCES IN SHIRLEY'S NEW PICTURE

A score of three tinkling tunes again give the tiny star an opportunity to exhibit her singing talent. Chief of these is "The Right Somebody to Love."

The climax of the picture is devoted to a thrilling sea-chase in which Shirley and Kibbee flee from Miss Haden in a sailing ketch. Although they are caught their friends contrive to bring a happy ending to the picture.

CHAPTER III

Hal can't shake off the feeling of impending disaster. He distrusts Crack, who has an uncanny habit of guessing guess-what he is thinking. He seems to have a friend in Kerrigan, who encourages his efforts to make friends with Barry. The young lady seems to be melting and readily consented when it was suggested that she give a brief sket of their lives. Kerrigan told his; it's now her turn.

Her look at Kerrigan was unworried, but faintly reticent. And Hal was as intent for the parting of her full lips as if she were going to tell his fortune. Then in a quiet voice she said:

"I am 23. I was born in Massachusetts, in Deerfield. Both my parents are dead. I finished high school and was secretary to a country lawyer for two years. I had always wanted to go on the stage, so when I—when things changed, when my father died, I got a job in stock. I had three years of that round the East without getting to Broadway; and now I'm going to try and get into pictures." She looked down thoughtfully, perhaps relieved, at the knife in her hand to show she had finished. "Thanks for listening," she added, with a brighter glance at Kerrigan. "You get questions, too."

"What do you like best—to do?" said Kerrigan at once.

"Read," she said.

"You've read a lot?" he said.

She smiled easily. "I've learned to read when I was six years old, and have read ever since. I've learned darn near everything I know from reading—what I like, what I don't like, what I—what I want. I copied characters in the books until one day I found out I didn't have any idea who I really was at all. And that frightened me a little."

Lunch came, and she seemed to stop sooner than she at first intended. Hal hoped the obituary would be ended, too—including his question to Barry. He could not ask her any of the things he found he really wanted to know; and such passable questions as he thought of sounded silly. But when the dishes were settled and the iced tea and coffee situation straightened out, Kerrigan looked at him and said, "Now your question."

Barry looked up at Hal with a frank, quiet confidence that gave him unexpected pleasure.

"If you—when you make good in the movies and have lots of money," he said, "what will you do?"

Her eyes were faintly surprised by interest and they stayed on his appraising the picture he'd provoked for her. "I hadn't thought," she said. "If—I should arrive."

That picture was dubious, but the light lingered gently in her eyes, neither reckless with hope nor intimidated by disappointment. "If I should arrive and they plugged me and finished me I'd go to England—France, to see it, to see if it's the place I've thought it might be. I'd live there for a while, and then . . . I don't know."

Her lighted eyes came back very slowly, without bitterness, to the fragile, cheap tearoom, strayed expectantly to the table opposite, where Mrs. Pulsipher's account of Niagara Falls had struck a snag in her husband's doubt that it was there they had been charged 60c for tough steak with yesterday's onions. Whatever Barry hoped to see, she didn't see. Hal wondered if the loneliness in her look was accidental; he felt that if she had been aware of it she would not have let it appear. "Now it's your turn," she said to him.

"I'll tell you," said Hal. "I'm twenty-six. I was born in New York, but if I had to do it over again I wouldn't be born there; I'd only go there when I felt like it. I went to school and college in New England, and then was sent abroad—to decide what I'd do. I nearly decided on a career of just being abroad, but one dark, rainy morning I was carrying a sort of headache past a steamship office, when I suddenly went in, bought a steamer ticket home. I was a runner in Wall Street for a while. Then I got a chance at a job that was about three thousand miles away from the Stock Exchange, and took it. That's where I am goin now—San Francisco."

Hal finished, looking at Kerrigan; then he took a mouthful of cold chicken, suddenly eager to hear Barry's question.

"What business is it going to be?" Kerrigan asked; and Hal liked the implication that the more important things between them would come in their own good time.

"Air business," said Hal. "Expect to be started cleaning boundary lights at the field."

"Envy you," said Kerrigan. "If I had a son I'd put him in that. Twice a year I give myself a good kicking for not going into railroads, at your age." He looked expectantly at Barry.

Her eyes were incurious—as if she hadn't till then thought of a thing she could want to ask. And then, without more than the most superficial apology in her tone, she said, "Please don't answer if you'd rather not. The reason I'm asking—the reason stops and I forget I had it, whether you tell me or not. Are you Frederick Ireland's son?"

He tried to force from her clear polite look a hint of why she wanted to know; but all he could see was confirmation of what she had said: she didn't ask out of idle curiosity and yet the answer wasn't momentous to her.

"Yes, I am," he said.

She believed him, but it gave her nothing to think about. And Hal swore he would find out why she had asked that of him if he had to back her into a corner on the last day and shake her firm shoulders until she told him. No, not shake them; hold them, perhaps, but not shake them. And it should be before the last day, too. I wonder, he said to himself, if you'd tell me why you wanted to know without even asking you. If you weren't so good to look at, Miss Barry Trafford you probably would be making so much trouble for yourself.

"I've met your father," said Kerrigan without especial significance.

"Have you? Where?"

"In Paris," said Kerrigan. "It was when Wilson came over the first time. Were you with him?"

"No," said Hal, "I wasn't."

But Hal was wondering why, when it had never come hard to take challenges, he should shy at the prospect of later pretending to this girl that he was in love with her. She knew her way round; he had never seen her before, and would probably never—Hal interrupted himself with a fresh wonder: why couldn't he easily conceive of not seeing her again? A little more than 24 hours it was, since they started; he didn't even know what she looked like with her hat off. Oh, the h— with it; just remember how easily she can make you mad and don't go Travelers' Aid until you have to.

Straight roads, long laid across the flatness of Ohio, with the sultry, flat afternoon in a hazy layer between the land and the stubbornly moving sun. Then Kerrigan saw "Detroit" on a signboard at less than a hundred miles. Pulsipher hummed a vague, contented piece of a tune over to himself; Barry and Mrs. Pulsipher were discussing Florida oranges, mail-order shopping, red hair, and railway travel, with Sister Anastasia's gentle surprise and inquiry between them; and Kerrigan was poring over his pocket atlas, puffing away the smoke from his short cigarette, to identify every strand in the web of railroads that converged upon Toledo.

Perhaps two hours more; and even if the ease of relief was rolling in now with every mile, the thing to do was to push on without stopping, whether stark hunger overtook the Pulsiphers or not.

"Say," came Crack's drowsy, confidential whisper near Hal's ear. Hal turned his head a little, his attention in alert suspense.

"We could eat in Detroit," Crack said in softly impish conspiracy. "Run right through, we could—and not give this bird another chance to try a quick one." Hal made himself ignore the coincidence. He nodded briefly, and said, "Good idea."

If Crack, basking in the secret sunshine of his own little schemes could be made uneasy, there must be something more to Miller's influence than Hal liked to allow.

In the next rising of talk behind them Hal leant a little toward Kerrigan and murmured: "Is there anything about that fella—?" He thought he saw understanding in Kerrigan's eyes and turned toward the road without finishing.

But Kerrigan said, "Which fella?" curiously. Hal glanced at him quickly; the brown eyes still seemed to understand what he meant. And Hal dismissed the subject gingerly, muttering: "Later, later."

Across the Maumee and thru the fringes of Toledo. It grew dark slowly; then the sprawl of a city began to infringe upon the op-ness, gradually and in disorder. "Dearborn," Crack suddenly whispered, and Hal wondered why is sounded exciting, and even faintly sinister.

Crack seemed to know Detroit and to invest the names he spoke with undertones of leashed significance; Telegraph Road; Michigan Road, that went straight into the dark behind them for two hundred and eighty miles to become Michigan boulevard in Chicago; River Rouge, a dark-gleaming creek that curved under the highway and gave its name to the plant where had worked more people that it took to build the Pyramids or sail the Arnada.

"You sorta feel things goin' on here," said Crack quietly behind Hal's head. "Don't you?"

"Yes, you do," said Hal.

"I like Detroit," Crack said in shy complacency. "I used to work here."

Hal had a quick curiosity to know what it was Crack had actually worked at; but something suggested that if he asked the lazy, immature voice wouldn't tell him the truth.

It was nearly ten o'clock—the night breathless, the pavement still remembering the sun's implacability—when they rolled into Cadillac square.

CHAPTER IV
Thursday

Hal had some difficulty reaching his friend next morning, and it was almost one when he got Kerrigan down from their room to see what he'd got.

"Really ought to look at it first through an old snapshot negative," said Hal. "Your eyes do a whole lot better if you takes these things gradually."

It was a great locomotive of a car—a certain high erectness, the small hubs and spindly spokes proclaiming venerability; but of deep green, the brass bright, the pale taupe of the upholstery, the miniature lamps beside the doors, with a little red star in each side glass, made it venerability that of an aristocrat who could ignore the fickleness of styles. Kerrigan looked and his eyes softened affectionately.

"Shades of Dempsey and Willard," he breathed. "What is it? A Martin day-bomber without the wings?"

"Nineteen twenty-three," said Hal. "Belonged to the mother of one of the directors and never been driven over forty. Cared for like an only child. Look at that upholstery."

"Kerrigan looked and stroked. "Kings ride on fabric less rich," he said. "They left the engine in it. I s'pose. But why the Texas license plates?"

"Only ones they had handy. 'Thought it's interesting to drive from Michigan to California with Texas plates and New York driving license. But the motor's sweet—sweet's a nut."

The solid multiple chunk of the closing door drew an exclamation of awe from Kerrigan. He said: "You don't think I'll be embarrassed, riding up so high?"

"You'll find you see more of the country," said Hal.

"Right over the heads of the crowds that gather; true, true. It's a wonder we're alive. Tell me more: how much does the museum want for it?"

"Three hundred. And the tires, look at the tires—made of rubber-tyre, they are, and practically new. And everything works: the speedometer, and even the cigar lighter."

"What's the railing up on top? Widow's walk?"

"No; that's the laundry yard," said Hal. "Colonel, if I didn't know you so well, I'd almost think you were making fun of—of . . ."

"Chucho?!" there—"y-see?" said Kerrigan. "You've gone bought a car and don't know what to call it. S'pose the others had come before it was named. The indignity! We better go up and throw out a horn from the quart an old dog fancier left in my pocket this morning. Got to christen it."

"Drink?" said Hal. "At noon?" Kerrigan what'd you think I am?"

Kerrigan's eyes were merry. "Just about what you seem," he said, taking Hal's elbow and turning him round.

"Rasputin" had become the car's name by the time the travelers were ready to start. They were shown Rasputin in his timeless green-and-brass distinction. John smiled loftily rocking back on his heels as if he were taking the air on the deck of his yacht; and Mrs. Pulsipher made a little exclamation of surprise, clasped her hands in front of her as if to be sure she wouldn't touch the paint, and gave Hal a look of interest and respect.

"Oh, it's elegant," she said. "Oh my, it's beautiful!"

Barry and Sister Anastasia came up, and Barry's look ran out to Hal in unguarded confidence, and her low voice said, "Ah, it's a sweet old thing."

"Like it?" said Hal, showing his pleasure.

"Mm," she said. "It'll be fun, won't it? And we can light the little carriage lamps sometimes, can't we?"

Hal chuckled at her more delightedly than he meant to. "Bet we can," he said. "And you shall have them—to keep—when we get there."

She looked at his lips, then up at his eyes—securely, expectantly, on the point of letting him pass another of the intangible defenses. But then she said only, "Why don't we start?"

"Because that miserable fella Crack isn't here," said Hal, and the brief confidence that had lain between their eyes was lost.

Barry turned her back on the others, slipped her hand lightly inside Hal's arm, and he crooked it as they took a slow step or two away.

"How long do you think it will take to Los Angeles?" Barry asked him.

"I haven't figured it closely. It's about 2600 miles. Six days would be fairly brisk. Why, Barry? Why 'o you want to hurry?"
