We wish to state that there was an error in our editorial last week about one of the bunch on the corner having to stay at home on account of having a new pair of shoes that hurt his feet. It was due to the fact that he was on the petit jury at Amarillo.

Charlie Chaplin, the moving picture comedian, declares he is becoming tired of being an actor, and abhors prancing around thinking up absurd antics to make people laugh. He says it is a hollow life; there is nothing much to it. He wants to be a lawyer, a doctor or a preacher; to work at some worth while profession, here there is no sham or pretense.

This talk indicates that Chaplin is a bigger man than we had thought him to be. Life is very hollow at its best, and to spend it merely in pleasure or in sordid way is enough to make the soul sick and the heart sick. Those live best who produce something worth while.

In a recall election held in North Dakota Saturday, Gov. Lynn D. Lrazier and other state officers who are members of the Non-Partizan League were ousted from their offices. The Non-Partizan League swept into office in North Dakota and one or two other states six or seven years ago on a platform providing state owned and controlled banks, grain elevators, flouring mills, ware houses, etc. These were put into operation but have proven failures, dozens of the banks having gone into bankruptcy, carrying other institutions with them. The league was purported to be a farmer party, to work for the interests of the farmers, and like all such efforts, failed and caused the farmers who put their money and products into these state-operated institutions to lose millions of dollars and also the taxpayers great sums of money, for being political banks and institutions loans were made with little or no security to favorites of the party in power. This failure but proves anew that the government should not become paternalistic for the best sys-prison for violating the espionage and other war-time laws—among them the supreme leader, Townley, whose case was affirmed by the federal supreme court last week.

CARTER-HOUSTON'S

TULLIA WOMAN BECOMES VERY SUCCESSFUL DETECTIVE

Has Many Thrilling Experiences in the Slums of Cities—Rescues Kidnapped Baby

From girl of the Golden West, horse woman, two-gun girl and sprite of the rolling Plains to woman detective, with the slinking human wolf instead of the equally slinking coyote as her prey, is the transition through which Mrs. Mabel Thomas passed in a few years, and all as the result of a mere accident.

In crowded cities, stalking criminals in instance in a score of cities and terror of the unscrupulous medical practitioner, frankly admits to 30 years, but she doesn't look it. Nine years in crowded cities, stalking criminals in ball rooms and in the dark and awesome alleys, have not served to mar the freshness that was the gift of 21 years spent in the warm sunlight by day and under the starlit blue of the quiet Western nights.

Mrs. Thomas is a native Texan, she was born and reared on the Western Plains and calls Tullia her home. She has been in Houston for the past several months and when caught in a talkative mood she delights in telling of her many experiences since turning her attention to apprehending criminals. Some of her experiences are best told in her own words.

"Sometimes I long to go back to the West—where I was born—but the West with its panorama of sage grown prairie is a page from the picture book of childhood. Sometimes I like to turn in memory to the frayed pages of the old life, and I do, but I don't go back. My life now is in the crowded cities where life is mean and dry and warped, where the friends are not the kind who will ride a hundred miles to see you and ask you how you feel, and where the sultry summer nights one sits in a stuffy luxuriating in the artificial breezes of an electric fan. It is comfortable, of course, but it isn't like the good old wind that has the whole prairie to get started in.

"When I was a young girl of 20, the 9 months old child of a friend disappeared with a suddenness that indicated activity of kidnapers. Police of the town in which my friend lived were unable to get any trace of the child or its abductors and the mother was despairing of ever seeing her baby again. She visited me nightly and wept and sobbed out of her grief. Nearly a year passed and nothing more was heard of the child and the young mother had given up all hope and mourned her baby as dead and nearly died of grief.

"Something told me that the baby was not dead and one evening following a visit from the mother I conceived the idea of going in search of the child. The trail was nearly a year old, but in the end I picked it up and followed it where it led. It took me over a great part of the country, finally ending in Cleveland in an old dilapidated house. The father of the child had separated from the mother and I learned that he had hired the kidnapers to abduct the child, and when they had done their work he took it and placed it in this old house and hired a negro woman to care for it.

"Because I was an amateur, I suppose I adopted a disguise before going to the house where the child was being kept. It was the only time I ever tried to throw off suspicion by employing a disguise. Anyway, I made up as a book agent, went to the house and gained admittance. While I was talking with the old negro woman, a child began crying in the next room and she arose and went out of the room we were in and shortly afterwards returned with a white baby. Thinking the presence of the white child might arouse my suspicions and curiosity, she explained that a neighbor had left it with her while she went to the market. I went on talking as though it did not concern me. Presently, when the woman was not looking, I grabbed the baby and ran from the house.

"The negro woman grabbed me as I reached the door but I managed to throw her off and I fled into the street and caught a street car that was bound for town. That same day I wired the mother that I had found her baby and that night I caught the train for me. This incident was what caused me to take up detective work seriously."

In working on different cases, Mrs. Thomas says that she has had to act as a cloak model, saleswoman, stenographer, society woman and a score of other characters in performance of her work.

One of the most difficult tasks she said that she was ever called upon to perform was that of a member of New York's slums in an effort to gain possession of a fifteen year old girl that was a prisoner in a Chinese head quarters in Pell street.

"If there is one wily crook," she says, "it is the Chinese crook. And in the majority of cases his crime is one that is directed against young girls. In the New York case I was called upon to rescue a girl, who having been drugged in a restaurant, was made captive by a Chinaman in a nearby building.

"I traced the girl to the restaurant and tackled the case first by questioning several Chinese in nearby buildings. I soon learned that getting information out of a celestial is much like trying to sail across the ocean in a tub.

"So I proceeded along more scientific lines. I dressed myself in a faded ragged dress and took to frequenting all Chinese restaurants in the neighborhood. One day a Chinaman who had grown used to seeing me that he nodded to me every time I passed his place and one day he called me and asked if I wanted a job in his restaurant. I told him that I believed that I did. He put me to peeling potatoes and on the third day told me why he had hired me. He said that a girl who worked in another restaurant and who had been peeling potatoes for all the other restaurants in the district, had been taken sick and was unable to work, I asked him who she was and he told me that she was Wang Chang's girl. Wang Chang was the Chinaman that was suspected of keeping the missing girl prisoner. I made up my mind that I would search his place immediately. I didn't know how I was going to gain admission but I set about devising a plan whereby it could be accomplished. Several days later I asked my employer how he wrote his name in Chinese.

PERKINS & STUBBS

ALWAYS A BARGAIN

He made a lot of scrawls on a piece of paper and when he wasn't looking I snatched it into my pocket.

"That afternoon I went to Wang Chang, thrust the paper into his hands and said that I had been sent to get a small keg of dried fish. I knew that it was customary for the Chinese to keep them in their cellars.

"When the unsuspecting Wang Chang made his way to the rear of the kitchen down a flight of stairs and through the dark basement, I followed I saw him stop before a door in a partition that divided the basement practically in half, listen for a moment, and then open the door and look in. He did not know that I was behind him, and he was taken unawares when I thrust a revolver into his side and told him to keep quiet. My suspicion that the girl was in the basement was correct. She arose from a bed of discarded garments when she saw me. I told her to run upstairs into the street and that I would be there shortly. I was not concerned in arresting the Chinaman, as the parents of the girl dreaded the notoriety, so I backed up the stairs and ran through the restaurant. On reaching the street the girl was waiting for me and we ran as fast as we could, and went to her home.

"The life of a woman detective is sufficiently filled with thrills to prevent her from growing bored through monotony," says Mrs. Thomas, "but everything considered, it is not the proper vocation for a woman. I cling to it because I probably can make a better living this way than at anything else requiring an equal effort.

"There are times, however, when I get terribly lonely. I have not time, at least in any one city to make friends."

Mrs. Thomas has been working in Houston for some time now, and says that she is thinking of staying here and making it her home.

"My one ambition now," she says, "is to be a mistress of a home—my home. I have had lots of excitement, but little happiness. Any woman who thinks she is happy without a home she can call her own, without a husband who loves her, whom she loves, and a baby to which she can give all that is best in her, is very foolish. I don't believe there is an unmarried business woman past the age of thirty-five who would not trade all else that she has in life for the priceless comfort of home.

"As for myself, I am growing weary of the hotel and the furnished room."

—Houston Post.

Panhandle Produce Company Chat
The turkey season is opening. People want a turkey to eat when Thanksgiving comes. Plainview helps to furnish this supply to them.

Considering the market value of raw food stuff during the past several months and at the present time, the turkey market is offering a very fair price for turkeys. For a number of seasons tukeys have brought a phenomenally high price. This season they will not strike a high average.

Holding back turkeys that are ready for the Thanksgiving market may not be wise. The Christmas market is rarely ever as good as the Thanksgiving market and it is never better. Underweights should be held back.

Phone us if you are ready to sell. We will quote you the highest price the market will permit.

RURAL FREE DELIVERY SHOULD BE PUT OVER THE TOP

A Few Figures to Show You What a Great Work Our Mailing Business Runs To. Read It All

First, we need better roads. And I do ask the public to get behind our county judge and commissioners. Ask them why we cannot have some work done on our rural routes and also star routes.

You remember some few weeks back a good and a splendid writer was boosting the great county of Swisher, Texas, in the Tulia Herald—about how much wheat was raised, how long our school run, and several good things of interest. But he failed to say anything about one of the greatest subjects and one of the most important things to the rural or country people,—and that is rural free delivery.

Now stop for a moment and think if you lived in the country, twenty miles from a postoffice, and had to drive forty miles, the round trip, to get your mail, when you can have it brought to your door. And the government wishes to put rural free delivery in every American home.

If service is to be performed with a vehicle of modern type roads must be smooth and free from obstructions. National and state legislation has been enacted in this direction, but there are millions of rural patrons who reside on roads that are absolutely impassable for motor vehicles. It is foolish, as well as useless, to establish routes over roads that are impassable.

Now think of your great County of Swisher, Texas, and only two rural routes and both tri-weekly at present, when Tulia itself should have at least six; Kress, three; Happy, three; a total of twelve. There are counties that have them. Why not Swisher? You surely are not all "kin" to Bailey. You remember Joe voted against rural free delivery.

Now I will give you a few figures as to when, how, and what this great work means to all classes of people. People forget that the mailing or postal service is the biggest business in the world. That we have 300,000 employees immediately connected with the operation, with 100,000,000 customers. In December, 1920, we had 43,710 rural routes, 295 new ones since 1921, would be 43,915 rural routes, 10,808 star routes. You say, "Yes, free delivery, for these figures, up to and including 1915, 26,080 fourth class boxes were discontinued on account of the establishment of rural free service, representing a saving to the postal service on that date of approximately $1,613,040 in sum, and on the same date the saving on account of star route service discontinued amounted to approximately $3,482,670, together $5,095,710. Therefore give us more rural routes as the people get all on a rural route they can at the office and they cannot on a star route, for there is no comparison.

No part of our government comes so close to the real need of the people as the postal service and no part of this great system is so well known, so well understood and so well received in what it offers to patrons as the rural delivery. Rural delivery is that part of the postal service which goes to the door of the farmer, the wage earner, and the primary producer of wealth. It is no longer experiment. It is a fixture.

We have the largest express company in the whole world, hauling over two billion packages last year. We have the largest savings banks in the world in number of depositors, with 75 per cent of the depositors of foreign extraction. There is twice as much postal business done in New York City as in the entire Dominion of Canada. The business of the New York office has increased 289 per cent since 1912, with no increase in postal facilities since that time. A million seven hundred thousand letters are handled every hour by the postal department. Every time you buy a postage stamp you are a part of a total of fourteen billion annually. There are 1,250,000,000 postal cards sold each year and 9,000,000 stamped envelopes. Debts, to the amount of $1,500,000,000 are satisfied each year through the sale of 150,000,000 money orders. The earth could be encircled ten times with the two rails on which the mail is carried in the United States. We use 400,000 quarts of ink in a year and 25,000 quarts of mucilage and enough lead pencils to place one behind the ear of 1,500,000 persons. We use 800,000 miles of twine every year, enough to girdle the earth thirty times. There are nineteen million undeliverable letters handled annually by the division of dead letters, owing to the neglect of the public in addressing mail. In New York City alone there are 250,000 letters readressed daily by clerks from city directories. Just imagine the tremendous cost of this to the tax payers, due to carelessness of mailers.

Now in conclusion, remember a mail carrier is expected to go, matters not how hot or cold, muddy or dry, and he is not supposed to open gates or go over fences, but I have done it and am still at it to serve my patrons, and will say the two years and over I have been carrying the mail have not missed a day.

And a word to my patrons—I do thank you for the hot doughnuts, pop corn, fruits, butter and many favors in the cold and chilly weather you have done for me. Now I ask you and also will say to our county judge and commissioners, give us better roads and we can give you better service. As I hope Swisher County, Texas, will soon have a dozen daily rural routes, instead of the two tri-weeklies.

Kind editor, there is much more I would like to tell about this great need of rural delivery, when it was established and the great progress it has made, but I will come again some time if you will find space in your splendid paper for this, as I hope it will give a little help to some along this line.

Thanking you for your past favors, as ever,

Your friend,
JOE L. DEEN,
Carrier Route, Kress, Texas.
