Most truck men are the soul of courtesy, being naturally of that disposition. But they also realize that they are making their living hauling for the public, and must be courteous and just to the public. But one truck here, the driver of which is very careless or indifferent to the feelings and hurt of others financially, has damaged two cars to the extent of several hundred dollars of late. Such a person, whether he intends to be careless or not, or whether he drives while drunk, should be denied the privilege of driving on the highways, as he is a menace to the lives and property of others.
