Real Photograph of a Genuine Duel

LIVING UP TO THEIR MILLIONS

"SEE here, Jimmy, the rainy season (we live in Florida) is almost on us. What shall we do about the roof?" The better half was worrying a little private worry. I had mine, too, like the fact that I chose Rhode Island Reds instead of White Leghorns and the darned things went broody every night, and that cut egg production, to nil, with feed so high.

"I am trying to arrange for that roof, Sweetness," said I, in a dignified, resigned tone! She sniffed and ran into the house. "Not a thing worth the powder to blow it to blazes, Honey," I said one day as I tossed the mail to her. Honey rifled the heap. Then she selected a skinny letter, which she hurriedly opened. She drew out a thin sheet of paper. Her eyes covered the few lines quickly. A strangled sound startled me.

"Jimmy, Jimmy—oh, read—this!" I took the letter. Two hundred million dollars! From a relative I never even knew existed. I was—hair to—but I couldn't read those dancing figures. We beat it for home and mother. She shared the excitement but we were all too dazed to think about the real meaning of so much coin, that night. It was funny that G. K. Kinald drove up to the place that very night, he and the missus. Of course, we spilled the good tidings at once. G. K. gasped. He had been as hard hit as we were by hard times.

"Boy, howdy! How'll you enjoy it? What'll you do with it?" I hooted. "Do with it? I'll spend it. Been poor long enough. Going to salt $1,000,000 in good securities so I'll never have to be pinched again." "Lucky dog!" He sighed. "Let's go for a trip, G. K. I've got plenty of cash. Let's go to Tampa."

"The better half snorted. Trip? Tampa? Why, we often drove that forty miles even when we were poor! But I said in a superior manner: "Suff, lady. I got an errand there." You'd have passed out, if you'd had that day with us, reader. We went straight to the Walls-Day auto shop and I inspected every model on the floor. I'd pined for one of those nifty boats for years. Now, I was buying—yes sir, and what's more, I was buying for K. G., too. His little old 'bus took us to Tampa but she didn't take us home!

I picked out two of the sportiest, biggest cars that place had in stock. It was something to see two swell autos being sold at one time, and spot cash paid for them, too. "Kiss the flivver fare-you-well, G. K. Let's go." We wept a few publicity tears and tenderly patted the old 'bus. A newspaper photographer was taking pictures of the ceremony. Then we each took the wheel of a big Walls-Day and started. Fun? Boy, you should have seen the way that crowd scattered when we pretended we had no idea how to handle such a large car. But finally we got tired of such foolishness and roared off for home.

"Well, I gave you $10,000 this morning and I don't want to hear from you for a month," said I, kissing those pouty lips. She smacked me on the cheek and slid under the wheel of my new boat. "Oh, you got new cars. Say, where's mine? I want a car of my own."

That produced a riot. "We can buy more. And we'll need nice things for our new home." I regret to say that Sally howled after me: "Darn the new home. I'm not going to burn up my pretty things." But we got into the little house finally and the workmen began on the shack. Now that it was coming down, I realized how fond of every patch on the roof I really was! I knew how I loved the nailholes that let in lots of water every hard summer rain!

Finally I had a beautiful brick bungalow on my hilltop, waiting for the "christening." Sally had decided on a big housewarming and of course we had plenty of friends now that our good fortune had been noised abroad. Yes, it got into the papers some way. Believe me, buddy, not through me! Did you say hard times?

Wow! Every beggar and hard-up human in the world had written to me. Sally was dressing in her latest Paris frock, from Tampa. I was uncomfortable in tux and accessories. Gee, women surely love to put on the dog when they get some coin. "You needn't be fussy, Jim. You have to live up to $200,000,000!" "Not that much now, Baby. I've spent in the past three months." "You haven't even started a dent in it." Woefully, I admitted the truth of that statement. I had tried to tough. Crash! Bang!

"Our guests are arriving, honey. Aren't they early—?" "Suff!" "Noisy, it seems. I don't think I needed this outfit to spend the evening with a bunch of bums—" "C-R-A-S-H!" "Jimmy, Jimmy, the roof's leaking! Oh, wake up, you!"

I sat up in bed, wide awake at last. Where was the—$200,000,000? Sally stood there, hands over her ears, as crash re-echoed on crash. The lightning played about us. I was mad clean through. To have such a vista spoiled by a thunderstorm, and with that leaky roof—

And the a bucket of water poured down over me from that leak over the door of the sleeping porch and I fed to duty and the drip pans, which have permanent stations in every clothes closet upstairs!

Edison Explains How Phonograph Came About "From my experiments on the telephone," Mr. Edison told me, "I knew of the power of a diaphragm to take up sound vibrations, as I had made a little toy which, when you recited loudly in the funnel, would work a pawl connected to the diaphragm, and this, engaging a ratchet wheel, served to give continuous rotation to a pulley. This pulley was connected by a cord to a little paper toy representing a man sawing wood. Hence, if one shouted, 'Mary had a little lamb,' etc., the man would start sawing wood.

I reached the conclusion that if I could record the movements of the diaphragm properly, I could cause such record to reproduce the original movements imparted to the diaphragm by the voice, and thus succeed in recording and reproducing the human voice.

Doctor's 3 RULES Big Help to Bowels

What a joy to have the bowels move like clockwork, every day! It's easy, if you mind these simple rules of a famous old doctor:

1. Drink a big tumblerful of water before breakfast, and several times a day.
2. Get plenty of outdoor exercise without unduly fatiguing yourself.
3. Try for a bowel movement at exactly the same hour every day.

Everyone's bowels need help at times, but the thing to use is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. You'll get a thorough cleaning-out, and it won't leave your insides weak and watery. This family doctor's prescription is just fresh, laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other helpful ingredients that couldn't hurt a child. But how it wakes up those lazy bowels! How good you feel with your system rid of all that poisonous waste matter.

Clean up that coated tongue, sweeten that bad breath, and get rid of those bilious headaches. A little Syrup Pepsin will soon free the bowels from all that waste matter that makes the whole system sluggish. You'll eat better, sleep better and feel better.

You'll like the way Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin tastes. The way it works will delight you. Big bottles—all drugstores.

COGITATIONS and APHORISMS of JODOK

Not long ago I heard a man say that the business men of Friona are not loyal to the town and its interests and to each other.

That was something new to me, for I had personal knowledge of the fact that they had been known to stand as one man on certain matters, and other parties concerned might be able to remember the same incidents to their own apparent discomfiture.

Simply because our people do not see fit at all times to put themselves to unnecessary labor and expense simply to accommodate the whim of some party or parties, who are interested solely in seeing how much cash they can carry out of Friona is to my mind no reason for saying they are disloyal to their town and to each other.

When any person, firm or corporation comes into Friona with any convenience that is calculated to make life more worth the living, they have always found the people of Friona in our history and in our time work are ready and willing to pay the price asked for whatever service they may get; but they do reserve the right to say just when they shall avail themselves of this service and begin paying their hard-earned cash for it.

Simply because Friona people claim and exercise the same privileges for themselves as others do, I cannot interpret as a sign of disloyalty, either to the town or to themselves as individuals.

It is true that, as individuals, the people of Friona vary in ideas or opinions on many matters of more or less importance; but when it comes to matters that concern the town and community as a whole they have, and I am constrained to believe, will continue to stand practically as a unit. Friona's honest and serious-minded business men and other loyal citizens may, and often do, submit to grave and at times serious injustice without any noticeable outcry; but when it comes to the general welfare or honor of the city, he who would try to perpetrate such an injustice will most likely find himself in the position of one who comes squarely against a stone wall.

I would not have what I have just said to be construed as meaning that Friona's people will arise in a storm of indignation at the mere approach of menace of injustice without first having sufficient reason for such complaint, for such would not be true, since they have on different occasions and may still patiently suffer discriminating injustice until they reach the point where forbearance ceases to be a virtue.

I heard the professor say the other day that he had heard a well-to-do man of Friona say that the main reason he had succeeded in his effort was that he had used his head for something else than howling.

People are always talking about hard times and scarcity of money. I agree with them that times are hard, but as for scarcity of money, there is just as much money as there ever has been. People who have the money have not burned it nor thrown it into the sea. They still have it, and what makes the times hard is that they are just keeping it rather than putting it into circulation so that it may have a chance to do good for others.

Someone told me of a man who gives each of his employees a certain sum of money on condition that they spend all of it immediately, but it was not to be deposited nor invested, but spent for some needful or necessary article or purpose such as clothing, food or some needed labor so that it would get into immediate circulation and thus be the means of helping other people, perhaps many.

A good friend of mine told me the other day that the young wheat on his farm is looking fine. He said it did his heart good to look at it and to realize what a wonderful farm he has.

He said he had tried to sell this farm and had offered it for $40 an acre and failed to get a buyer. Now he says since the wheat is looking so well he has raised his price to $700 an acre. I told him it was a good idea and just to stick to it and he would always have his farm.

Going back to the subject of hard times: I read a story recently which is calculated to throw some light on at least one cause of the hard times. I wonder how many others read that same story in the Wheat Grower. It was food for thought, even if it did not furnish any for the body.

I heard one man say that if every man, woman and child could have all the bread they want to eat each day until next harvest there would be no over production or surplus of wheat on hand.

Harding Tomb Dedication Waits

Efforts of citizens of Marion, O. to have this $700,000 memorial to the late President Harding formally dedicated this year, received a setback when it was announced that President Hoover would be unable to visit the city on his trip to Ohio in early October. Completed three years ago, the memorial has remained undedicated despite efforts to have either Hoover or former President Coolidge attend the ceremonies.

"HIGH-BROW" HATS POPULAR; PARIS SAYS SEALSKIN COATS

MEET the "high-brows" which milliners are introducing to the smart world. It is a most apropos name, do you not think, for the stunning new off-the-face hats which are making their debut this season? Of all the startling innovations recorded in advance fall and winter millinery displays none is so startling as the vivacious new way of wearing the hat way back on the head so as to reveal the style centers of our fair country. There is not much likeness between the conventional sealskin coat of the dim and distant past and the snappy-styled sealskins which are registering on the 1930 style program. The new models record a most youthful silhouette achieved through a slightly circular cut which accomplishes a sprightly flare as shown in the lower picture. Unusual sleeve treatments likewise a high-brow and to show a wavy lock or two or more of hair. However, it is not alone the manner of wearing or posing the hat that "does the trick," for the hats themselves are made that way. That is they have the shallowest of crowns and the most ravishing tip-tilted brims, and when you put them on the head there you are looking prettier and younger and more debonaire than your mirror has reflected for years.

There's magic in this new tip-tilted, high-brow mode which urges you to "show your curls and look pretty." Another truth which the 1930 hats are demonstrating is, "there are two sides to a story." The model at the top of the group pictured illustrates this point perfectly. Viewed from one side, it has a wide picturesque brim. See it from the other, and it has been manipulated in a snug-fitting draped effect. Charming to wear with either a satin or a velvet afternoon or street costume.

The dashing vis-a-vis felt model to the left has "style" delineated in its give an entirely new aspect to the modernized sealskin coat together with artful and intricately styled collars. Then, too, the very most fashionable sealskin coats are belted at the natural waistline which immediately establishes their identity as last minute entrants in fashion's contest.

Logwood brown, which is the color of the coat illustrated, is mentioned as a favorite with such noted French couturiers as Patou, Redfern, Paquin, Lelong and a number of other leading couturiers who are using soft, supple sealskin not only for the coat entire but in a trimming way and for intriguing accessories.

The belted mode has invaded the coat realm to no little extent, a move which is accounted for in that fall and winter styles have gone decidedly Russian. Wherefore the coat, the blouse, the tunic which is belted is the outstanding theme of the moment.

No doubt this Russian influence also accounts for the existing flair for aristocratic furs such as Persian lamb, finest caracul, sables and nu-every detail. It accents the off-the-face movement in an effective manner, bringing the brim down into a fluttering frill at the back. A very smart "high-brow" is illustrated to the right. Note its perfectly adjusted shallow crown. You could not push it forward if you wanted to. The last hat is velvet and it heralds a vogue of picturesque brims for the coming months. It accents the modish black-and-white note.

The styles portrayed here represent best ideas of a group of recognized style authorities, they having given their stamp of approval in form of the little diamond-shaped trademark which you see printed below in the picture.

Paris Dictates Sealskin.

Since luxury furs are the thing this season, it is not at all surprising that the pendulum of fashion is swinging back to the coat of genuine sealskin. Paris has ordered it so, and the sentiment for this fur of refined elegance is being strongly voiced throughout

SIMEON AND ANNA

Luke 2:25-39

Golden Text: Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God.—Matt. 5:8.

Introduction.

These people, Simon and Anna, John the Baptist and his parents, Joseph and Mary, and others, bridge the gap between the Testaments, between the Dispensations. Or we may think of them as torch-bearers, passing on the divine fire of God's preliminary revelation into its effulgent fulfillment.

Will you do that? Especially as you advance in years? Discard and forget the base, the untrue, the lower, the trivial, the tentative, and seek to hand on to the future—to your children, shall we say—the things that really belong to the eternal kingdom of God?

The Messianic Hope.

The Messianic hope was the star that illuminated the dark nights of Israel's history. From the days of Isaiah that hope had been cherished by the chosen people. Sometimes the clouds of national disaster obscured the light, but it would always shine again. Conceptions of the Messiah's reign varied with circumstances. At the time when Jesus was born the Messianic hope pictured a political hero, a man of battle, who would break the iron yoke of Rome and deliver the Jews from their loathsome subjection to Roman authority. In most Jewish minds there was little of Isaiah's portrait of a spiritual Messiah. For this reason they failed to understand the ministry of Jesus.

Not all who cherished the Messianic hope, however, emphasized its materialistic aspects. The lamp of spiritual devotion still burned in some hearts, and they saw the need of a spiritual salvation, which was more important than political freedom. Our lesson today presents two such pious souls, Simeon and Anna.

Among the words of counsel that the great Baptist scholar and preacher, George Dana Boardman, gave were these: "With one hand cling to the best of the old, with the other grasp the best of the new!" That was what Simeon and Anna were doing.

Simeon—Just and Devout.
The least important thing that we are told about Simeon is his name, for it was common among the Jews. The record says further that he was righteous and devout. Perhaps we may understand these terms as describing his relation to his fellow men and his relation to God. He treated his fellow men justly, and he worshiped God in sincerity. Unlike many of his fellow Jews, he did not regard his religion as a matter of mere ceremonial observances; it was rather a true devotion to God, which expressed itself not only in worship, but in the right treatment of those with whom he was associated.

"The Holy Spirit was upon him." This statement indicates that Simeon was uncommonly responsive to the divine influence. Three times in as many verses Luke refers to the influence of the Holy Spirit upon this devout man. Like many other Jews Simeon looked forward with longing to the coming of the Messiah, but unlike most of them he was concerned not so much about the political aspects of the Messiah's reign as about its spiritual blessings.

The Consolation of Israel.
"Watchman, what of the night?" was the cry heard often in Israel in those days. Things had been going hard with God's chosen people for a long time. The promise of deliverance given through the prophets were beginning to lose their force. Efforts to hurry up the Messianic era by revolution had all met disaster. Yet the hope would not down. It was liveliest in those like Simeon and Anna, whose faith was sustained by righteousness and piety.

The Jews thought of their condition as wasted, wounded, sorrowing; hence their deliverance through the Messiah was to be a comforting, a consolation, a refreshment (Isa. 40:1). "Comforter" is a name frequently used by the Rabbins for "Messiah." "May I see the consolation of Israel!" was a common prayer petition of the time. Jesus, "I am the water of life" answered this longing for relief in many a Jewish heart.

The salvation, "consolation of Israel," that had come to the world with Mary's child, comprises at least all these things: Hope for despairing men; refreshment and revival for the wasted and broken; consolation for the sorrowing; deliverance from the bondage and ravages of sin, and a new life in the kingdom of God.

The Purification in the Temple.
The "purification" (ver. 22) would be over forty days after the child's birth. The pair of turtle doves, or two young pigeons, were the purification offering (Lev. 12:6-8). That a young lamb is omitted here would seem to indicate, if not the poverty, at any rate the slender means of the family of Nazareth.

Jesus as a first born would naturally be dedicated to the Lord; according to Exodus 13:2 and 12. It is said that Simeon was aged, but his "Now lettest thou thy servant depart" would imply that Tradition makes him a centenarian. The beginning words, in Latin, of his psalm, "Nunc Dimittis," have become its title as it has been used from time immemorial in various church liturgies.

Notice the prominence given to the Holy Spirit. "When our eyes are opened to see Christ as Saviour, we are compelled to recognize the work in us of a divine Spirit who has taken of the things of Christ and has shown them to us" (A. H. Strong). "The pure in heart see God because the Spirit enables them" (Crannell).

The Word to Mary.
"A sword shall pierce through thy own soul also." How true has been the fulfillment! This her Son, giver of life, condemnation unto death! His word a touch-stone of human hearts! Everlastingly spoken against! (Acts 28:22) A golden apple of discord in a sinful world!

The crown of glory of her marvelous motherhood was not to be without its thorns. Every mother knows how true that is of humbler and general motherhood. We are to think of the sword that wounded her heart not only when we see her with him down there at Jerusalem, in the awful last days, but long before that: as his ministry so grievously perplexed her; as he was abused in their hometown; and rejected up and down the land. We call her Mater Dolorosa, "Sorrowing Mother"; and art has always put sadness on her face.

Anna of Jerusalem.
The name Anna is another form of Hannah. "Prophetess" might imply various gifts; or perhaps she was so called because of her intense devotion to the hope of Israel, cherished patiently and assiduously through a remarkable long life time. She was considerably over an hundred; a widowhood of eighty-four years having followed a short married life of seven. That her lineage is recorded might indicate that she belonged to a family of repute. "Departed not from the temple," would not necessarily mean that she made her home in one of the temple chambers; rather that she was present at all the stated hours of prayer and sacrifice. Her love for God's house, which reminds us of the palms' (Ps. 26:8) had its reward, brought her the realization of her life ambition and longing; she did see, at the end of all her watching and waiting, the Lord's Anointed, "the Consolation of Israel."

Anna belongs in the glorious company of the missionaries, evangelists, preachers of the gospel of Christ. Shall we say that she was the very first of them? For as soon as she recognized in the Babe the Redeemer and redemption she immediately began to speak of Him to others—whose spiritual vision was not so intense as hers. A prophetess, prophetically she obeyed the Great Commission.

Salvation for Gentiles.
"A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel." One remarkable feature of Simeon's vision of the Messiah's reign was that his blessings would extend to the Gentiles. This was not the idea of the Jewish leaders. They expected the Gentiles to be brought into subjection to the Jews, but here was a devout soul that understood far better the nature of the Messiah's reign. Spirit-
