SPLENDID RAINS

A rain amounting to 43-100 inch fell here last Thursday night and Friday that made the moisture meet as the underground season was already good.

Another rain amounting to nearly a half inch fell Monday night of this week that gave it a finishing touch that is superb, and the best season is now in the ground for the time of year since 1914.

Grass is now green and high sufficient for the stock to begin to nibble, and the goose is hanging high in old Terry.

There has been less wind and the warmest weather ever known here for the past two months, and the new owners that were expecting howling sandstorms are greatly disappointed—but just hold your peace and wait.

We might just caution you to hold off too much planting right now—you might have to do it over.

The fruit so far is safe, and promises a real bumper crop of that very necessary article. Yes, if nothing from here out happens, some of the fruit will have to be threshed from the trees.

It is said that a widow woman recently missed a sum of money in that county (Gaines) and it is thought that Mr. Sherman may be able to tell the grand jury something about it.

NEFF TRIMS SEVERAL APPROPRIATION BILLS

Forty seven, for a total of $371,920 were cut out of the emergency appropriation bill by Governor Neff today, says a special to the Fort Worth Record from Austin. The bill as filed in the office of secretary of state carries a total appropriation of $714,245, instead of $1,086,205, as it originally came from the legislature to the governor's desk.

In Governor Neff's opinion "a large number of the items disapproved are not emergencies, viewed from any angle, and for that reason are vetoed. Such items should be placed in the general appropriation bill, to be later enacted."

The governor declared that a considerable number should not be permitted to stand in the emergency or any other bill. Some are for raising salaries and creating new places and should not under present conditions be approved, the governor said.

Other items are for making appropriations to certain departments that "have extravagantly spent the annual appropriations previously made and therefore the so-called emergency appropriation should not be made as an endorsement and encouragement in respect to the departments spending money beyond allowance made."

Governor Neff in his veto proclamation took occasion to say that he has observed a waste of money "in our institutions and departments of government that is appalling."

The largest item vetoed is $107,000 to pay the state bonds of the institutions. A & M. College is hit the hardest, three items appropriating a total of $125,000, being stricken out. Of this amount $90,000 was for erection of an extension, $25,000 for equipping mechanical engineering building and $10,000 for repair and remodel Gathright Hall to be used as a boys' dormitory. Appropriations for traveling expenses of the various departments were blue penciled.

Among the items stricken out: Repair of the capitol dome, $12,000; general inside repairs to capitol $20,000; for traveling expenses of high school supervisor's department of education, $1,100; for lining vault treasury department, $3,624; for general overhauling and repairs, governor's mansion, $5,000; for maintenance steam plant at Prairie View Normal, $20,000; traveling expenses of comptroller's department, $2,000.

FROM OLD ARKANSAW

Eureka Springs, Ark., Mar. 15th
If the Herald will allow me space, will comply with my promise to let my friends in Terry hear from me.

To begin with will give some of the details of my first experience with the "emigrant" train. I left Brownfield on Feb. 15th for Amarillo, Texas, thence toward Oklahoma and on to Neosho, Mo., then to Eureka. I made the trip in six days and it was not nearly so bad as I had pictured. We are all liking fine so far.

This is a wonderful country in many ways; for scenery, water and health. Fruit growing, vegetables of all kinds, and berries; fishing and hunting is also fine. The people do not seem to know the possibilities that we are easy access to. These mountains will make the most wonderful pastures, fully equal to the blue grass regions of Kentucky.

You can see blue grass growing on these mountains, alfalfa, red top clover, orchard grass, etc. It will eventually be a great dairy country as well as farming. Corn makes about 35 bushels per acre. The greatest industry at present seems to be the timber business; cross ties, firewood and lumbering. They seem to buy about all they consume instead of raising it. Living expenses are as high here as in Texas; feed is much higher.

I have leased a livery barn and put Sam in it to run it. We are occupying the middle floor of our building. Have the bottom floor rented. Everything seems to be easy; not much tightness of money. People seem to be nice but not much sociable like Texas people. The town is well supplied with churches.

They consist of three different kinds of Holy Rollers, one Christian, two Baptist, one Catholic, and two Methodist for about 3500 people. So you see nothing short in the way of churches. But you know the sooner one acknowledges the corn the easier he feels. So I see my church relations are severed, and will not be easily reinstated, so different to what I have been used to; lot of friction one way and another.

So I will bring my note to a close hoping you people the best year of your lives, and that you may groove the top in every undertaking, and be successful in keeping the negroes out of old Terry. Judging from Judge Neff's letter they will have to back off.

E. W. Harlan.

SECRET MARRIAGE

About two months ago Money Price of this place and Miss Livena Burson, of Seagraves were secretly married at the Baptist parsonage by Rev. J. E. Anderson. After their marriage, Mr. Price went to Eliasville and Miss Burson returned to her home at Seagraves.

The young couple are now reunited and the cloud of mystery is lifted, and the charming couple will be happy together ever after.

THREE MEXICANS NABBED BY OFFICIALS

Three sons of Montezuma blown in one the two o'clock train, Tuesday, and immediately repaired to the Lewis Brothers store and proceeded to land on a $3500 dress that happened to be handy. Two of the employees of the store took the goods away from them and reported to the officers.

They were apprehended at the depot and brought back to town and held guilty, at least one of them did, as given a neat little fine.

They bought tickets for Lubbock, Wed. morning and shook the mud of Brownfield from their feet, and no one was seen to shed a tear. Neither Mexicans or Negroes are welcome in his burg.

COMMISSIONERS OF HOCKLEY COUNTY MEET

The first term of the Hon. Commissioners Court of Hockley county, in its history, recently met in the center of the county, where the county seat is to be laid out, and their only shade was said to be a Ford, but the county diads are preparing for a bond issue in the near future to build a capitol for the baby county.

It is said that the name of the new town, Hockley City may have to be changed as it will conflict with a town of or nearly like that name in another portion of the State. Lots are selling right along in the new county capital, and the Double "C" Company—Post interests—are preparing to erect at least fifteen residences.

Cochran county, the only unorganized county now in the State, is to be attached to Hockley for judicial purposes. Both counties have until recently been attached to Lubbock county for judicial purposes. Hockley county lies directly north of Terry county, and is classed as one of the most fertile counties in the state.

TO THE PUBLIC AT LARGE

Since there has been no school trustees for the Brownfield Independent School District elected for the past two years, and an entire new board of seven members are to be elected on Saturday, April 2nd, 1921; and in order that we may have an economical and just administration, to the end that we may have a better school in the future, the representative citizens of the district respectfully request that in the coming election, the following named persons be given due consideration by the voters as members of said board for the ensuing year.

Mrs. M. V. Brownfield, Mrs. H. H. Copeland, I. C. Burgess, J. C. Bond, W. M. Adams, J. W. Hatton, K. W. Editor's Note.—The above was handed in for publication.

COTTON GROWERS CALLED TO MEET HERE

We have been authorized by several of the farmers of Terry county to issue a call in their name for a mass meeting of the ones especially who have cotton to sell, to meet in this city on Saturday afternoon, April 2, at 1 o'clock P. M., to see about getting together say 500 bales of cotton as a pool, and try to get buyers here from other points.

At this meeting the farmers may take up the subject of planting white corn in Terry county next year, if they have time, and if not to call another meeting for that purpose latter on. If you have no cotton yourself, and your neighbor who has, but does not take the Herald, tell him about this meeting.

Remember the day, Saturday afternoon, April 2nd, at 1 o'clock P. M.

In the recent election in the town of Falls to see whether or not that place would incorporate, there was a tie vote.

Another good shower of rain came up Tuesday night, amounting to 17-100 inch. Thus we now have a season of more than an inch in the last few days.

Considerable interest is being manifested in the school trustee election in April. This is but right. If we are to have a good school lets devote at least a little attention to it.

The Lubbock Avalanche has recently installed a Model 14 Linotype, the very latest and fastest in type casting machines, in addition to their Model 5. The Avalanche is without doubt the best equipped newspaper office on the south plains, and they are giving their readers a live wire paper and their advertisers a good medium to exploit their trade.

The Lubbock Avalanche says that District Judge W. R. Spencer is to be highly commended for assembling the grand and petit juries in Lubbock recently to try the boys that murdered Agent Craft. It further adds that the boys were given sentences that are generally satisfactory. That is the dope. How, flowers for the living.

What is the matter with Phebe? What is the matter with Brownfield? Brownfield is not mad with Phebe and doesn't want Phebe to be at out with her. Is it possible that Phebe lost her Brownfield Notes? Or did she think Brownfield was well known enough to stand on her own pegs? Brownfield people tried to feat and let the good woman while in their midst, but not a scratch has she ever vouched for the good or evil of the old burg. What can be the matter?

She fairly doted on the good neighboring towns, such as Seagraves, Tokio and Ropesville in recent articles in the Star-Telegram. Now why did she slight old "Brownie"? We want to know?

GAINING A FOOTHOLD

Bro. W. L. Swinney reports having received much encouragement and promises of support over the Panhandle and the South Plains for the Panhandle Orphan Home now established at Canadian. The press has been liberal in press notices and it is truly a reward for the good people who have put their time and effort and also money into this project to know that the Panhandle will rally to its support. There has been a great need for this institution in the Panhandle, and the Panhandle must not be glibly rallying to its support.—Canadian Record.

From what the Herald could gather from former issues of the Record, Bro. Swinney found three little orphans, and made effort to locate the children in the eastern orphan homes, presumably the Belle Haven Home at Lubbock, Texas, as the Church of Christ has a home there, and maybe he tried other homes for the fatherless with no better success. Anyway this sympathetic preacher and his congregation and possibly the other good church people at Canadian got busy and purchased or leased a former hospital building and opened the Panhandle Orphan Home, and if we understand it aright the new institution will be under the direction of the Church of Christ at that place, but as usual with such plans, will take in any orphan or orphan regardless of whether their parents were members of that church or no church. To say the least when it gets to the point that the Panhandle and Plains orphans cannot get any attention from the institutions of this nature in east Texas—institutions that have been heartily supported by church people in the Panhandle then it is time they begin establishing in their own country places to take proper care of such unfortunates. So, support the Panhandle Orphan Home.

BROTHERS & Brothers will appreciate your grocery orders.

The Voice of the Pack

By EDISON MARSHALL

(Copyright, 1920, Louis, Brown & Company)

"And never come back!" the girl cried.

"Maybe not. But at least every thing that can be done will be done. Nothing will be left. No regrets. We will have made the last trial. I'm not going to waste my time. Snowbird. The sooner we get your fire built the better."

"Father and I are to stay here—"

"What else can you do?" He went back to his traces and drew the sled 100 yards farther. He didn't seem to see the gaunt wolf that backed off into the shadows as he approached. He refused to notice that the pack seemed to be steadily growing bigger. Human hunters usually had guns that could blast and destroy from a distance; but even an animal intelligence could perceive that these three seemed to be without this means of inflicting death.

A wolf is ever so much more intelligent than a crow—knows a good deal more about a man than a dog and is wholly unapproachable by a boy with a gun. The wolf truly was simply that in their increasing madness and excitement and hunger, they were becoming less and less fearful of these three strange humans with the sled.

It was not a good place for a camp. They worked a long time before they cleared a little patch of ground of its snow mantle. Dan cut a number of saplings—laboriously with his ax—and built a fire with the comparatively brittle core of dead trees. True, it was feeble and flickering, but as good as could be hoped for, considering the difficulties under which he worked.

The dead logs under the snow were soaked with water from the rains and thaw. The green wood that he cut smoked without blazing.

"No more time to be lost," Dan told Snowbird. "It lies in your hands to keep the fire burning. And don't leave the circle of the fire light without that pistol in your hand."

"You don't mean," she asked, unbelieving, "that you are going to go out there to fight Cranston—"

"Of course, Snowbird. You must keep the pistol."

"But it means death; that's all it means. What chance would you have against a man with a rifle? And as soon as you get away from this fire, the wolves will tear you to pieces."

"And what would you and your father do, if I took it? You can't get him into a tree. You can't build a big enough fire to frighten them. Please don't even talk about this matter, Snowbird. My mind's made up. I think the pack will stay here. They usually—God knows how—know who is helpless and who isn't. Maybe with the gun, you will be able to save your lives."

"What's the chance of that?"

"You mean with one cartridge—kill one of the devils; and the others—but you know how they devour their own dead. That might break their famine enough so that they'd hold off until I can get back. That's the prize I'm playing for."

"And what if you don't get back?"

He took her hand in one of his, and with the other he caressed, for a single moment, the lovely flesh of her throat. The love he had for her spoke from his eyes—such speech as no human vision could possibly mistake. Both of them were tingling and breathless with a great, sweet wonder.

"Never let those fangs tear that softness, while you live," he told her gently. "Never let that brave old man on the sled go to his death with the pack tearing at him. Cheat 'em, Snowbird! Beat 'em the last minute, if no other way remains! Show 'em who's boss, after all—of all this forest."

"You mean—" Her eyes widened. "I mean that you must only spend one of those three shells in fighting off the wolves. Save that till the moment you need it most. The other two must be saved—for something else."

She nodded, shuddering an instant at a menacing shadow that moved within 50 feet of the fire.

"Then goodbye, Dan!" she told him. And she turned away. "The thing I said—that day on the hillside—doesn't hold any more."

His own arms encircled her, but he made no effort to claim her lips. Lennox watched them quietly; in this moment of crisis not even pretending to look away. Dan shook his head to her entreating eyes. "It isn't just a kiss, darling," he told her solemnly. "It goes deeper than that. It's a symbol. It was your word, too, and mine; and words can't be broken, things being as they are. Can't I make you understand?"

She nodded. His eyes burned. Perhaps she didn't understand, as far as actual functioning of the brain was concerned. But she reached up to him, as women—knowing life in the concrete rather than the abstract—have always reached up to men; and she duly caught the gleam of some eternal principle and right behind his eyes. This strong man of the mountains had given his word, had been witness to her own promise to him and to herself, and a law that goes down to the roots of life prevented him from claiming the kiss.

Many times, since the world was new, comfort—happiness—life itself have been contingent on the breaking of a law. Yet in spite of what seemed common sense, even though no punishment would forthcome if it were broken, the law has been kept. It was this way now. It wouldn't have been just a kiss such as boys and girls have always had in the moonlight. It meant the symbolic renunciation of the law that Dan owed Cranston—in his mind might possibly be implied which no weight of circumstance could make him renounce.

His longing for her lips pulled at the roots of him. But by the laws of his being he couldn't claim them until the debt incurred on the hillside, months ago, had been paid; to take them now meant to dull the fine edge of his resolve to carry the issue through to the end, to dim the star that led him, to weaken him, by bending now, for the test to come. He didn't know why. It had its fount in the deep wells of the spirit. Common sense can't reveal how the holy man keeps strong the spirit by denying the flesh. It goes too deep for that. Dan kept to his consecration.

He did, however, kiss her hands, and he kissed the tears out of her eyes. Then he turned into the darkness and broke through the ring of the wolves.

either side, and it was obscured. He lost no time. He did not know when the wolves about Snowbird's camp would lose the last of their cowardice. Yet he knew he must keep a tight grip on his self-control and not let the necessity of haste cost him his victory. He crept forward, step by step, placing his snowshoes with consummate care. When he was one hundred yards distant he saw that Cranston's camp was situated beside a little stream that flowed into the river and that—like the mountaineer he was—had built a large lean-to reinforced with snowbanks. The fire burned at its opening. Cranston was not in sight; either he was absent from camp or asleep in his lean-to. The latter seemed the more likely.

Dan made a wide detour, coming in about thirty yards behind the construction. Still he moved with incredible caution. Never in his life had he possessed a greater mastery over his own nerves. His heart leaped somewhat fast in his own breast; but this was the only wasted motion. It isn't easy to advance through such thickets without ever a misstep, without the rustle of a branch or the crack of a twig.

Certain of the wild creatures find it easy; but men have forgotten how in too many centuries of cities and farms. It is hardly a human quality, and a spectator would have found a rather ghastly fascination in watching the high emotions, the passionless face, the hands that didn't shake at all. But there were no spectators—unless the little band of wolves, stragglers from the pack that had gathered on the hillside—watched with lighted eyes.

Dan went down at full length upon the snow and softly removed his snow shoes. They would be only an impediment in the close work that was sure to follow. He slid along the snow crust, clear to the mouth of the lean-to.

The moonlight poured through and showed the interior with rather remarkable plainness. Cranston was sprawled, half-sitting, half-lying on a tree-bough pallet near the rear wall. There was not the slightest doubt of the man's wakefulness. Dan heard him stir, and once—as if at the memory of his deed of the day before—he cursed in a savage whisper. Although he was facing the opening of the lean-to, he was wholly unaware of Dan's presence. The latter had thrust his head at the side of the opening, and it was in shadow. Cranston seemed to be watching the great, white snow field that lay in front, and for a moment Dan was at loss to explain this seeming riddle. Then he understood. The white field before him was part of the zone ridge that the three of them would pass on their way to the valleys. Cranston had evidently anticipated that the girl and the man would attempt to march out—even if he hadn't guessed they would try to take the helpless Lennox with them—and he wished to be prepared for emergencies. There might be sport to have with Dan, unmurdered as he was. And his eyes were full of strange conjectures in regard to Snowbird. Both would be exhausted now and helpless.

Dan's eyes encompassed the room: the piles of provisions heaped beside the wall, the snow shoes heaped against the pallet, but most of all he wished to locate Cranston's rifle. Success or failure hung on that. He couldn't find it at first. Then he saw the glimmer of its barrel in the moonlight—leaning against a scrub box possibly six feet from Cranston and 10 from himself.

His heart leaped. The best he had hoped for—for the sake of Snowbird, not himself—was that he would be nearer to the gun than Cranston and would be able to seize it first. But conditions could be greatly worse than they were. If Cranston had actually had the weapon in his hands, the odds of battle would have been frightfully against Dan. It takes a certain length of time to seize, swing, and aim a rifle; and Dan felt that while he would be unable to reach it himself, Cranston could not procure it either, without giving Dan an opportunity to leap upon him. In all his dreams, through the months of preparation, he had pictured it thus. It was the best at all.

The gun might be loaded, and still in these days of safety devices—unready to fire; and the loss of a fraction of a second might enable Cranston to reach his knife. Thus Dan felt justified in ignoring the gun altogether and trusting—as he had most desired—to a battle of hands. And he wanted both hands free when he made his attack.

If Dan had been erect upon his feet, his course would have been an immediate leap on the shoulders of his adversary, running the risk of Cranston reaching his hunting knife in time. But the second that he would require to get to his feet would entirely offset this advantage. Cranston could spring up, too. So he did the next most disarming thing.

He sprang up and strode into the lean-to.

HOGVILLE LOCAL NEWS

Gape Allsup, who ordered a new watch somewhere from away off, has received it, and instead of winding with a key it has one of these new fangled stem-winding affairs and is attracting no little attention in Hogville. The Postmaster, who has always had a great deal of annoyance over losing his watch key, wonders why some fool did not think of this new arrangement for winding one's watch years ago.

A petition is being circulated asking that the salary of the Bear Ford Preacher be raised. The Old Miser is expected to oppose this, and if it is presented to him at all for his signature, it will be done last, as they do not care to develop unnecessary opposition.

Gape Allsup, who for a long time has had an unknown correspondent, sent her his picture more than a month ago, and has not heard from her since. Gape cannot understand this, though several others think they can.

Dag Smith, who whistles in his sleep, has been ordered by Zero Peck a next door neighbor, to quit it. Dag is not afraid of Zero and will not quit, it is believed.

Dag Smith almost broke up the sermon at Bear Ford Sunday by coming in late and waiting until he got inside the church to stamp the mud off his feet. The preacher reprimanded him and told him he must come across the field and keep out of the mud.
