WOODWORK

How would you like to have a new Digital Reflection Densitometer around the house? Just what you've been needing, I'd bet. We received a letter this week which began thusly: "This week at DRUPA, an important new Digital Reflection Densitometer is being introduced."

Further reading about it lightened us a little. It is some kind of gismo having to do with better quality pictures in the newspaper. But we don't know from nothing about any densitometers. We just send the pictures to the darkroom man and printers and they sure better get them to print sharp. And they usually do, unless our original pictures are lousy.

Taking pictures in the newspaper business is kind of fun, most of the time, but it can have its problems, too. We use our cameras and darkroom in ways which would horrify the professional photographer, but for newspaper purposes we don't have time to mess around with light meters, dividing guide numbers and tripping three flash units at once. Admittedly such things are utilized on occasion when time is not a factor, but for the most part we just take a camera and figure out an exposure that we know will get a picture and let 'er fly.

Five out of seven persons will suggest to you that you'd better not take their picture, because it will break the camera. There could be some truth to this, since we have a couple of cameras in the repair shop right now.

Among my most embarrassing moments as a photographer was the time I interrupted a church shindig of some kind at Vernon, with several hundred in an outdoor session, climbed up on top of a chair in the middle of them to get a crowd shot, and with everybody looking on, couldn't get the camera to operate. I climbed back down and slunk out. It was a Baptist meeting, and I'm sure they thought it was some kind of Methodist plot to disrupt the proceedings.

One time in Lubbock I went out all morning, posing special pictures and tromping around in foot-deep snow, for a planned page one spread in the Avalanche-Journal. I came in almost frozen, and with my feet wet. I pulled off my shoes, hung my socks over the radiator (this was in the old A-J building on Texas Ave.) and then the darkroom technician came out with the announcement that all my film was blank. I never did know what I did wrong, but I went out for some more pictures.

I've taken many pictures at sports events, particularly at football games, and for the most part have been agile en-

Baseball

The Senior Babe Ruth All-Stars will participate in the State tournament slated to be held July 27-28-29 at Olton. Three games will be played daily, beginning at 4 p. m., with double eliminations. ## TOPS CLUB MEET

The meeting of Texas Tops 634 was held Monday, July 10, at Community Center. The pledge was given and a weight loss of 5 1/2 pounds lost after weighing in.

Letha Gordon was Queen for last week and received a handful of dimes. Next meeting will be Monday, July 17.

ough to stay out of the way of the participants. But once at Amherst I was knocked around a bit. At Amherst the fans used to have a habit of lining up about two yards from the sidelines along the home side, and sitting down in a solid line. I was standing inside that line taking pictures when the play came out of bounds and there was nowhere for me to go. It looked great in films the next week, when the coach of the player who ran into me remarked, "Gary finally hit somebody."

Picture-taking is fun, but things like that make one shudder.
