CHAPTER II .- In a large southern Oregon city he meets people who had known and loved his grandfather, a famous frontiersman. He makes his home with Silas Lennox, a typical westerner. The only other members of the bousehold are Lennox's son, "Bill," and daughter, "Snowbird." Their abode is many miles from "civilization," in the Umpqua divide, and there Failing plans to live out the short span of life which he has been told is his. He scarcely watched Cranston's further preparations: the oil poured on the rugs and furnishings, the kindling placed at the base of the curtains. Cranston was trained in this work. He was taking no chances on the fire being extinguished. And Lennox began to crawl toward the door.

He managed to grasp the corner of the blanket on the divan as he went, and he dragged it behind him. Pain wracked him, and smoke half-blinded him. But he made it at last. "It's our house," Snowbird told him. "And father can't get out." She spoke very quietly. Perhaps the most terrible truths of life are always spoken in that same quiet voice. Then both of them started across the snow as fast as their unwieldy snow-

They mounted to the top of the ridge; and the long sweep of the forest was revealed to them. The house was a singular tall pillar of flame, already glowing that dreadful red from which firemen, despairing, turn away. Then the girl seized his hands and lanced about him in a mad circle.

CONFUCIUS' TOMB A SHRINE

Graveyard in Which Great Teacher Is Buried Held Sacred to Him and His Descendants.

The graveyard of Shantung, Chu-Fu, lying one mile from the city gate, is noble expression of the dignity and mystery of death, says Nathaniel Peffer in Scribner's Magazine. Leading to it from the gate is a broad avenue of trees spanned half way by a stone arch of exquisite carving and majestic lines. The graveyard proper, which is really a park, is enclosed in a pink wall.

Within the graveyard any member of K'ung clan, descendants of Confuclus, may be buried, whether the person be a scholar or a coolie. At the farther end of the park is another wall, behind which are the tombs of Confucius, his son and his grandson. These consist of a piling up of earth. before which are a stone altar, a tablet inscribed with six Chinese characters, a stone urn flanked by two bronze candlesticks, and along its sides a few trees with shrubbery around it.
