THE FIRST MAN on the moon had better take along a good supply of Coricidin, or something similar. The extremes of temperature must be murder.

The other day, Surveyor 3 was reportedly setting in temperature of 200 degrees, then with the shadow of the earth moving across the moon's surface, the temperature dropped to 155 below zero.

Somehow this reminds me of the way they regulate the air conditioning in our office.

I NOTICED that a nun in Wisconsin plans to work as a reporter for a newspaper this summer, asserting that she will wear regular clothing on the job.

Newspapers need help, but first an applicant must kick the habit.

AN ALABAMA State Senator, Hugh Morrow of Birmingham, really knows how to hurt a guy, as the Associated Press pointed out at the other day.

Morrow was part of a team filibustering against a bill in the Alabama senate, and on the fifth day of the filibuster, the senate refused to adjourn for dinner, leaving the members in the chamber on through the mealtime.

When Morrow's time to talk came up, he spent his entire hour describing food in mouth-watering detail from a food manual.

I never did learn how this tactic worked, but I expect the opposition is shrinking fast.

The following is a letter written in 1921 by Berthe Hay, sister to the late Simon D. Hay, one of Sudan's most colorful pioneers. The letter was written while Miss Hay was here visiting her brother just after finishing school, and while Mr. Hay was still a bachelor.

Of French and Scotch descent Simon De Lagneau/Hay and teh four other children in the Hay family, were raised by their maternal grandfather, Mr. De Lagneau, and three maiden aunts, Leah, Emma and Alice DeLagneau, following the death of their parents. Miss Hay's letter is to one of the aunts, Emma, back home in Ottawa, Illinois.

While being reared in the De Lagneau home, the family spoke only French and it is remembered Mr. Hay often conversed in French with the late John Muller of the Feldton area.

In her vivid description of early day activities around Sudan, Miss Hay's letter is sprinkled with French expressions.

The history of Simon Hay and wife, Laura (Caton) Hay will be printed at a later date.

Wednesday and the other packages as well—lanterns, Sim's coat, and dish towels and cloths. My we feel rich with all those. Our cookies tasted just fine and we gobbled them up in a hurry. The bundle of papers Aunt Em, we surely do appreciate, though, Sim has had very little to read, he matches them up occasionally and says it's his only connection with the outer world. He has a box where he keeps them all, for reference.

I must go back to Thanksgiving Day, and tell a bit of what we have been doing. It was good to get your letters and a fine one from Aunt Alice just last Saturday besides her Thanksgiving card to us.

Thanksgiving Day was a beautiful warm, sunny day here. Sim, Jake and Mr. Lucky, the carpenter, worked. Jake in the field, and Sim and Mr. Lucky making a house for "Linette" (the milk cow). I scrubbed and cleaned the shack till it shone in holiday fashion, and with a few chrysanthemums I had received, it looked cosy and gay. Sim and I rode to the Circle Brand Ranch west of here, where they were dipping cattle, and had dinner. We had the dinner out-doors with everyone from a millionaire ranch owner, Mr. Newcome, owner of -N- Bar Ranch of which Mr. Barber is foreman, to the cowboys. It was quite an experience. After that I came home and got our Thanksgiving dinner. Our table was surrounded by Mr. Hay, Miss Hay, Mr. Lucky, Jake, and Molly, who showed up just in time for supper. Our menu—Baked sweet potatoes, juicy steak, cranberries, lettuce with cream dressing, grapefruit and cake.

I wish you could have seen Sim eat. My meat platter, Aunt Em, is the aluminum pie plate I brought down. It was decorated with lettuce that night. 'Twas a most successful dinner, even had butter.

Tell you I schemed like my grandmother "Poline" for it. The stove does not always have butter, though lately we have managed to have it all the time.

In the evening right after dinner we went over to the -X- Ranch to my first country dance—with the old fiddler and all. It is about twelve miles from here and on the way over "Molly" entertained me by singing old Cowboy songs. (Writer's note: Molly was a cowboy and chuck wagon cook who was in these parts long before the nesters.)

And our parties, Sim's been waiting to get them off his chest, he had to have two because some people won't dance.

The Wednesday after Thanksgiving we gave just a party and must have had about fifteen in the little shack. Molly came and brought apples, nuts and bananas (good for him). Besides that we played games, I made them plenty of candy to pull, and kept some others busy popping corn. Oh, yes, Sim got home about six o'clock that evening with your boxes, so I was busy putting up the lanterns, right away! They were just what we needed and made it look so festive. We still had Mr. Andrews' Victrola, and that went full-blast all evening, too.

On Friday of that week, just two days later we gave the country dance. Mr. Lucky was still here and he fiddled beside another man. Two fiddlers, some dance Aunt Em. About twenty men came, Aunt Em, and no women, it was such a disagreeable evening. I had more fun, we had worked hard. Sim wanted doughnuts, so I made three times the recipe. I think I made about 75 doughnuts that day. I made them with buttermilk and soda as Aunt Alice directed. The flour is so heavy it sticks to the sides of the sifter, so I sifted it about a million times and added corn starch to make it cake flour, and Aunt Em, the doughnuts came out a work of art. Sim came in about every half hour all afternoon to sample them. To go on (I just thought you would be interested in the cooking part too) I had my first experience with a sand storm that afternoon. The wind blows gales and this reddish sand just sifts in all over so fast that there is a layer of it everywhere in the house.

Toward evening the sand settled down, and then a cold "norther" began to blow, and everyone looked for a blizzard before morning. We went on and cleaned up the shack about five o'clock, put the lanterns up. Sim made benches along the walls of my bedroom so people could sit in there, and we took the cot, table and chairs out of the main room in there too. The bed and mattress we put out doors. It was about five-thirty and Molly and the fiddler rode up. I thought it was pretty early to arrive for a dance, and laughed—they came for supper! At six Mr. Barber arrived. By that time I thought I'd better dress in a hurry—and sure enough they began to come, two and three men at a time. It just happened some women were sick, others couldn't ride so far horseback, and still others were afraid of the threatened "norther" coming. Anyway, the husbands and sweethearts came along without their wives and best girls, as the cowboys never miss a dance, no matter how far, or what the weather. Anyway, the fiddlers tuned up about seven o'clock and "set too". The cowboys tied handkerchiefs on their arms, and took girls parts, while I took one after another, calling "next" when I finished one, doing the "Hop-Two-Step, Schottische, Polka" and many others, "as best we can". The men were a fine, clean bunch, all cleaned up with polished boots, and hair slicked back, as they did play hard that evening. I had the doughnuts in a big tin can we bought flour in, this I shoved out in the middle of the floor: we made coffee and chocolate for a few, and I watched the doughnuts disappear. Well, Aunt Em, I believe they must have enjoyed themselves for it was midnight before they left, and bitterly cold out doors. Thus --- Sim's first dance.

On Sunday, the 4th, we dined out again, about twenty - five miles from here, and also went antelope hunting, just to see them. Pretty white creatures.

Last week I was busy all week, cooking, washing and ironing.

Facing the Inevitable

Whether you are buying candy at the corner confectionery, or scanning the shelves of your favorite supermarket, the story is usually the same—rising prices for many of the things you want and need.

In a word: inflation.

Like so many other things, it seems, inflation has rapidly become another of life's inevitables, with only an occasional break in the pattern. It has been around a long time, and the struggle to solve it remains a constant one.

Quite a few Americans today—nearly four million, to be exact—have gone the mutual fund route in their efforts to offset the eroding effects of inflation. To many people, common stocks have become an important hedge against the rising cost of virtually everything we may buy, from tractors to hairpins.

Yet not everyone has the experience, the time, or more important, the money for a do-it-yourself common stock investment program. It is still a fact that while investing one's dollar can be profitable, it can also prove risky for the uninitiated investor.

That's where common funds come in. They are a way to invest your money in a diversified portfolio of stocks and bonds, and invest it in not just one or two companies, but in the stocks and bonds of many different corporations in various industries.

Investing in common funds is a way to spread your risk and to benefit from the growth of the American economy.

Like most successful investors, the mutual fund investor has a long-term view of his investment. He doesn't expect to get rich overnight, but he does expect to grow rich over time.

Father, Mother, Sister, Brother, All who live for one another, Make a home that's full of beauty, Built of love and not from duty. Though its walls of sturdy beams, You will find it full of pleasure; Wealth to house my own affection, But it won't buy satisfaction.

Drive the cost of living down, without giving up all this.

Chevrolet's room, ride and price. When Automotive News made its annual roominess study, Chevrolet got the most points. It's roomier inside, they reported, than any other American car. The ride is Full Coil suspension smooth. And Chevrolet hardtops and convertibles are still the lowest priced full-size cars of this kind you can buy. Chevrolet's quick size. It's quick to climb, quick to turn. Other mid-size cars might be like Chevrolet, but they're not as low priced. And they're not made by Chevrolet with Body by Fisher, GM-developed energy-absorbing steering column, inner fenders and Full Coil suspension. Camaro's road-hugging stance. At its price, Camaro is the only sportster to give you wide-stance design. It rides steadier, clings to curves better, hugs the road closer. It's the roomiest car you can buy.
