EXPRESSION OF THANKS

The general public was very generous in their contributions to the new addition to the Baptist church, and because of your fine spirit, I wish to express my great appreciation thru the columns of our splendid paper. With the new opera chair, we feel that we have a very comfortable place of meeting.

The travelers who come our way say that Brownfield is a splendid church town, and think the people have shown a splendid attitude toward the pastors and churches of our rapidly growing little city.

J. E. Anderson.

P. S. I wish to express my thanks to Mr. M. V. Brownfield for giving me a ride in the airplane.

CARTER BROTHERS STORE ENTERED BY THIEVES

The store of Carter Bros., located on the west side of the square, which has been closed for several weeks, was entered by thieves sometime during Monday night and a quantity of merchandise stolen, the exact amount of which will not be known until the stock has been checked up. Entrance was gained through a window in the rear of the building.

The robbery was not discovered until Tuesday morning, which was at once brought to the attention of the officers.

The store carried a line of general merchandise, and was under the management of Mrs. N. D. Gorie, until the doors were closed.

Local officers are working on the case and it is expected that arrests will follow within a short time.—Tahoka News.

THE BRANCH CASE VERDICT

April 3rd, on Sunday night, it will be recalled, Upton Branch, after stealing a pistol from the home of P. Collins, fired several shots in the vicinity of the Baptist church, one of which took effect in the lower limb of Miss Ruby Adams, and another went through the top of W. L. Boyd's car, in which several boys were riding, and with one of these boys he had trouble the same night, while attempting to take a key from the car. Several keys were found in his possession when arrested. The jury gave him a suspended sentence. His father requested that he be returned to the jail for the night after the jury had released him.—Lamesa Reporter.

Otis Longbrake had the misfortune to get his arm broken on day recently while swinging on a rope, the rope breaking before he made his landing. The break was in the wrist.

FRESH AIR AT BROWNFIELD

The accentuating greeting that awaited our arrival at Brownfield is just too good to keep from the towns. People who seemingly arranged everything to our convenience, enjoyment and appreciation. On our arrival at the hotel, a dandy dinner was ours, which was enjoyed, um! um! Immediately after lunch, we breezed out to the bangers and took a spin in town, in an aeroplane, up! up! up!!! over the many cute bungalows and over the beautiful miniature park with its green foliage, bowing a welcome to all.

We trust the people enjoyed the entertainment as well as we enjoyed the stay.

TERRY THE BEST PLACE IN THE WHOLE U. S. A.

T. J. Price loves old Terry with all the vim possessed by the old timer who came here in its real frontier stage and helped to make it what it is. He helped circulate the petition for organization, and worked till the well closed for its adoption. He was its County and District Clerk for three terms, being filling that capacity for the first time when the editor arrived in Terry more than twelve years ago. Since his retirement from that office, he has become one of our most successful farmers.

T. J. has had some property in the little town of Elizaville since he left Young county about twenty years ago to come to the "ballies" and to grow up with the country. He hardly ever thought of this property as it was almost impossible to give it away—much less sell it. But oil was struck in and near the town, and low! this worthless property became real gold and straightway T. J. goes down to make improvements. But that is another story.

What we started to tell was what we heard him tell a bunch of farmers and business men recently in front of one of the local stores. He said:

"When Lense and I (Lense is his son) started down there about two months ago, I said, now son, I want you to notice the difference in the amount of feed stacked around the farm houses as we go along. Anyone could begin to see the difference after the Terry County line was crossed, but there was some good corn field in Lynn county, and occasionally a barn with a considerable amount of corn and heads, good ricks of feed, etc., but did not average with Terry, but more bales of cotton were seen stacked around the premises. Less feed and more cotton still was seen in the Post settlements on the Plains, and after one leaves the croppack, it is the rarest thing in the world to see a well replenished barn, they are the exception rather than the rule. But there is the inevitable cotton—ten or twelve bales in all stages of condition and decay. You can see through the cracks of the little old pins from floor to ceiling, and with just enuf bundle stuff around the place to last a Terry county farmer about two or three weeks. You hardly ever see a field that looks like it made enuf corn to fool with.

After you arrive in the oil fields, conditions are even worse they made no effort whatever to raise a crop, so intent were they after the liquid gold. But now they are paying dearly for their folly. The oil fields are full of people without work, and our corn that brings 50c on the local market commands $1.25 there right along.

I was busy repairing and repainting a boarding house on my property and had all the hands I wanted as two of my boys were along. Men would come to me almost with tears in their eyes begging for work, pointing the while to a covered wagon out in the brush, and saying the family had nothing to eat. Yet they would wonder greatly when I would tell them that I did not and would not live there.

The people of Terry county ought

KERBY J. BENTLEY TO HOLD MEETING AT C. OF CHRIST

The members of the local congregation of the Church of Christ are glad to announce to the people of this vicinity that they have fortunately secured the services of Elder Kerby Bentley, of West, Texas, to begin on Friday night before the first Sunday in June.

Elder Bentley is young in the respect to years, yet has had about ten years as evangelist and local minister. His position up at the head of the best in Texas age considered is well established, and his climb of the ladder has been phenomenal. As a moral man and citizen, he has attained a high place among not only his own brotherhood but by all religious people and citizens wherever he has ever cast his lot.

Elder Bentley being young, has not become "root" in his ways, and the church goes with him no narrower than the Bible, to which he will studiously and earnestly cling. His reputation as an orator and reasoner are well established.

But little less proud are the members that they have been able to secure the services of Elder Chas. E. Metcalfe, of Lubbock to lead the song service and help in the devotional work. Elder Metcalfe is well known and highly respected by all citizens of Brownfield. Only the old songs of Zion will be sung that all are familiar with, as a protracted meeting is no place to practice new songs.

THAT SLACKER LIST

Including the names of valiant ex-service men among the list of slackers, having unbiased people to suspect that the persons who kept the records should head that list.

The list sent out by the war department have been found to be so unreliable the press of the country hesitates to publish them until the record of each man has been carefully traced.

If the records of the war department and the draft boards have been so loosely kept as to be largely unreliable, then the editorial fraternity is quite justified in refusing to publish the names of alleged draft evaders until information can be supplied from a source that is reliable.

It is better to let a hundred guilty men escape than to publicly humiliate one innocent veteran.

BUY COAL SUPPLY EARLY

Will coal be cheaper this fall? Misled by rumor not based on fact, the consumer is delaying his coal purchases in the hope of buying for less later in the season. These rumors are based on the assumption that coal freight rates will be reduced, that the cost of producing coal will be less and that the coal mines can run to capacity during the summer and pile up vast stores of coal.

Chairman Clark of the Interstate Commerce Commission has informed J. D. A. Morrow, Vice-President of the National Coal Association, Washington, that no program of general reduction of coal freight rates is before the Commission, nor does he know of any such proposal which is to come before the commission. All the information the National Coal Association has to the effect that coal consumers must expect to buy their coal this summer and fall on existing basis of coal freight rates from the mines.

The cost of producing coal will not be less, says the operators. They say the present contract with the miners has yet another year to run. It expires April 1922. The present wage scale of miners, in other words, will continue for another year.

Nor have the mines storage capacity great enough to keep the mines running to capacity, if the consumers delay buying till fall. The normal production of coal, according to the Association, is about eleven million tons per week, but the demand has fallen off until the production during the last few months has dropped to about seven and one-half million tons per week. The under production is already more than forty-five million tons because of lack of demand and storage facilities.

A serious coal shortage is indicated in the fall unless retailers and consumers buy and store coal without delay. It is economy to buy coal now. The dealers have plenty of time to make deliveries. The railroads are in position to move coal from the mines promptly, equipment being plentiful. In the fall crops will be moving to market and coal will have to take its turn.

The wild scramble for coal in 1919 has evidently been forgotten, but it will be repeated in the fall of 1921 unless dealers and consumers arrange for their coal supply without further delay.

CITY ORDINANCE

Brownfield, Texas, May 26th, 1921. This is to certify that at a recent meeting of the City Council, it was ordained that owners of residences and business institutions within the city, be and are required to provide a pit beneath their toilets, at least five feet deep (unless rock is struck at a less depth) and appropriate size for the house, and to inclose and keep enclosed the rear end with solid wall or good screening. The ordinance also provides for penalty for those failing to do so.

It is hoped that everyone will comply with this sanitary ordinance.

700 YEARS AND STILL FIGHTING

Ireland has been fighting intermittently for something like 700 years for freedom.

It has been a long fight, in the face of every possible discouragement and obstruction. The Irish, like our own people of the original thirteen colonies, want the right to govern themselves.

Ireland in a constant state of turmoil, and with a huge army maintained to keep it in subjection, can be of little value to England. But a free Ireland, with reciprocal trade relations, might be a profitable neighbor.

England might let go of her hot poker with distinct advantage to herself.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Graham Norcross, railroad manager, and his secretary, Jimmie Doodle, are summoned at Sand Creek station by a young lady, Sheila Macrae, and her small cousin. Unseen, they witness a peculiar train holdup, in which a special car is carried off.

CHAPTER II—Norcross recognizes the car stolen as John Chadwick's, financial agent at Sand Creek. He and Doodle rescue Chadwick. The latter offers Norcross the management of the Pioneer Short Line, which is in the hands of eastern speculators, headed by Breckenridge Dunton, president of the line. Norcross, learning that Sheila Macrae is stopping at Fortia City, accepts.

CHAPTER III

The Directors' Meeting

I was up bright and early the next morning, and after breakfast I took a little sashay down Nevada avenue to have a look at our railroad. Of course, I knew, after what the boss had said to Mr. Chadwick the night before, just before we went to bed, that we weren't even going to see Canada, or even Illinois.

I'll have to admit that the look I got didn't make me feel as if we'd found a Cullinan diamond. Down in the yards everything seemed to be at the loosest kind of loose ends. A switching crew was making up a freight, and the way they slammed the boxes together, regardless of broken draughts and the like, was a sin and a shame.

After a while, after I'd loafed through the shops and around the yard and got a few more whiffs of the decay, I strolled on back to the hotel.

I was wondering a little what had become of the boss—who was generally the earliest riser on the job—when two men came bulging through the screen doors of the cafe, picking their teeth and feeling in their pockets for cigars. Right on the dot, and in the face of knowing that it couldn't reasonably be so, I had a feeling that I'd seen those men before. One of them was short and rather stocky, and his face had a sort of hard, hungry look; and the other was big and barrel-chested. The short one was clean-shaven, but the other had a reddish-brown beard clipped close on his fat jaw and trimmed to a point at the chin.

After they had lighted up they came along and sat down three or four chairs away from me. They paid no attention to me, but for fear they might, I tried to look as sleepy as an all-night bell-hop in a busy hotel.

"The Dunton bunch got together in one of the committee rooms up-stairs a little after eight o'clock," said the short man, in a low, rasping voice that went through you like a buzz-saw. "Thanks to those infernal blunderers Cianahan sent us last night, Chadwick was with them."

"I think that was choost so," said the big man, speaking slowly and with something more than a hint of a German accent. "Beckler was choost what you call him—a tam blunderer."

Like a flash it came over me that I was "listening in" to a talk between the same two men who had sat in the auto at Sand Creek siding and smoked while they were waiting for the actual kidnapers to return. You can bet high that I made myself mighty small and unobtrusive.

After a while the big man spoke again. "What has Uncle Chon Chadwick up his sleeve got, do you think?"

"I don't think—'I know' was the snappy reply. "It's one of two things: a receivership—which will knock us into a cocked hat because we can't deal with an office—"

States court—or a new deal all around in the management."

"Vich of the two will it be that will come out of that committee room up-stairs?"

"A new management. Dunton can't stand for a receivership, and Chadwick knows it. The securities would be knocked out and the majority holders—Dunton and his bunch—couldn't unload. Chadwick will name the man who is to take Shaffer's place as general manager of the railroad outfit. We might have stood it off for a while, just as I said yesterday, if we could have kept Chadwick from attending this meeting."

"But now we don't could stand it off—what then?"

"We'll have to wait and see, and size up the new man when he blows in. He'll be only human, Henckel. And if we get right down to it we can pull him over to our side—or make him wish he'd never been born."

The big man got up ponderously and brushed the cigar ashes off of his tending this meeting."

"But now we don't could stand it off—what then?"

"You Wait and See What Comes Mit the Commidtee Room Out."

bay-window. "You wait and see what comes mit the commidtee room out. I go up to the office."

When I was left alone in the row of lobby chairs with the snappy one I was scared stiff for fear, now that he didn't have anything else to think of, he'd catch on the fact that I might have overheard. But apart from giving me one long stare that made my blood run cold, he didn't seem to notice me much, and after a little he got up and went to sit on the other side of the big rotunda where he could watch the elevators going and coming.

I guess he had lots of patience, for I had to have. I had been sitting in my corner for two full hours when I saw the boss coming down the broad marble stair with Mr. Chadwick.

Mr. Norcross held up a finger for me, and when I jumped up he gave me a sheet of paper; a Pioneer Short Line president's letter-head with a few lines written on it with a pen and a sort of crazy-looking signature under them.

"Take that to the Mountaineer job office and have five hundred of them printed," was the boss' order. "Then make a copy and take it to Mr. Cannel, the editor, and ask him to run it in tomorrow's paper as an item of news. If he feels like it. When you are through, come down to Mr. Chadwick's car."

Since the thing was going to be published, and I was going to make a copy of it, I didn't scruple to read it as I hurried out to begin a hunt for the Mountaineer office. It was the printer's copy for an official circular, dated at Portia City, and addressed to all officers and employees of the Pioneer Short Line. It read:

"Effective at once, Mr. Graham Norcross is appointed general manager of the Pioneer Short Line system, with headquarters at Portia City, and his orders will be respected accordingly.

"Breckenridge Dunton,
"President."

We had got our jolt, all right; and leaving the ladder and the Friday start out of the question, I grinned and told myself that the one other thing that counted for most was the fact that Mrs. Sheila Macrae was a widow.

I chanced like the dickens on the printing job, because, apart from wanting to absorb all the dope I could as I went along on the new job, I would be needed every minute right at Mr. Norcross' elbow, now that the actual work was beginning.

Luncheon was served in the Alexa, and they kept the business talk going like a house afire while they were eating, the hurry being that Mr. Chadwick wanted to start back for Chi-vacated by Mr. Shafter, and it was something awful to see the way the head went into the basket. One by one he called the Democrats in; the traffic manager, the general superintendent, the roadmaster, the master-mechanic—clear on down to the round-house foreman and the division heads.

Some few of them were allowed to take the oath of allegiance and stay, but the place-filers and payroll parasites, the cousins and the nephews and the brothers-in-law, every last man of them had to walk under the ax.

Three days later, when the whole town was talking about the new "Jack the Ripper," as they called him, Kirgan, who had been our head machinery man on the Midland construction, tumbled in in answer to a wire. Mr. Norcross slammed him into place ten minutes after he hit the town.

"Your office is across the tracks, Kirgan," he told him. "I've begun the house-cleaning over there by firing your predecessor and three or four of his pet foremen. Get in the hole and dig to the bottom. I'll give you six months in which to make good as a model superintendent of motive power. Get busy."

"That's me," said Kirgan, who knew the boss up one side and down the other. "You give me the engines, and I'll keep 'em out of the shop." And with that he went across the yard and took hold, before he had even hunted up a place to sleep in.

Mr. Van Britt, our general superintendent, was the next man to show up. He was fine; a square-built, stocky little gentleness who looked as if he'd always had the world by the ear and never meant to let go.

"Well, I'm here," he said, dropping into a chair and sitting with his legs wide apart. And then, ignoring me as if I hadn't been there, "Graham, what the devil have you got against me, that you should drag me out here on the edge of nowhere and make me go to work for a living?"

The boss just grinned at him and said: "It's for the good of your soul, Upton. You've too much money. Your office is up at the end of the corridor and your chair is empty and waiting for you. Your appointment circular has already been mailed out."

Mr. Hornack was the last of the new office staff to fall in, though he didn't have nearly as far to come as some of the others. He was red-headed and wore glasses. They used to say of him on the Overland Central that he could make business grow where none ever grew before, and that's what a traffic man lives for.

Naturally, the big turn-over brought all sorts of disturbances at the send-off. Some of the relieved cousins and nephews stayed in town and jumped in to stir up trouble for the new management. The Herald, which was for the down-and-outs, and there wasn't anything too mean for it to say about the boss and his new appointees. Then the employees got busy and the grievance committees began to pour in. Mr. Norcross never denied himself to anybody. The office-door stood wide open and the kickers were welcomed, as you might say, with open arms.

"You men are going to get the squarest deal you have ever had, and a still squarer one a little farther along. If you will only stay on the job and keep your clothes on," was the way the boss went at the traffic manager's committee. "We are out to make the P. S. L. the best line for service, and the best company to work for, this side of the Missouri river. I want your loyalty; the loyalty of every man in the service. I'll go further and say that the new management will stand if you and the other payroll men stand by it in good faith, or it will fall if you don't."

"You'll meet the grievance committees and talk things over with them when there's a kick coming," said Tom McClure, the passenger conductor who was acting as spokesman. "Sure I will—every time. More than that, I'll take a leaf out of Colonel Goethal's book and keep open house here in this office every Sunday morning. Any man in the service who thinks he has a grievance may come here and state it, and if he has a case, he'll get justice."

Naturally, a few little talks like this, face to face with the men themselves, soon began to put new life into the rank and file. Mr. Norcross' old pet name of "Hell-and-repent" had followed him down from Oregon, as it was bound to, but now it began to be used in the sense that most railroad men use the phrase, "The Old Man," in speaking of a big boss that they like.

There was so much crowded into these first few weeks that I've forgotten half of it. The work we did, pulling and hauling things into shape, was a sight, and my end of the job got so big that the boss had to give me help. Following out his own policy, he let me pick my man, and after I'd had a little talk with Mr. Van Britt, I picked Fred May, a young fellow who had been under Van Burch. He was all right; a little too tonguey, perhaps, but a worker from away back, and that was what we were looking for.

Out of this frantic hustle to get things started and moving right, anybody could have pulled a couple of conclusions that stuck up higher than any of the rest. The boss and Mr. Van Britt were steadily winning the rank and file over to something like loyalty on the one hand, and on the other, wherever we went, we found the people who were paying the freight a solid unit against us, hating us like blazes and entirely unwilling to believe that any good thing could come out of the Nazareth of the Pioneer Short Line.

As soon as we returned from our first inspection trip, the boss pulled off his coat—figuratively speaking—and rolled up his sleeves. It wasn't his way to talk much about what he was going to do; he'd jump in and do it first, and then talk about it afterward—if anybody insisted on knowing the reason why.

There were long private conferences with Mr. Ripley, the bright young lawyer Mr. Chadwick had sent us from Chicago, and with a young fellow named Juneman, an ex-news-paper man who was on the payroll as "adviser," but whose real business seemed to be to keep the Short Line public fully and accurately informed of everything that most railroad companies try to keep to themselves.

The next innovation that came along was another young Chicago man named Billoughby, and his title on the payroll was "Special Agent." I, who was as close to the boss as anybody in our outfit, never once suspected the true nature of Billoughby's job until the day he came in to make his final report—and Mr. Norcross let him make it without sending me out on an errand.

"Well, I think I'm ready to talk Johnson, now," was the way Billoughby began. "Red Tower is the one outfit we'll have to kill off and put out of business. Under one name or another, it is engineering every graft in this country; it is even backing the fake mining boom at Saw Horse—which, by the way, this railroad company is now building a branch line."

Mr. Norcross turned to me. "Juneman, make a note to tell Mr. Van Britt to have the work stopped at once on the Saw Horse branch, and all the equipment brought in. And then to Billoughby: 'Go on.'"

The main graft, of course, is in the grain elevators, the fruit packeries, the coal and lumber yards and the stock yards and handling corrals. In these public, or quasi-public, utilities the railroad has given them—in fee simple, it seems—all the yard room, switches, track facilities, and the like. Whenever local competition has tried to break in, the railroad company has given it the cold shoulder and it has been either forced out or frozen out."

"Exactly," said the boss. "Now tell me how far you have gone in the other field."

"We are pretty well shaped up and are about ready to begin business. Juneman has done splendid work, and so has Ripley. We have succeeded, in a measure, though the opposition has been keeping up a steady bombardment. Hatch and his people haven't been idle. They own or control a dozen or more prominent newspapers in the state, and, as you know, they are making an open fight on you and your management through these papers. The net result so far has been merely to keep the people stirred up."

"It's true. He and his crowd have plenty of money—stolen money, a good deal of it—and they stand in with every political boss and gangster in the state. There is only one way to handle such a man, and that is without gloves. I told him we had the goods on him in the matter of Mr. Chadwick's kidnapping adventure. At first he said I couldn't prove it. Then he broke out cursing and let your name slip. I hadn't mentioned you at all, and so he gave himself away. He knows who you are, and he remembered that he had overheard his talk with Heneke in the hotel lobby."

"There was some opposition, Lesterburg, and three of the other larger towns, want to build their own plants. But they agreed to abide by a majority vote of the stock on that point, and my wire reports this morning say that a lump-sum offer will be made for the Red Tower plants today."

Mr. Norcross sat back in his chair and blew a cloud of cigar smoke toward the ceiling.

"Hatch won't sell," he predicted. "He'll be up here before night with blood in his eye. I'm rather glad it has come down to the actual give and take. I don't play the waiting game very successfully. Billoughby. Keep in touch, and keep me in touch. And tell Ripley to keep on pushing on the road. The sooner we get at it, the sooner it will be over."

After Billoughby had gone, Mr. Norcross came at me on a little matter that had been allowed to sleep ever since the day, now some time back, when I had given him Mrs. Sheila's report of the stock on that point, and my wire reports this morning say that a lump-sum offer will be made for the Red Tower plants today."

"We are going to have sharp trouble with a gentleman by the name of Hatch here very long, Jimmie," said the way he began. "You remember what you told me about that Monday morning talk between Hatch and Heneke in the Bullard lobby. Would you be willing to go into court as a witness and swear to what you heard?"

"Sure I would," I said. "All right. I may have to pull that little incident on Mr. Hatch before I get through with him. The train-bump-up was a criminal act, and you are the witness who can prove the guilt of them. Of course, we'll leave Mrs. Macrae and the little girl entirely out of it. Nobody knows that they were there with us, and nobody need know."

I agreed to that, and this mention of Mrs. Sheila and Marie Ann added to my uneasiness. I've been having them out pretty severely for a good long while. They weren't left out in reality—not by a jugful. In spite of all the rush and hustle, the boss had found time to get acquainted with Major Rexel Kewick, and had been made at home in the grand old Kentucky mansion in the northern suburb.

But to get back on the firing line, I wasn't around when Mr. Norcross had his "declaration of war" talk with Hatch. Mr. Norcross, being sure he wasn't going to have that evening off, had sent me out to "Kewick" with a note and a box of roses, and when I got back to the office about eight o'clock, Hatch was just going away. I met him on the stairs.

The boss was sitting back in his big swing chair, smoking, when I broke in. He looked as if he'd been mixing it up good and plenty with Mr. Rufus Hatch—and enjoying it.

"We've got 'em going, Jimmie," he chuckled; and he said it without asking me how I had found Mrs. Sheila, or how she was looking, or anything. I told him I had met Mr. Hatch on the stair going down.

"He didn't say anything to you, did he?" he asked.

"Not a word."

"I had a hunch that Sand Creek business on him, and I'm rather sure," he went on. "He and his people are going to fight the new company to a finish, and he merely came up here to tell me so—and to add that I might as well resign first as last, because, if he said I couldn't prove it. When I laughed at him he got abusive. He's an ugly beggar, Jimmie."

"That's what everybody says of him."

"It's true. He and his crowd have plenty of money—stolen money, a good deal of it—and they stand in with every political boss and gangster in the state. There is only one way to handle such a man, and that is without gloves. I told him we had the goods on him in the matter of Mr. Chadwick's kidnapping adventure. At first he said I couldn't prove it. DISLIKES ROLE OF ANANIAS

But in Such a Situation, Woman Writes Pathetically Pleads, What Could She Say?

When I was a little girl and set to learn my catechism, considerable emphasis was laid by my elders on that clause of my duty to my neighbor which enjoins one "To hurt nobody by word or deed," and not enough was placed on King David's statement, "All men are liars." Mary Alicia Owen writes in Twilight Hour Magazine, October, I am a truthful person, but that sacred "To hurt nobody by word or deed," has become so imbedded in my inner consciousness that, as my slippy nephew would say, "Ananias has nothing on me," in moments of trial.

For instance: A proud mother exhibited to me, not very long ago, a floppy little, smelling hygienically of castle soap and new flannel. "Isn't she the most beautiful baby you ever saw?" she exclaimed ecstatically. I inspected those eyes, whose counter-part is generally seen in aquariums, that dab of a nose which needed starching or wiring to give it some firmness of outline, that long, loose wet mouth. I gave one look at that mother in whose breast burned the maternal ardor of a royal Bengal tiger. "Yes," I meekly answered, although my own little grand nieces and nephews are artists' dreams of loveliness, as those who have had the privilege of seeing them told me when pressed for a candid opinion. I owe an apology to my own flesh and blood, but what else could I say? I appeal for a statement, to the general public, ministers not excepted, what else could I say?

HONORS WERE WITH BARNUM

Fellow Diner Who Thought to Have Joke on Showman Found the Tables Turned.

Turning the joke back on the other fellow was a great stunt for Barnum, the circus king, and recalls an episode of his tour of England.

One day he met a man named Anderson who was a magician and billed himself as "The Wizard of the North." Anderson lured Barnum to a dinner at which both were strangers, and thinking to have a little fun, introduced Barnum to the assemblage as "The Wizard of the North."

Not the least taken aback, Barnum graciously acknowledged the introduction, and bowing to the assemblage said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, as you know, 'The Wizard of the North' gives his first show Monday night and as you are now all my friends, I would like to have you accept passes to see the evening performance," and he began writing passes as fast as he could.

Anderson stood it as long as he could, but finally, with visions of having to do his first show to a deadhead audience, he finally weakened and confessed.

Caribou. Caribou, says the Handbook of Indentures of Canada, published by the geographic board, is the common name of the North American reindeer, of which there are two chief species—the woodland caribou, and the barren-ground edition. The word came into the English from the French of eastern Canada, where it is still the writer, Sagard-Boutat using it in 1632, during the lifetime of Samuel de Champlain. The origin of the word is said to be Miamee, the language of the Indians who inhabited what are now the Maritime provinces. They were known as Miamee, and the word related to caribou, being the name of the deer, and it meant pawing or scratching, from the habit of the caribou pawing away the snow with its fore-paws to find the food—chiefly moss—upon which it subsisted in winter. Formerly the word was often spelled caribou, which gave name to the Caribou district in British Columbia, famous for its gold mines.—Montreal Herald.

HOGVILLE

The Primitive Baptist will hold their annual foot-washing service at Bear Ford the first Sunday in June. The Hogville Loafers' Club will send Gape Allsup as a delegate.
There was an all day meeting with dinner on the ground at the Petunia Ridge Methodist church last Sunday and everything passed off most pleasantly except one instant when Dak Smith got a "Bawling out" by some woman for stepping on her nice table cloth while reaching after pigs. Dak tried to square himself by pulling off his shoes and performing in his sock feet during the rest of the meal.
Bulger Smothers has read a great deal about the "open shop" of late. He wonders what it is. He thinks it must be a blacksmith shop as they are always about the most open shops he knows anything about—especially the one at Hogville, where wild mules have kicked most of the planks out of the walls while being shod.
The editor of the Puckinville Bugle has decided to quit trying to get any news for his paper, there being no use, as his subscribers always say there is no news in it. Of all of the crimes committed and charged to Zero Peck, of this town, perhaps the most dastardly and unpardonable one of the whole list was committed by him last Sunday. It happened in this way: Zero and his good wife, Samantha Peck, who is always given the credit when Zero goes to church, attended church at Bear Ford Baptist church last Sunday, and when the sermon was over and the preacher had said the benediction, Zero got up and came out of church and on home. When he reached his home he looked back down the lane and saw Samantha was not coming. After waiting awhile and knowing he could not get dinner until she arrived decided he must go back and look her up, thinking perhaps that she had gotten tied up in some kind of an argument or discussion with some of the other women. He did not see anything of her until he reached the church, where she was found still asleep in the seat where he left her. Zero would have said nothing about it, but Mrs. Peck was so indignant over the affair that she told some of the women of the town and since then it has been widely discussed by both men and women. The women generally are strong in their denunciations of Zero for such cruel neglect to his wife, and the men also seem against Zero in the matter. Ordinarily the men would side with the woman in the case in matters of this kind, but as Zero has always been more or less indolent, contentious, little, and two-faced, he has but few if any friends among the men, and this case of neglect of the woman whom he promised to "endow with all his worldly goods" (of which he has none nor never will have) will go down in history in this town as being one of cruel and inhuman treatment. The men have decided that the next time Zero goes to sleep on the porch of the postoffice, they will not wake him at closing time.

HE DID HIS BIT

Hark! to the roar of cannon.
Listen! to the mournful cry.
As the bleeding, dying soldier boys,
On the battle field lie.
Suddenly there's a flash of lightning
A burst of cannon ball.
Adding greatly to the suffering victims,
Londer and sadder the echoes fall.
An ambulance appears just then,
And a Red Cross Nurse alights;
She trembles not at the moan of the dying,
For she's seen the results of many fights.
Straightway she begins preparing
Aid for the suffering men;
She hears the cry of a familiar voice,
She turns and looks just then.
Oh! yes the voice is familiar,
'Twas her darling brother who said
'Sister dear, I want you to help
Uncle Sammie.
After I am dead,
I have done all for my country
That I have life to do,
And now I am dying.
'I will leave the rest to you.'
I know that you are brave,
And your life you'll freely give,
That Old Glory may forever wave
And the liberty of our land live.
His face became rigid and white,
The breath came hard and fast;
His quivering lips moved again,
She saw the crises was past.
Did her brave heart fail that moment?
Did she faint or bow in tears?
No, she knelt to pray to her father
Whom ever nation fears.
She prayed not for God to comfort
And cheer her sad heart;
She prayed for her suffering relatives
Ever taking her country's part.
Yes, she prayed for Him to help her
Deliver her land from the foe.
That when the struggle was over,
She might peace and happiness know.
The mighty struggle is over now,
She stands on the land she will ever love;
Our land has been preserved,
By the hand of our God who lives

LABOR TO ENDOW CHAIR IN MEMORY OF HOGG

Austin, May 20.—Plans are being made by the union labor organizations of the State to raise a fund of $100,000 for the endowment of a chair at the University of Texas in memory of the late Governor James C. Hogg. At the recent annual convention of the State Federation of Labor the proposition of making this endowment was endorsed and preliminary steps taken to bring about its accomplishment. Governor Hogg was a great friend of labor, it was pointed out. He was especially sympathetic towards members of the printing craft for the reason that in his early manhood he followed that vocation in the country newspaper offices in East Texas. The idea of the laboring men of the State endowing a chair in his memory at the University had its inception in the mind of Chris Callen, a well known printer of Austin, who was formerly a member of the legislature and when he brought it to the attention of the labor organizations of Texas, he found that it met with hearty response. It is expected that the entire $100,000 will be raised in short order. The nature of the chair to be endowed will be left to the Board of Regents and the President of the University, it is stated.
