A DINNER PARTY

A dinner party was given by Miss Theresa Lemmon at her home Monday noon, in honor of Clemmie Rowe who left us to enter summer school at Abilene. The guests present being Misses Rowe, Bell, Gilbert, Williams and Hamilton.

Miss Margaret Bell gave a slumber party, Monday night for Miss Rowe. Delicious refreshments of ice cream, cake, sandwiches and iced tea were served to Misses, Gilbert, Rowe, Hamilton, Shaw Lemmon, Broughton and Brownfield.

All of Clemmie's friends were sorry to see her leave, but are wishing her all the good luck possible in the future.—Contributed.

J. J. NETTLES FOR COM- MISSIONER PRE. NO. 2

We take pleasure in announcing to the voters of Commissioner's Precinct No. 2 that Mr. J. J. Nettles is a candidate for the office of County Commissioner from that precinct. As we are not very well acquainted with Mr. Nettles personally, we cannot tell you much about him, but are assured by the citizens of Meadow that he is an A1 business man, and at one time made Lynn county a good Commissioner. Remember him when you go to make out your ballot July 22.

KU KLUX AT SLATON

Sunday night during a co-operative meeting held in a church by the Baptist and Methodist denominations at that place, eight Ku Klux Klansmen, dressed in full uniform, entered the church and presented the Baptist pastor, who was preaching at the time with one hundred and ten dollars, with instructions that the money be equally divided between the two churches.—Lubbock Avalanche.

R. L. GRAVES OUT FOR COUNTY ATTORNEY

We take pleasure in calling the voters' attention to the fact that Judge R. L. Graves, present incumbent in the office of County Attorney, is in the race for re-election to the second term. Judge Graves has endeavored to believe to make an efficient officer of the law, and while he may have made some mistakes, as most people do, on the whole he has made good.

According to Judge Graves, this is the only county in the State that has succeeded in selling a bootlegger's car, and there are many other things that will commend him. He will see you before the primary and talk it over with you.

THE COW, THE SOW AND THE HEN

By Dr. A. H. Upham, President of Idaho University.
The farmer smiled as he passed them by,
The cow and the sow and the hen;
For the price of wheat had gone sky high,
And the cow and the sow and the hen
Ate up the grain he could sell at the mill;
The needed his care when nights were chill
He swore of them all he had his fill—
The cow and the sow and the hen.
These barn yard critters had had their day,
The cow and the sow and the hen;
He could get thirty bones for a ton of hay—
No need for the cow, the sow or the hen,
He never could milk another cow,
He hated the sight of a grunting sow,
And raising chickens was work for the frau,
Goodbye to the cow and the hen.
They gave no heed to his jeer or frown,
The cow and the sow and the hen;
Whatever goes up, they said, comes down,
The wise old cow and hen.
The hen laid eggs the winter through,
The cow gave milk and the piggies grew;
But hay dropped down from thirty to two—
Oh, the cow the sow and the hen.
Now he sits and sighs as he counts his cost
For the cow and the sow and the hen;
He almost cries for the milk he lost;
Oh, the cow, the sow and the hen.
He tends them gladly in mud and rain,
And lessens his acres of hay and grain,
If he could only buy them back again—
The cow and the sow and the hen.

ELECTION ORDERED FOR ELECTRIC LIGHT BONDS

The city council met one day last week and ordered another election for July 21st, to see whether or not they be authorized to issue $16,000.00 worth of six percent bonds for the installation of an electric light and power plant for the city.

Several means have been tried since the defeat of the light and water election last fall to get a light plant, but by getting some one to put them in and by a home stock company, but both for one reason or another fell through.

Several who opposed the issue last fall for one reason or another, have recently expressed themselves in favor of a bond issue for lights, is the reason for the order. There was only nine majority against the light proposition last fall.

TEXAS STATE LAW REGARDING KLUXERS

The following article from the Atascosa News-Monitor, says:

The following provisions of Article 1105, Penal Code of Texas should be of great interest to Ku Kluxers and to those who are in sympathy with them. The law leaves no room for doubt that if a bunch of these cowards were shot down while wearing masks, and threatening any person whatsoever, nothing would be done about it, except perhaps hold a few funerals. The law is as follows and any of you birds may look it up:

"Homicide is permitted by law when inflicted for the purpose of preventing the offense of murder, rape, robbery, maiming, disfiguring, castration, arson, burglary and theft at night, or when inflicted upon a person or persons who are found armed with deadly weapons and in disguise at night time on premises not his or their own, whether the homicide be committed by the party about to be injured or by some person in his behalf, when the killing takes place under the following circumstances:

"When the party slain in disguise is engaged in any attempt, by word, gesture or otherwise, to alarm some person or persons, and put them in bodily fear.

MISS LORENA HULSE HAS NEAR SERIOUS ACCIDENT

While Miss Lorena Hulse was putting some goods high up on the shelving at the Cook & Son store this week while all the rest were away to dinner, the whole section of shelving fell over on her pinning her neck was caught between the counter and the shelving, making it almost impossible to make an alarm, but clerks in an adjoining store finally heard her and went to her rescue.

It is thought that no bones were broken, but a deep dent was left in her neck, and her thigh was bruised some. It is fortunate that the accident didn't result in death.

NOTICE TO PATRONS OF THE SWIMMING POOL

There seems to be some misunderstanding among our friends and patrons as to the Seasons Tickets issued by Mr. Dumas during the swimming season of last year, and they are asking that we honor said tickets until same are used up.

We sympathize with them in the loss they have sustained by reason of having the unused tickets on hand, but we feel too, that we are not responsible for this, and are not financially able to carry out contracts that Mr. Dumas may have made without our knowledge.

However, we are going to say that we will until July 10th, honor these tickets. This is gratuitous upon our part, but we are glad to divide this loss with our friends.

We sincerely trust that this statement and method of adjustment meets with the approval of our patrons and cordially invite you to make free use of this opportunity.

Respectfully,

PAINFUL ACCIDENT

On last Sunday evening, while Jno. Deal and some other boys were playing with an old buggy by pulling it up hill and then riding it down, and when it had gained considerable momentum, in some way it left its course and ran into a wire fence and nearly severed three fingers on one hand of John. He is the son of L. J. Deal, and was brought to Dr. Warnick at Caldwell's Drug store for treatment.

He was getting on fine when last heard from. They were fifteen miles south of town and near their home.—Lamesa Reporter.

OBITUARY

Elizabeth N. Pippin was born in Searey county, Ark., Oct. 25th, 1881. She was married to Tom Pippin, Apr. 26, 1896. To this union was born 14 children, ten of whom are yet living, and were at home when the end came, June 13, 1922, about 11 o'clock p.m., when the dark cloud appeared in the distance. It came nearer and spread its dark shadows over Bro. Pippin's home, and took for its victim his dear wife, leaving him and his ten children to mourn their loss. But this sadness is only natural. Sister Pippin obeyed the Gospel in 1912 and she was described by those who knew her best as a most lovable character. I am told that she was a devoted Christian, wife and mother. What more could be said? What more need be said to comfort her husband and children and to afford her many friends consolation? Those who know her can speak only praise of her life, and the example she always set for her relatives and friends. It is a pleasure to be able to speak these words of comfort to the bereaved, and those that are left. Their loss is her gain, for she died in the Lord, and has gone to be with him, and is awaiting their coming. Her work will follow her, for no doubt she is their treasure to be regained in the better world than this.

"And I heard a voice from Heaven saying unto me, write: Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them; Rev. 14: 13" Next to Christ himself there is no blessing to a community like a Christlike Christian.

"The pains of death are past,
Labor and sorrows cease;
And life's long warfare closed at last.

Her soul is found in peace,
Soldier of Christ, well done,
Praise be thy employ!
And while eternal ages run,
Rest in thy Savior's joy.

The writer conducted the funeral, speaking words of sympathy to the sorrowing ones, and words of encouragement and warning to the large crowd, after which the body was placed in the grave in the Brownfield cemetery, at 4:00 p.m. June 14.

May the Lord bless all the broken-hearted. Let us all be prepared to meet our God.

So far Fort Worth has done nothing tangible about the Fort Worth-Plains railroad, and now Dallas has taken up the matter. Now that the two north Texas rival cities are bidding against one another, we look for some real happenings to happen.

Bob Haynes of the Lynn County News has recently installed a linotype machine, and thought to surprise the Fourth Estate with his first machine edition and his announcement all at the same whack, but the good news leaked out prematurely. Bob got mad at the Herald and the Lamesa Reporter for running so much "prebudd" about the matter, but we'll bet a coke Bob is just as proud of his old machine as we "wuz" ours. Don't you Smith. But he tries to be so confounded dignified.

Lamb county is facing one of the hottest elections that has ever been pulled off in that county. An election has been ordered to vote bonds for a fifty thousand dollar county house building, and at the same time to determine where the county seat shall be located. Otton has been the county seat for many years, but the old courthouse burned a few months ago, which brought on the necessity of a new building, and also renewed the fight to change the location of the county seat. Otton, the old location and Amherst, being the two places to choose from. Amherst is on the railroad, while Otton is several miles from the railroad.—Lubbock Avalanche.

Bob Haynes of the Lynn County News is about to whip some fellow in Brownfield (long distance method) for reporting in the El Paso Herald about their hail over there. Haynes says it is like Mark Twain was by the report of his death; "greatly exaggerated." The Herald gave a report of that hail from a conversation with a Lynn county citizen, but by the time the West Texas Chamber of Commerce had reshaped it, and the city editors of the Ft. Worth papers had blue pencilled it, we did not recognize it. It made the hail fall in east Terry county instead of dear old Lynn. Even the Lubbock Avalanche carried the mutilated article this week, and not over 200 acres has been hailed out in Terry county this spring, and that was in the western part of the county. Be consoled, Bobbie.

The Lubbock Avalanche this week carried a peculiar and unusual ad. It read, "The Avalanche refused to print our ad, watch for circulars Saturday.—Lubbock Go Wet Association." There are few—there may be many—newspapers whose space and time is not for sale at any price for certain things. The Advance has recently refused to even print circulars for a certain purpose which we considered detrimental to the morals of the community. We don't mean to propose that we enforce our idea of what is and what is not for the enlightenment or entertainment of our people, but we are glad that we have the right and the privilege of refusing to aid a thing which we firmly believe does not deserve the support of the citizenship—and which is or would be harmful to the morals of the community. Glad to see the ad in the Avalanche. We do not feel so lonesome now.—Rotan Advance.

The time has come when the newspaper, and especially the country newspaper must keep their columns as clean as a ladies front parlor, for the daily is taking the other extreme and making their columns the bawdy house of newspaperdom. Some part of the press of the nation must be kept pure, and we are pleased that it is to be the "Old Home Paper."

COME CLEAN FOLKS

Mr. Scott of the Weights and Measure Department, stated to the editor of this paper that there is a few merchants in Lubbock who are still selling bacon and ham with the wrapping paper on, and that this is a gross violation of the law, and those who continue to do so will get into trouble if they do not stop. He gives this as an additional warning, having already explained the matter to those who are now committing this offense. Better come clean folks. He is not hard boiled till he has to be, but once he gets started he will go the limit, and the limit is an expensive venture. He has brought to town lots of folks in West Texas since he assumed the duties of the office, and he has been sustained in all the cases where they have been carried to the supreme court. He is sure he is right when he makes a move, and you had better take this warning now before it costs you more than all the bacon wrappers that you will be able to sell at meat prices in many years.—Lubbock Avalanche.

Scott gave the same warning in Brownfield when he was here recently, and of course he expects the dealers of Brownfield to comply with the law. He told the Herald man that merchants purchased packery meats at net weight and should sell it the same way and that no customer is entitled to pay meat prices for paper and strings. It might also be mentioned that a customer is expected to get 48 pounds of flour when he purchases it, sack and all, and not 42 or 45, and any consumer or merchant ought to report the shortage of any mill weights to his department.

THE LAST DAYS OF GENERAL CARRANZA

Austin, June 20.—Before the class in Mexican history of the University of Texas, Ramon Beteta, a student in the University from Mexico City, gave an intimate account recently of the flight of President Venustiano Carranza from the City of Mexico in 1920, and the story of his assassination.

Beteta was an employee of the Carranza government at the time of the revolution of May, 1920; he was on the train with Carranza when he left the capital for Vera Cruz, which he never reached. Just after the government officials and employees left the city, it was taken by the forces of Obregon.

Although the young Mexican was somewhat under a handicap of being unable to use the English language fluently, his personal experience with the deposed chief were given graphically. He spoke of the hurried departure of the train of officials of the Carranza government and of the first night spent at the little town of La Villa near Mexico City, where the men all slept on the ground.

"The members of the cabinet and the other men in the train did not know what was coming next, and their distorted faces showed their anxiety; all except the dignified Carranza, who was tall, white, translucent and serene through it all," said Beteta. Fleeing from the main forces, Carranza with about 100 men, among whom was Beteta, struck out for Oaxaca on the southern coast. They marched night and day for several days and were then joined by Herrera with about 20 men, who claimed to be supporters of Carranza. One night about midnight the entire group stopped to rest, the men laying down on the ground to sleep. Carranza and about 20 of his men were in a room of a little hut laying across beds asleep, when about two o'clock in the morning shots were fired by members of Herrera's band through the wall of the hut into the bed where Carranza was asleep.

Wounded as he was, Carranza called for his gun and offered fight, but before he could do anything he was shot to death by more bullets. Beteta's brother was in the hut.

CHAPTER IV. Callers.

The house in which Lucie Ledanois lived had been her mother's; the furniture and other things in it had been her mother's; the two negro servants, who spoke only the Creole French patois had been her mother's. It was a small house, but very beautiful inside. The exterior betrayed a lack of paint or the money with which to have painting done.

The Ledanois family, although distantly connected with others such as the Mallards, had seen forth its final bud of fruit in the girl Lucie. Her mother had died while she was yet an infant, and through the years she had accompanied her father, an invalid, during the latter days. He had never been a man to count dollars or costs, and to a large extent he had outworn himself and the family fortunes in a vain search for health.

With Lucie he had been in Europe at the outbreak of war, and had come home to America only to die shortly afterward, once deprived of his fine recklessness, the girl had found her affairs in a bad tangle. Under the guardianship of Maillard the tangle had been somewhat resolved and simplified, but even Maillard would appear to have made mistakes, and of late Lucie had against her will suspected something amiss in the matter of these mistakes.

It was natural, then, that she should take Jaclin Fell into her confidence. Maillard had been her guardian, but it was to Fell that she had always come with her girlish cares and troubles, during even the lifetime of her father.

At precisely three o'clock of the Sunday afternoon Jaclin Fell rang the doorbell and Lucie herself admitted him.

"Tell me quickly, Uncle Jaclin," eagerly exclaimed the girl. "Did you actually see the Midnight Masquer last night? I didn't know until afterward that he had really been down stairs and had robbed."

"Did You Actually See the Midnight Masquer Last Night?"

"I saw him, my dear," and the little gray man smiled. There was more warmth to his smile than usual just now. Perhaps it was a reflection from the eager vitality which so shone in the eyes of Lucie. "I saw him, yes."

A restless face was hers—not beautiful at first glance; a little too strong for beauty, one would say. The deep gray eyes were level and quiet and wide apart, and on most occasions were quite inscrutable. They were now filled with a quick eagerness as they rested upon Jaclin Fell. Lucie called him uncle, but not as she called Joseph Maillard uncle; here was no relationship, no formal affection of relationship, but a purely abiding trust, an "friendship."

Jaclin Fell had done more for Lucie than she herself knew or would know; without her knowledge he had quietly taken care of her finances to an appreciable extent. Between them lay an affection that was very real, Lucie, better than most, knew the extraordinary capabilities of this little gray man; yet not even Lucie guessed a tenth of the character that lay beneath his surface. To her he was never reserved or secretive. Nonetheless, she touched sometimes an impenetrable wall that seemed ever present within him.

"You saw him?" repeated the girl, quickly. "What was he like? Do you know who he is?"

"Certainly I know," replied Fell, still smiling at her. "Oh! Then who is he?"

"Softly, softly, young lady! I know him, but even to you I dare not breathe his name until I obtain some direct evidence. Let us call him Mr. X, after the approved methods of romance, and I shall expound what I know."

hard pencil, such as few men carry, because it does not easily make very legible writing. Last night I asked Mr. X, for a pencil, and he produced one with an extra hard lead—mentioning that he had borrowed it from Bob Maillard, as indeed he had."

"What? Surely you don't mean—?" "Of course I don't. Mr. X is very clever, that's all. Here is what took place last night. Mr. X, brought us another note from the Masquer, saying that he had found it pinned to the library door. As a matter of fact, he had written it on a leaf torn from his notebook, and pinned it to the door. A little later I met him and mentioned the lack of pin holes; he calmly referred me to the piece on the door, saying that he had merely torn off the note without removing the pins. You follow me?"

"Of course," answered the girl, her eyes wide in fascinated interest. "And he knew that you guessed him to be the Masquer?"

"He suspected me, I think," said Fell, mildly. "It is understood that you will not go about tracing these little clues?"

"Don't be silly, Uncle Jaclin," she broke in. "You know I'll do nothing of the sort. Go on, please! Did you find the airplane?"

"Yes," Jaclin Fell smiled dryly. "I was thinking of that as I left the house and came to the line of waiting automobiles. A word with one of the outside detectives showed me that one of the cars in the street had been testing its engine about midnight. I found that the car belonged to Mr. X."

"How simple, Lucie, and how very clever!" The chauffeur worked a powerful motor with a muffler cut out at about the time Mr. X, inside the house, was making his appearance. It scarcely sounded like an airplane motor, yet frightened and startled, people would imagine that it did. Thus arose the legend that the Midnight Masquer came and departed by means of airplane—a theory aided ingeniously by his costume. Well, that is all I know of suspect, my dear Lucie! And now—"

"Now, I suppose," said the girl, thoughtfully, "you'll put that awful Creole of yours on the track of Mr. X? Ben Chachere is a good chauffeur, and he's amusing enough—but he's a bloodhound! I don't remember that he used to be cringing. Even if you rescued him from a life of crime, you haven't improved his looks."

"Exactly—Ben is at work," asserted Jaclin Fell. "The gentleman under suspicion is very prominent. To accuse him without proof would be utterly folly. To catch him in a genuine delicto will be difficult. So I am in no haste. Besides, I can as yet discover no motive for his crimes, since he is quite well off financially. Well, no matter! Now that I have fully unburdened myself, my dear, it is your turn."

"All right, Uncle Jaclin," Lucie took a large morose case from the chair beside her, and extended it. "You lent me these things to wear last night, and I—"

"No, no," interrupted Fell. "I gave them to you, my dear—in fact I gave them to you two years ago, and kept them until now! You have worn them; they are yours, and you become them better than even did poor Queen Hortense." So say no more."

Lucie smiled forward and imparted a kiss upon the cheek of the little gray man. "There! that is all the thanks I can give you, dear uncle; the gift makes me very happy, and I'll not pretend otherwise. Only, I feel as though I had no right to wear them—they're so wonderful!"

"Nonsense! But all this isn't why you summoned me here, you bundle of mystery! What bothered you last night, or, rather, who?"

Lucie laughed. "There was a Frenchman who tried to be very mysterious, and to read my mind. He talked about, about a grasping, hard man, and mentioned you as my friend. Then he warned me against a proposal that Bob might make; and sure enough, Bob did propose to buy what had been left to me on Bayou Terrebonne, saying he'd persuade his oil company that there was oil on it, and that they'd buy or lease it. I told him no. The Frenchman, afterward, proved to be Henry Gramont; I wondered if you had mentioned—"

"Heaven forbid!" exclaimed Mr. Fell, piously. "I never even met Gramont until last night! Do you like him?"

"Very much." The girl's eyes met his frankly. "Do you?"

and I've always been deeply grateful to him for his assistance then. "We've corresponded quite frequently during the war," she pursued. "I mentioned him several times after we got home from France, but you probably failed to notice the name. It's only since he came to New Orleans that I really kept any secrets from you; this time I wanted to find out if you liked him."

Jaclin nodded slowly. His face was quite innocent of expression. "Yes, yes," he said. "Yes—of course he's a geologist or engineer, I think?"

"Both, and a good one. Well, about last night—he probably guessed at some of my private affairs; I've written or spoken rather frankly, perhaps. Also, Bob may have blabbed to you. Bob still drinks—prohibition has not hit him very hard!"

"No," agreed Fell, gravely. "Unfortunately, no. Lucie, I've discovered a most important fact. Joseph Maillard did not own any stock in the Bayou Oil company at the time your land was sold them by him, and he had no interest at all in the real estate concern that bought your St. Landry swamp lands and made a fortune off them. We have really blamed him most unjustly. I do not believe that he has profited in the least from your investments in the companies concerned were made afterward, and I am certain he sold the lands innocently."

Lucie drew a deep breath. "I am glad you have said this," she returned simply. "It's been hard for me to think that Uncle Joseph had taken advantage of me; I think that he honestly likes me, as far as he permits himself to like anyone."

"He'd not loan you money on it," said Fell. "Friendship isn't a tangible security with him."

"Well, who really did profit by my loss? Anyone?"

Fell's pale gray eyes twinkled, then cleared in their usually wide innocence. "My dear Lucie, in there one person in this world to whose faults Joseph Maillard is deliberately blind—one person to whom he would refuse nothing, in whom he would pardon everything, of whom he would never believe any evil report?"

the dollar sign the big thing in life, Lucie. You couldn't, either."

She frowned a little.

"You seem to have the European notion that all Americans are dollar chasers!"

He shrugged his shoulders slightly. "In a sense, yes; why not?" he answered. "I am an American. I am a dollar chaser, and not ashamed of it. I am going into business here. Once it is a success, I shall go on; I shall see America, I shall come to know this whole country of mine, all of it! I have been a month in New Orleans—do you know, a strange thing happened to me only a few days after I arrived here!"

With her eyes she urged him on, and he continued gravely:

"In France I met a man, an American sergeant named Hammond. It was just at the close of things. We had adjoining cottages at St. Germain. "Ah!" she exclaimed, quickly. "I remember, you wrote about him—the man who had been wounded in both legs! Did he get well? You never said."

"I never knew until I came here," answered Gramont. "One night not long after I had got established in my pension on Burgundy street, a man tried to rob me. It was this same man, Hammond; we recognized each other almost at once."

"I took him home with me and learned his story. He had come back to America only to find his wife dead from influenza, his home broken up, his future destroyed. He drifted to New Orleans, careless of what happened to him. He flung himself desperately into a career of burglary and pillage. Well, I gave Hammond a job; he is my chauffeur. You would never recognize him as the same man now! I am very proud of his friendship."

"That was well said," Lucie nodded her head quickly. "I shan't call you M. Le prince any more—unless you offend again."

He smiled, reading her thought. "I try not to be a snob, eh? Well, what I'm driving at is this: I want to know this country of mine, to see it with clear, unprejudiced eyes. We hide our real shames and exalt our false ones. Why should we be ashamed of changing the dollar? So long as that is a means to the end of happiness, it's all right. But there are some men who see it as an end alone, who can set no limits to their work except the dollar dropping into their pouch. Such a man is your relative, Joseph Mallard. I do not wish to offend you, and I shall therefore refrain from saying all that is in my mind. But you have not hesitated to intimate very frankly that you are not wealthy. Some time ago, if you recall, you wrote me how you had just missed wealth through having sold some land. I have taken the liberty of looking up that deed to some extent, and I have suspected that your uncle had some interest in putting the sale through—"

The gray eyes of the girl flashed suddenly.

"Henry Gramont! Are my family affairs to be an open book to the world? Do you realize that you are intruding most unwarrantably into my private matters?"

"Unwarrantably?" Gramont's eyes held her gaze steadily. "Do you really mean to use that word?"

"I do, most certainly," answered Lucie with spirit. "I don't think you realize just what the whole thing tends toward—"

"Oh, yes I do! Quite clearly," Gramont's cool, level tone conquered her indignation. "I see that you are orphaned, and that your uncle was your guardian, and executed questionable deals which lost money for you. Come, that's brutally frank—but it's true! I came here to New Orleans and became involved in some dealings with your cousin, Bob Mallard. I believed, and I believe now, that in your heart you have some suspicion of your uncle in regard to those transactions in land. Therefore, I took the trouble to look into the thing to a slight extent. Shall I tell you what I have discovered?"

Lucie Ledanois gazed at him, her lips compressed. She liked this manner of his, this firm and resolute gravity, this hardness. It brought out his underlying character very well.

"If you please, Henry," she murmured very meekly.

"Well, then, I have discovered that your uncle appears to be honestly at fault in the matter—"

"Thanks for this approval of my family," she murmured.

"And," continued Gramont, imperceptibly, "that your suspicions of him were groundless. But, on the other hand, something new has turned up about which I wish to speak—but show which I must speak delicately. Has Bob Mallard offered to buy your remaining land on the Bayou Terrebonne?"

She started slightly. So it was to this that he had been leading up all the while!

"He broached the subject last night," she answered. "I dismissed it for the time."

"Good!" he exclaimed with boyish vigor. "Good! I warned you in time, then! If you will permit me, I must advise you not to part with that land—not even for a good offer. This week, immediately Marcell Grus is over, I am going to inspect that land for the company; it is Bob Mallard's company, you know. Is my unwarrantable intrusion forgiven?"

She nodded brightly. "You are put on probation, sir. You're in Bob's company!"

"Yes," Gramont frowned. "I invested perhaps too hastily—but no matter now. I have the car outside, Lucie; may I have the pleasure of taking you driving?"

"Did you bring that chauffeur?"

"Yes," and he laughed at her eagerness.

"Good! I accept—because I must see that famous soldier-hand-chauffeur. If you'll wait, I'll be ready in a minute."

She hurried from the room, a snatch of song on her lips. Gramont smiled as he waited.

RESOLUTIONS

To the Wardens and Brethren of the Plains Lodge, No. 1019, A. F. & A. M.

Our Worshipful Master, James T. Bowen, is missing, having gathered up his working tools and departed on the square, to that undiscovered country from whose horn no traveler returns.

When we beheld the accustomed seat of our Brother Bowen in our lodge vacant, it is a mute witness and silent reminder of his untimely death. The loyalty and devotion of Brother Bowen to our notable order is evidenced by the fact that at the time of his death, he held the office of Worshipful Master, the greatest honor that can be conferred on a brother by his lodge, and this is not all, at the time of his death he was superintendent of the Sunday School of his church.

To some he might have appeared as a rough Ashler, but to those who knew him intimately, he was a perfect artist whom all Master Masons have represented.

Those who knew Brother Bowen will remember him as a Christian gentleman—expressed in the language of a close friend and associate for the past twenty years; he was a diamond in the rough, but through the influences of the church and the pure principles of our order he had become so effectively polished that he had become a radiant star to light the path of those who will follow after him.

His life was so lived as to lead us to believe that his constant prayer was "teach me that sixty seconds make a minute, one hundred cents a dollar, and sixteen ounces a pound, help me to so live that I can lie down to sleep at night, not toss, shave myself in the morning and look the man before me in the eye; grant that I may earn my meal ticket on the level, and in so doing measure my acts by the golden rule."

Since it has pleased him who doeth all things well to remove our worthy Brother from among us:

Be it resolved by this lodge that we extend to Brother Bowen's bereaved ones our heartfelt sympathy in the loss sustained by all.

That this lodge extend to the Herneigh lodge No. 987 its sincere thanks for administering the last Masonic rites to our deceased brother.

That a copy of this be spread upon the minutes of this Lodge, and a copy be furnished the bereaved widow and a copy sent to the Terry County Herald and the Snyder paper for publication.

Our telephone man, Mr. L.H. Plain, has established the first radio in our city. Concerts given by the Kansas City Star were easily understood and appreciated by the hearers this week. So the report goes. The Herald is still a doubting Thomas.

Capt. H. P. Saunders and wife are here this week from Roswell, visiting their old friends, W. A. Bell and family. He is here partly in the interest of the New Mexico Military Institute, of which he is a graduate.

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Simms are recent additions to Brownfield. He will take charge of the Gulf Refining Oil station here, and informed us that he was going to do all he could to push that business in the town.

M. V. Brownfield has recently installed a Delco lighting system of which he is very proud. His home and premises are well lighted with electricity now at night.

Luna Wiseman, who recently underwent two operations at the local sanitarium, was carried home Tuesday afternoon. The first operation was to remove a long splinter from his stomach that was gotten in there recently when a long board of lumber slid out of the car against him, and the other a more serious operation.

Carl Lewis and wife are preparing to move to Tatum, N. M., in order to start carrying the mail to and from Brownfield, July 1st.

E. L. Duke, of Tatum, N. M., was here on business this week, and to meet his son, Walter, who was coming from east Texas to pay him a visit.

Earl Daniel and a couple of friends from Tatum, N. M., were here this week on business.

The Baptist Ladies Aid will have a Baked Sale, Saturday June 24th, at the Liberty Grocery Store. Be sure to buy your Sunday dinner there.

Every once in awhile the Herald strikes an unreasonable subscriber, and has had that trouble only recently. We sent a statement to a man whose time was not up, owing to a mistake in crediting him some time ago. Instead of writing in telling us of the mistake, he ordered his paper stopped "as he did not want to pay for it again." Neither do we, and it is not often that we are accused of trying to "chouse" a fellow out of a little of the measly dollar. As stated hundreds of times in these columns, we will cheerfully and gladly correct any mistake we make without the use of rough words or any abuse. Of course we stopped his paper and sent check for balance due him.

S. Schroeder, our good friend at Sager-ton, wrote in to renew this week and reports things in fine shape in old Haskell.

REDISTRICTING HELD VALID

Austin, Texas.—The Texas Supreme Court has held the representative redistricting bill passed at the last session of the legislature, to be constitutional. The omission of the county of Swisher in passing the bill was the cause of the attack.
The Court held that it was undoubtedly the intention of the legislature to place Swisher county in the 12th district and that the apportionment of the population as made by the legislature is valid.
The validity of the act was attacked in a mandamus suit by representative John T. Smith of Travis county. Smith sought to force J. M. Patterson, county democratic chairman to file his name for reelection under the old law. He refused to do so and the suit was brought.—San Angelo Standard.

We know the young people will have a roasting time and dread their return home. John has quit whipping his horse and doing other unusual things that a fellow will indulge in when his wife is away from home. Mr. L. L.
