Plainview, Texas, January, 20th, 1914.

MR. LINE-'EM-OUT:--

One of the greatest attractions of the great American out-of-door sport is the uncertainty of the game, especially when the teams are evenly matched.

The advertiser's efforts are much like those of the batsman--try ever so hard and then he may fan or only pop-up; but that is no particular discouragement, for it is all in the game.

Drive after drive may fall fairly in a fielder's mit, but the men on either side keep trying, for there is no telling when they will make a hit that will prove the winner.

This ad may not bring results expected and desired, nor yet the next one, but directly the season, the goods, the value and the necessities of the public align so that your attractive offering is a clean-up drive.

Line-'em-out through the columns of THE EVENING HERALD and you will always make a hit of some sort and be a winner.

Yours for a hit,

THE EVENING HERALD.

Ford is Ticked When Congress Takes a Rest. Senator Lane's Record for Brevity, a Story About Secretary McAdoo

BY BURTON K. STANDISH. Written for the United Press.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 20.—There is one man here who is powerful glad whenever Congress decides to take a little rest. He is Public Printer Ford. It is Ford's job to print the Congressional Record, Uncle Sam's only daily newspaper, which contains the full report of what transpires in Congress.

The Congressional Record is a daily book rather than a newspaper. It is printed at night in the big Government Printing Office, and no matter how late the session lasts, copies are always on the desks of the members by 10 o'clock the following morning. Every other sort of government printing can slide when it comes to the Congressional Record. That is "must" and it goes through first.

A tremendous force of employes is necessary to handle the Record with the accuracy, speed and facility required. The book frequently runs 10,000 words and press time is as busy a period as that same moment on a great metropolitan newspaper. Moreover, there mustn't be any typographical mistakes in the Record, so an elaborate system of proof-reading is installed.

Senator Lane, of Oregon, has set a new record for brevity in the Congressional Dictionary. His biography occupies exactly one line—and a darn skimpy line at that. It is:

Harry Lane, Democrat, of Oregon. Term expires March 3, 1919.

Besides the monumental biography of Senator DuPont, of Delaware, who tells of every job he ever held and of every civil war engagement in which he participated, Lane's history is most refreshing.

In front of a desk in a tiny little ante-room of the Department labors the son of Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, Francis H. is workin just as hard as an attorney in the division of frauds cases as though his dad isn't a cabinet member, and as though the President of the United States and a whole lot of other prominent folks weren't present at his wedding early in the fall.

"I can hardly call myself a Washington yet," he said, "but I like it here."

Even the rats of New York City are getting extravagant habits, if a $500 nest made in a shoe box, of $5 and $10 bills now in the possession of the treasury department is any criterion.

HOW MANY MARRIAGES ARE SUCCESSFUL THESE DAYS

In the January American Magazine, Ida M. Terrill, writes a remarkable story, entitled "A Court of Hope and Goodwill." It is a description of the court of domestic relations in Chicago a court which has a great deal to do with the settling of differences that arise between husband and wives. Concerning the marriage relation Miss Tarbel says:

"There are in the city of Chicago, let us say, five hundred thousand pairs of men and women who have undertaken to spend their lives in the appalling intimacy of marriage—to create homes where they may rear children, however convinced one may

The shoe box full of mutilated currency has been turned over to Mrs. A. E. Brown the governments veteran expert, who is picking out the smallest fragments and piecing them together and expects to be able to redeem the whole amount.

Only the larger pieces were sent at first but such large portions of some of the bills were missing that the Treasury officials only made good $452 of the whole amount. Thereupon the rest of the nest was forwarded here and if three-fifths of all the bills can be found the entire $500 will be made good.

Although Miss Margaret Wilson is the President's daughter, she scorns to ask for more consideration than anyone else in anything she does. Only a few days ago, she sat in line in the District Commissioner's office awaiting a chance to see Oliver P. Newman, chief commissioner, and her father's appointee. The office boy had not recognized her, so she waited for a half hour or more just like an ordinary citizen.

Grave danger exists of the American brood of antelope becoming entirely extinct. The Biological Survey of the Department of Agriculture has taken official cognizance of this fact, and every effort is being made by Dr. Henry W. Henshaw, chief of the survey, to establish a government owned herd of these beautiful, and formerly very plentiful animals.

When the country was confronted with the fact a few years ago that the American bison was about to become extinct, prompt measures saved this animal to the country. Herds were established, the huge creatures being shipped to the proper environment, and food provided when necessary. With the antelope, however, the solution is not so easy, on account of the great difficulty of catching them alive, their extreme nervousness, and their delicate health. It is well nigh impossible to ship an antelope any distance by rail, as they die in the close confinement necessary for such a trip. A normal bison calf Dr. Henshaw says, is almost always hardy and strong. The antelope calf born in captivity, though apparently perfectly healthy, seldom reaches maturity. The government has procured at the expense of a great deal of time and trouble, eight or nine antelope which are now on the bison range in Montana, the old Flathead Indian reservation. They were placed there some time ago but the numbers of the herd do not seem to increase to any extent.

be that the greatest development and the most abiding satisfaction come to the average man and woman through the family, he cannot but be staggered by the demand it makes on freedom, effort and capacity. At one point or another of the alliance, almost invariably the man or woman break down. All then depends on the character, the sense of obligation to correct, to take a fresh hold. There is an amazing percentage of fair success in marriage. Personally I am inclined to believe that it is in this relation that life's most terrible battles are fought and the most stupendous victories gained. Nevertheless failures are many. They range in degree from patient acceptance of the situation to the open rupture."

Postmaster general Burleson tells of an old Scotchman who was listening to Former Secretary Wilson's lecture on the activity of microbes. The secretary of agriculture said: There are microbes in the cabbage and microbes in the wheat and microbes in everything that grows.

The old scotchman paid strict attention to the lecture.

When he left the hall one of his friends ask him how he liked the lecture.

"I don't see why the secretary of agriculture should put so much stress on what the McCrobes done, he said. "They've done no more than the McGregors or the McPhersons, and there lives no such clan as the Champbells, anyway—Youth's Companion."

"GREEN BUG" PEST DOESN'T THREATEN.

Texas and Oklahoma Grain Growers Mistake "Oat Aphid" for More Dangerous Insect.

Special to The Evening Herald WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 20.—

The fear of the farmers of Oklahoma and Texas have been aroused by the supposed outbreak of the "green bug" in the northern portions of the states. That most of these fears have been caused by the insect known as the Oat Aphid, which does not as a rule, work any serious injury over the grain fields of an extensive territory, is the conclusion of specialists that have recently been sent out from the Department of Agriculture.

Green Bug Appears. Complaints came from the Grain Dealers Association at Fort Worth also from the business men of Oklahoma, that the spring grain Aphid, commonly known as the green bug, was appearing in enormous numbers in the wheat fields. An investigator of the Bureau of Entomology was promptly despatched to northern Texas to study the situation and report thereon. From his investigation it seems that the insect responsible for most of the fears of the grain growers is that known as the Oat Aphid, and not the spring grain Aphid.

The Oat Aphid is found more especially among rye growing grain, where it colonizes upon the stem and to a more or less extent upon the leaves. It is slightly more robust in form, and may be distinguished from the green bug by the slightly reddish tinge on the edge of the back and part of its body. The true green bug is found almost entirely upon the leaves of the grain.

It is more slender than the Oat Aphid and its general color is Paris Green. The third Aphid also occurs in this section, apparently developed in great numbers on cabbage, rape and similar plants, spreading about over the fields.

Different Bugs. Of the three bugs the Oat Aphid is by all means the most abundant, according to the report of the investigators of the Department of Agriculture. In many cases the third bug described was even more abundant than the dreaded spring grain Aphid. While the green bug occurs in the fields its numbers do not seem to be such at this time as to warrant the feeling of unrest among the farmers and grain growers.

There is also present in the fields a tiny friend of the farmer or grain grower which holds in check the progress of the three bugs just described. This is a little black, four-winged parasite which breeds equally well on any of the three varieties. The parasite gets in its work whenever the temperature rises to about sixty degrees during the day. So abundant are these little foes of the Aphid that it would seem impossible for an outbreak to occur, provided the temperature does not fall below about sixty degrees and remain so for a considerable time as the parasite does not develop readily in a temperature below fifty six degrees, while the green bug will develop in a temperature several degrees lower.

A LETTER WORTH WHILE.

Chicago, Ill., Jan. 17, 1914.

Mr. B. O. Brown, Editor The Evening Herald, Plainview, Texas.

Dear Mr. Brown:

I have framed the first copy of The Evening Herald and hung it in the southwest corner of my room—the corner nearest Plainview. This new enterprise means for the town a seven-league step toward citydom. Cut your telegraph and telephone wires, close your electric light plant, and Plainview's progressive people would feel as isolated as a Robinson Crusoe. Discontinue your daily paper but a few years hence, and the town would feel that a calamity just as serious as the above had befallen it.

Stop the grind of the presses that produce Chicago's four morning and four afternoon papers, with their numerous editions, and the city would as soon you cut off her electric lights. (And goodness knows we need the lights continuously, what with the sun having been seen but twice in the past two months.) Comes the day when Plainview is accustomed to the necessity and luxury of a good local daily, and the conditions would be somewhat the same.

Here in the thickly-populated rural districts of the North the farmers are accustomed to getting their news and market reports while the ink odor is still apparent. They are served by interurban lines and most expeditious rural delivery. Besides, every little village of a thousand or so has its daily papers. These farmers would sorely miss their Associated Press dispatches were they to move to a section where news is HISTORY before it reaches them.

Many, many prospective citizens for the Plainview country have asked me if we had a daily in the town. Sadly, I had to answer in the negative. But now the conditions are changed. We are finding Plainview's new daily one of the strongest talking points we can use. It is certainly a boon for the immigration business. These farmers up here have been hard to convince that there is not something wrong with a town of 6,000 that has had no daily newspaper.

No need to tell me that it will take pluck, perspiration and the plunk of many silver dollars to keep this paper up to the standard that a town with Plainview's natural advantages deserves. I have been in the newspaper game the most of my life. But the Shallow Water empire, in which Plainview will always be commercially dominant, will be a second Southern California in time. It will teem with prosperous farmers. It will build and support a great metropolis.

Nineteen-fourteen will be the hardest year for The Evening Herald. The average lalty little realize the expense of running a daily. It is estimated that it takes $1,000,000 capital to start a daily in one of the larger cities and make a go of it. There is the densest ignorance as to the cost of intricate printing machinery; the outlay for paper, which is rapidly increasing in price; the bills for skilled labor and the Associated Press service. If more people could see the congested left-hand column of the newspaper owner's ledger they would be more liberal in their support of their local paper.

In a live and growing town a newspaper starts on its second year with a momentum of its own. The first year it has no momentum. The push must be furnished by the pocketbook and energy of its publisher and the shoulders of its constituency. I know that Plainview will line up behind the publishers of The Evening Herald and enable them to make a record in paper building. For that is the Plainview way. The newspaper is the mirror of a town. Plainview does not want to look at itself in a "broke" mirror. The newspaper is the mouthpiece of its trade territory. The Plainview country does not want its mouthpiece talking in a whisper.

I want to congratulate you on the appearance and personality of The Evening Herald. I want to commend you for your enterprise and ambition in thus launching into the daily class.

Very truly yours,

Z. E. BLACK.

FEEBLE OLD PEOPLE

Are Told How to Regain Strength and Vigor.

As one grows old the waste of the system becomes more rapid than repair, the organs act more slowly and less effectively than in youth, the circulation is poor, the blood thin and digestion weak.

Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic without oil is the ideal strengthener and body-builder for old folks, for it contains the very elements needed to rebuild wasting tissues and replace weakness with strength. Vinol also fortifies the system against colds and thus prevents pneumonia.

Mrs. Mary Ivey, of Columbus, Ga. says: "If people only know the good Vinol does old people, I am sure you would be unable to supply the demand. I never took anything before that did me so much good as Vinol. It is the finest tonic and strength creator I ever used in my life."

If Vinol fails to build up the feeble, old people, and create strength we will return your money.
