Quick of the Oak Cliff High school, Dallas repeated high brilliant performed with the tennis honors in the formances of a year ago and walk-finals of the Interscholastic League meet Saturday afternoon. Berkeley Bell, Austin flash fell out in the semi-finals when he was beaten by Charles Sloan of Houston. Sloan in turn was defeated by Quick in one of the prettiest matches seen in Austin for some time.

Mary Zita McHale, a schoolmate of Quick's took first place in the girls' singles by a brilliant victory over Marjorie Bright of Wichita Falls, winning in straight sets, 6-3, 8-6.

The Taft team composed of Will-ella Boykin and Villa Mae Brittain, rallied desperately after a defeat in the game of their championship matches and wrested the girls doubles honors from the Calvert team, of Euna Belle McBride and Myrtle Mae McBride. After the sisters had defeated them 6-1 in the opening game, the Taft team came back and took the next two games and the championship with scores of 6-3, 7-5.

Houston one of the members of whose team eliminated Berkeley Bell in the singles, also spilled the hopes of the local team when Bell and Leon Ammann lost to Sloan and Mitchell Darby in the final round.

W. H. CARTER

Last Friay at Presidio, Texas, W. H. Carter passed away. About four years ago he came to Marfa with the family. At that time he was suffering from the ravages of the great White Plague. A year or more ago he moved to Presidio, where at the last general election was elected Justice of the Peace.

W. H. Carter was a Spanish-American war veteran, prominent mason and a member of the Christian Church; he was a man of culture and education, and withal a gentle man in its highest terms. In the flower of manhood, when the fruits of his attainments and character gave promise of achievement he was met with many, many reverses, caused from physical ill health, but he manfully fought on to the end. And "Now after life's fitful fever he sleeps well."

WHAT IS IN THINE HAND

MOSES no doubt felt that he was really up against it. He was the shyest man in history, it is admitted; he had lived in a remote wilderness for forty years, and, worse than this, he stuttered pretty badly. Here he was with the job wished on him of leading a million people out of Egypt and through an untrodden wilderness. It is little wonder that his heart sank and his feet grew cold at the thought of it.

"But behold," he said, his courage weakening, "they will not believe me, nor hearken unto my voice."

He did not realize that in his hand he had untold power—an influence that would turn back the waters of the Red sea, that would bring water out of the dry rock, and that would confound his enemies and convince his friends.

Most of us are poor judges of our own talents. Often what we think we do best we do very ill, and it is only chance or necessity or a crisis of some sort that awakens us to the power of the rod in our hands.

It was the war that brought Walton out. He had for years occupied a subordinate position in a large organization. He was plodding along unenthusiastically on a salary that scarcely gave him a decent living, with little apparent chance of promotion. Then the war came on, and Walton having flat feet or a heart murmur or astigmatism or some of the minor weaknesses that threw men into the discard, found when he attempted to enlist that he was rejected and that he was elected to stay with his job.

Most of the men of his age in the office had to go, and there was no alternative left to the management than to throw new responsibilities upon Walton. He shivered at the thought at first, and then there came to him a realization of the power that had been lying dormant within him. He discovered that he was a born organizer, that his judgment of the qualifications of men was excellent, and he capitalized these talents at once. Today he is the vice president of the company.

When I was in Atlanta recently I met Blanche Wheeler. She had been a pleasant little society girl in college, without apparent talent, who had married a business man who seemed quite able to support her. They had two children, he had saved little, and one day he was found dead by the roadside plinned under an overturned car. The only road open to Blanche was to do something at once, to support herself and her children, and the best thing that suggested itself was to go on with her husband's business. As I said, I met her in Atlanta—and she was making twice as much as her husband had ever done. It was the rod in her hand of which she had been ignorant.

What is in thine hand?

HEAVEN

HEAVEN was a very definite and specific place to me when I was a child. I had frequently in imagination followed the narrow path leading up the hill to the gateway at its entrance. I knew every nook and corner of the place. I had climbed often to the top of its surrounding wall and viewed with childish interest the whole expanse of the enclosure within.

The admission gate, as I saw it, was at the north, gloomy and in some degree terrifying with Saint Peter sitting within to check up on those who applied for admission. When he opened the gate slightly and with great caution to see who was without, light streamed through and I pecked in.

The "mansions" were on the west side of the main street and were not detached houses such as I had been used to, but were more like the store buildings in the village near which I lived. They were built of white stone, and had no yards in front, but came up close to the walk and had little stoops in front like the Dutch houses I had once seen in Albany.

The golden street led up an incline to the south, and at the end of it was a sort of band-stand around which the angels used to gather to play their harps. God, looking very much like Mr. Barnes, one of our neighbors with gray hair and long gray whiskers, sat on a gilded throne under a pink canopy at the back of the band-stand. The river bordered with high palm trees such as I had seen in my school geography, ran along the east side of the street.

There was no grass anywhere, and no place to sit down excepting on the little stoops in front of the houses. All the angels which I had ever seen or imagined were barefooted, and I used to wonder if it were not pretty hot on their feet walking down the golden streets, for the sun came down something fierce. On the whole it seemed rather a dull place to me, and I was not sure I should like to go there.

That was a long time ago, and during the intervening years my ideas have changed materially, but Heaven is still a reality to me, and I must confess, in large degree a physical reality, for my finite mind has not yet been able to grasp the infinite; spiritual delights I can only vaguely comprehend. But I know what love means and friendship and sympathetic companionship, and harmony, and I can imagine what infinite opportunity would mean, and these to me are heaven.

Lightning Rods Urged for Tree Protection

Trees with wide-spreading root systems or with roots that reach deep into moist soil are relatively good electrical conductors and, generally speaking, are in most danger of being struck by lightning, says the weather bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture. The rodding of valuable trees to protect against lightning is therefore strongly recommended.

No tree is immune; but among trees of the same kind the one standing well above its neighbors is in most danger, even in a dense forest. This may be due to the greater height of the tree or the kind of ground it stands on. Trees growing in the open are in more danger than those in a thick stand of timber, as are also those growing along an avenue or border of woods. Those growing in moist soil along the banks of a stream or lake are better conductors for lightning than those growing in drier soil. Sound trees in general are less likely to be damaged than those with rotten wood.

Trees growing in loam and sandy soils are struck more frequently than those in clay, marl and calcareous soils. Oaks often grow to great height and mostly in loam and sandy soils. Moreover, they are a good example of a starchy tree, which is a better conductor of electricity than an oily tree like the beech. The oak also is a tap-rooted tree, with its root system extending deep into the soil, which constitutes another factor of danger from lightning for it. Studies in various localities, particularly in western Europe, have shown conclusively that the oak is struck much more often than other kinds of trees.

Elm, ash, poplar and gum trees are also very susceptible to lightning damage, while those least attractive to lightning are the chestnut, maple, alder, and mountain ash, according to the bureau.

Garden Wall Should Resemble the House

It is usually best to have a garden wall of the same material as the house, whether it is of stone, stucco or brick. For the frame house, the wall may appropriately be of cobbles, a delicate lattice, a paneled "board" fence surmounted by lattice, a picket fence or a hedge.

There are of necessity several gates. Where the wall is masonry, a hooded gateway is quaint and attractive. In the hedge nothing could be more pleasing than a trellised arch with a painted gate made of porch balusters. The design of wooden gateways is limited only by the ingenuity and imagination of the home owner.

The rule for a wood pergola is to set the columns as far apart both ways as they are high. The usual wood for exterior woodwork is white pine, as it is very weather-resistant. The fact that garden woodwork must be properly painted and kept so need hardly be emphasized. That paint protection is necessary for the mere preservation of these articles constantly exposed to the weather is well demonstrated by the ordinary unpainted telegraph pole, which is a sight familiar to us all. White will always be the favored color for outdoor woodwork, though green and brown are appropriate, and have greater durability.

Knocker Never Popular

The knocker may have his place in the scheme of things. We are willing to admit that he has. The knocker does some good, in that he points out the weak places in his victim's armor and the victim thus is in a position to make amends. But the long funeral processions are never lined up behind the dead knocker. People who think kindly and speak kindly of their fellows, who have a sympathy for the shortcomings of others and who try to help rather than to knock further down those who may make a mistake, are those who draw men to themselves and who will be missed and mourned when they are gone.—Exchange.

Betterment Called For

It may be predicted that the time will come when there will be a lively emulation for betterment among villages of this country, especially in the West. The pioneer days are over. The time is past when any habitable place was acceptable as a home, when the impulse was to regard a home merely as a temporary abode. The country has become stabilized. Villages and towns have taken on permanency, and with it they should develop and define distinctive characteristics. Efforts in this direction can be made to pay. They make for better values in property and in happiness.

Urges Railway Cleanup

Holding that the unkempt appearance of railroad rights of way in American cities makes an unfavorable impression on all persons entering them or passing through, the National Association of Real Estate Boards, at its annual meeting at Dallas, Texas, recommended to all member boards that they appoint strong and active committees to work in co-operation with railroads and industries and with civic bodies to the end that the railroad rights of way shall be converted into attractive city entrances.

No Increase in the Price of Firestone FULL-SIZE GUM-DIPPED BALLOONS

The extra quality built in by the extra process of Gum-Dipping, the economy of these wonderful tires and the added mileage obtained from them during the past two years, has created such a large demand that over 75% of Firestone's mammoth production is now Balloon Gum-Dipped Cords.

This has greatly increased the total sales volume and the huge Firestone factories are now working on a 24-hour schedule to supply the demand.

This large volume, produced under the most economical tire manufacturing methods, permits Firestone to sell these extra-process Full-Size Balloons at no extra cost to car owners. And this in the face of greatly advanced cost for crude rubber brought about by the operation of the British Rubber Restriction Act.

Gum-Dipping means longer mileage—greater economy—at no extra cost to you!

Enjoy the safety, economy and comfort of Balloon Gum-Dipped Cords this summer. Let us equip your car now at low cost—with liberal allowance for your old tires.
