LISTEN TO LUKE

is the time of year when it is prudent to keep the pilot burning on the heater and the working on the air conditioning have seen some peculiar weather recently, but it would be reasonable and seasonable to predict that most of the weather for several months will be to the cold side.

A fresh norther blew up Monday while the weather wasn't Tuesday morning, there was a freshness to the air that we had not previously this fall.

Work of seal-coating the lo- streets has been finished and a great improvement.

There is of necessity, a great amount of dust, especially from spinning traffic where the likelihood to hear a false-power of grinding rubber and rocks. The sooner the dust is dispersed by the hot-rods, the sooner the streets will be clean again.

We have continued to receive a comments about our opinions expressed about the Sanderson Chamberbed. The comments were able to our opinion and we do appreciate them.

We also have continued to receive comments about the news- its size, pictures, type, etc. We have had a few who say that type is hard to read, and we that we are sorry it seems that but it is almost identical in with the type previously used there should be no greater difficulty involved in the reading. Of course, we will be constant- trying to improve the paper and every effort to make it not attractive, but also hope that readers will become accustomed to the "difference" in the type, it will be more legible.

Letters continue to pour into Chamber of Commerce office deer hunters wanting leases.

There are half as many deer as there had better be a lot of deer. But the ranchmen report a bumper crop of deer all over the county and the deer hunting business is expected to be good.

We have even heard of one or two people who do not plan to go hunting but plan to come to Sanderson to watch the hunters come down.

We got a couple of letters from people about the recent operation named on President Johnson. It is probably the most publicized operation that had ever been performed. Someone is liable to get Oscar for this one. For some reason or another, the operation lost some of its appeal to the public when they got a stitch- account as seen by many viewers during such times as "As World Turns", etc., etc.

We heard a lot of people expressing a genuine interest in the con- of the president during and the operation. And we aren't surprised. We are not HHH fans either.

Mrs. Peggy Sullivan returned to Sanderson last week from a visit with her son, Miles Sullivan, and family in Iowa and with her daughter, Mrs. D. B. Phillips, and family in Colorado Springs, Colorado. "Who's Who of American Women" is issued by A. N. Marquis Co., publishers of "Who's Who in America" since 1898. The new volume aims to present women outstanding as women, without regard to their accomplishments or positions in relation to men; in other words, to stress the woman who stands out from her sisters" and to "use achievement or occupational position, rather than wealth or social position, as criteria for eligibility".

Seventy-three national organizations, representing many fields, consented to become Advisory Patrons and provide lists for nominations from which the women were selected.

Mrs. Grigsby, a teacher in the Sanderson schools for the past 20 years, does not know who nominated her nor why. Her selection came from the field of education one of the 34 fields, with many new fields represented in the new edition containing a biographical sketch of the women receiving citations for their achievement in the professions, business, culture, and the public welfare.

Mrs. Grigsby, the former Kathleen Frances Sullivan, is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Fletcher Sullivan. She attended Baylor University, the University of Texas, and received her Bachelor of Science degree from Sul Ross College in 1950. She was a teacher in Comstock for two years before her marriage to Walter H. Grigsby in 1934. She has been a teacher in the elementary school here until three years ago when she began teaching social studies in the junior high school.

Mrs. Grigsby holds membership in the Terrell County unit of the Texas State Teachers Association, Texas Council of Social Studies, National Education Assn., Alpha Chi, Kappa Delta Pi and Delta Kappa Gamma.

Stockmen Warned Of Worm Increase

Texas farmers and ranchers may be in for the most severe upswing in screwworm infestations in two years during the upcoming months.

All ingredients for another fall buildup are present in the state, screwworm eradication leaders announced: a native fly population, favorable weather and an abundance of animal wounds.

Increases in screwworm cases during the fall are part of an age-old pattern established by the insect. General rains over much of the state, moderate temperatures and an increase in animal husbandry activities comprise favorable conditions for screwworms to develop and move cross-country. Before the eradication program began, tens of thousands of cases were experienced during fall months, and even last year more than half of the infestations detected in Texas were reported in September.

This year's buildup could be the worst since 1963, eradication officials fear, because, unlike last year when no cases were found in late summer, screwworms are already present in Texas and could spread quickly into the interior of the state when weather conditions become right. Zavala County, southwest of San Antonio, has experienced screwworm problems all summer. Eradicators last month initiated an intensified spray campaign in the county in an attempt to wipe out the native fly population there. The success of their efforts may determine if Texas has a fall buildup or not.

Eradication forces are prepared to treat with sterile flies all infestations reported to them. Larvae from suspected infestations should be sent to the eradication laboratory at Mission, or to the local county agent, for positive identification.

Stockmen were also urged to be extremely cautious in working their livestock and should apply smears or sprays to all wounds. It has been estimated each screwworm case costs approximately $62 in labor and medicines and loss of animal weight and market value. Preventive treatment is obviously a much cheaper alternative, livestock industry leaders point out.

The 1966 Falcon has new roominess, outstanding economy and technical innovations. Lengthened wheelbase and wider tread improve riding comfort. Waterspreading Effectiveness Is Demonstrated Chesley M. Wilson, Unit Conservationist, says waterspreading has been used to irrigate crops and pasture the dawn of civilization. Present waterspreading systems are an up-to-date method of spreading water. The cooperators of the Pecos River Soil Conservation District are installing waterspreading systems on their ranches. In most instances they are spreading water across areas that have been seeded to Johnsongrass. Johnsongrass pasture is all that ranchers to run their stock on. Johnsongrass in order to their rangeland. Due to the waterspreading they have more livestock on less than on native rangeland. The cooperators have installed a draw and spread it over pasture. In many cases they flow or irrigation on their ranch when they did not get a flow on their ranch. Johnsongrass reduces most flow to a slower speed making the water take longer to cross ground. Overflow areas are eroded at the point that they are providing little grazing for livestock. When a waterspreading system is installed, it reduces the acidity of the water and allows storage to make its maximum use. Making the proper evaluation of a good waterspreading system, there are some things that a value must be placed upon, such as management. The aspects that are valued are showing that waterspreading systems are for themselves.

THIS BACKSEAT DRIVER IS WELCOME!

REDUCING TOMORROW'S CRASHES

Some of today's automobile accidents actually started to happen months or years ago. The mishaps could very well have had their inception in the inadequacies of catch-as-catch-can driver-instruction given to those behind the wheels of the cars involved.

It is gratifying to note, therefore, that the availability of accredited driver-education courses in high schools across the nation is escalating; that some states have made it compulsory.

The school training goes far beyond the mere mechanics of the driving operation. Students are made safety-conscious by thorough classroom drilling in careful driving rules and regulations. Included are text book theory, written projects and films on proper driving attitudes and behavior. A standard minimum course consists of 30 hours of classroom work and six hours of practice driving.

The whole idea is to instill a deep sense of responsibility in the trainee for the life, limb and property of the car-riding public and pedestrians.

These courses are expensive to operate. The amount spent annually in the schools in 31 states providing driver education has reached $75 million. A large share of the cost, according to the Automotive Safety Foundation, is borne by automobile manufacturers and dealers, as a public service. For instance out of the 15,284 cars used by schools for practice driving, 9,778 are loaned by local dealers.

It seems to us that the automobile industry merits commendation for this and its many other vital aids to the achievement of greater safety on the country's thoroughfares.

In Praise of Thrift

A governmental unit that not only stayed within its budget but spent only one-sixth of the money allotted it, has been singled out for praise by Sen. Allen Ellender (D-La.).

"A situation has come to light which is highly commendable," said the legislator. "In March of last year a Temporary Alaska Claims Commission was created to settle differences between the federal government and the state of Alaska involving disputed property."

"The commission was given $33,000 to carry out its work. On May 5th of this year, the chairman of the commission announced that its duty had been fulfilled, with an expenditure of only $5,354.02."

THE FAMILY LAWYER

Who Owns a Letter?

Interesting letters may give birth to interesting notions. Such as: "I'd better not throw away this letter from Fred. He might become famous some day, and then the letter could be worth a lot of money as a collector's item."

Suppose Fred really does become famous and his letter valuable. Would it belong to you, because it was sent to you? Or would it belong to Fred, because he created it?

The law's deft solution is to divide the ownership of a letter into two separate rights—the right of possession and the right of publication. The recipient has the right of possession of the paper and ink. He may keep the letter as a memento, sell it to a collector, or even toss it onto a bonfire if he pleases.

But the right of publication—to make copies and exploit it as a literary work—still belongs to the original writer.

This division of rights was illustrated in a famous lawsuit involving some personal letters written by Mary Baker Eddy, founder of Christian Science. After Mrs. Eddy's death, her executor tried to prevent the auctioning of these letters.

The court ruled that the sale itself could not be prevented, because Mrs. Eddy had given away the right of possession when she first mailed the letters. But the court did forbid reprinting of the letters in advertisements of the auction, because Mrs. Eddy had never given away the right of publication.

Of course, circumstances alter cases. For example, if you write a letter-to-the-editor, you are obviously giving the editor not only the right of possession but the right of publication as well.

Also, publication of a letter without the writer's consent may be justified by the necessities of law enforcement. Thus, when a woman was charged with adultery, incriminating letters she had written were held admissible in court even though she tried to keep them out.

But as a rule, the separate rights of possession and publication will be kept intact. For the law is simply lending form to the instinctive promptings of fair play.

As one court put it, in denying a man's demand for the return of love letters he had once sent to a woman:

"According to befitting decorum, such letters, written to her to keep and read and cherish, are hers."

WASHINGTON AND "SMALL BUSINESS"

By C. WILSON HARDER

Much has been written about the dangers of too much control by the Federal government. Much of the discussion tends to be quite academic, largely because responsible people do not want to launch an attack on arrogant stupidity of infecting bureaucrats.

However, the nation is this summer and fall witnessing the great lengths that bureaucrats will go in an attempt to achieve some vaguely stated aim hatched out of ignorance.

Recently in its periodic publication the Bank of America, which is heavily engaged in financing California food growing and processing, in addition to being the world's biggest bank, expressed alarm over the future of California's tomatoes, the backbone of that state's canning industry.

Due to an arrogant, uninformed position taken by Labor Secretary Willard Wirtz, the tomato plantings were short to begin with. Now, at the last estimate, due to lack of labor to pick the limited acreage planted, over 60 million pounds of tomatoes have rotted.

Recently the Flint, Michigan Journal discussed the situation with that state's pickling cucumber crop.

Pickles, it is claimed, will be in short supply, and a lot higher in price. The newspaper pointed out that cucumbers are rotting on the vine in the Saginaw valley. But that is not all the problem.

These fool cucumbers never know when to stop growing. Most pickles have to be made from cucumbers of a length of six inches or less. Growing cucumbers just do not understand this matter with the result unless picked they grow to a foot or longer. They are no longer pickling size.

Now Wirtz, although he holds a doctorate degree, must have skipped classes in plain ordinary arithmetic. According to the data printed by the Flint Journal, in 1964, there were 115,000 native migrant farm workers. Of this number, only about 73,600 worked from state to state as crops required.

Thus, in 1964, to handle the crops some 209,200 foreign farm workers came into the country, largely from Mexico. Thus, beginning with the 1965 growing season Wirtz took the position that the 73,600 native workers could be supplemented by additional domestic workers, largely from the ranks of the unemployed, hence 209,200 foreigners would not be needed. Recruiting a domestic farm labor force three times the existing one, is quite a mathematical challenge.

But over and beyond this, the domestic unemployed just will not do farm work. They would rather demonstrate. It is fortunate for the nation that the average American housewife does not believe in setting fire to buildings, then shooting at the firemen. Because if they did, the higher food prices they are going to pay because of the Wirtzkrieg could create quite a humdrum of a riot.

The Old Timer

"People who have an hour or so to spare usually look up someone who hasn't."

Introducing the tuned car. 1966 Buick.

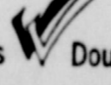

What makes a car a car is styling, performance, ride and handling. Only when they're all tuned together is the car a Buick. Like this 1966 Riviera Gran Sport.

You know how well your car's engine runs after a tuneup? Buick tuning has the same effect on the whole car. Not just the engine. The whole Buick. Everything blends with everything else. Styling. Performance. Ride. Handling. All tuned to work together in harmony. That's what the tuned car is. A Buick. Only Buick is the tuned car. (And every Buick is the tuned car.) What the tuned car is is a masterful blending of all the things that make a great car greater. The Riviera for 1966 is the tuned car. It features six-passenger seating, disappearing headlights, a silently efficient new ventilating system and the kind of roadworthiness you'd expect in a car that costs twice as much. (You can get a Riviera for your desk as well as your garage. Send $1 in check or money order to Riviera, P.O. Box 68, Troy, Mich., for an accurate 1/25 scale model '66 Riviera.) But Riviera's not the only tuned car. Le Sabre is, too. And Wildcat. Electra 225. Special. Skylark. Sportwagon. See them all at your Buick dealer's. The tuned car may not mean much to you now. But then you haven't had a chance to drive one yet.

Wouldn't you really rather have a Buick?

There's an authorized Buick dealer near you. See his  Double-Checked used cars, too.
