GATESVILLE, TEXAS, FRIDAY, JULY 28, 1933

NUMBER 32

HERE and THERE

By Joe Quinn

THE commissioners court of Tarrant county recently voted to put the county on a five-day working week. This came immediately following the President's radio speech and exemplifies a wonderful spirit of cooperation in the chief executive's plan for national recovery. Tarrant set a pattern for others to follow, and that county didn't lose any time doing so, either.

HIGHER wages is another great factor toward national rehabilitation, according to the President's way of thinking, and it looks like he is going to get full accord on this point.

"I'll back Mr. Roosevelt's recovery program even if I go broke," said H. B. Watters, lunch room proprietor of El Paso. Mr. Watters is the man who runs a 10-cent lunch stand in that city. It is hard for us to even wonder how he can serve a whole meal for 10 cents, but he does it. Now he has sweetened his employees' wages to the extent of 33 per cent. That's another fair example of what we can do to join the recovery move.

THE subject of onions is many times very unpleasant due to the effect imposed upon the tear ducts and the odorous offensiveness of those who insist upon eating onions. The word itself is hardly considered proper in polite society due to its suggestiveness.

Many of us have never realized the great demand for onions practically everywhere, nor do we realize the size of the onion market which we have in certain sections of our own state. Collin County is the largest onion producing county in the state, and possibly in the nation. One of the large individual producers plans to get 10,000 pounds of seed onions from 100 acres this year. With some people an onion is a joke but with Collin County people it is "jack".

WHEN most people report disturbances to police headquarters in the city it is because of a peeping tom, a prowler, or a peace disturber, but the city manager of a large Texas Municipality suffered even greater disturbance and reported same to other city authorities. His slumber was disturbed by mosquitoes and now the war on the bothersome insect has begun. Hereafter when you are besieged with mosquitoes during the night all you have to do is to report your grievances to the city and have the officers put a stop to the disturbance.

ELY CULBERTSON, the bridge brain, has accepted an invitation to meet the British team in London. Culbertson offered to back his team with 1,350 pounds sterling to 900 pounds of the Englanders. Culbertson said that it was not his idea to play for money but that he felt that the bet would be necessary to cover the expenses and compensate him for the loss of matches in America at that time. We are wondering just how much money he will make on newspaper stories and lectures while in London. Of course if he did intend to net returns from any other source we could understand why the bet would be necessary.

WE HAVE heard many stories of how the groom left the bride standing at the altar or how the bride eloped the night before the wedding with another man, but it is very seldom that we hear of a minister leaving both bride and groom waiting. That actually happened in Memphis, Tennessee recently when

New Work on State-to-Jonesboro Highway No. 36 Begins

SLOW PROGRESS WITH CRIMINAL CASES TO DATE

Since the last report of the proceedings in the district court there has been only one civil case disposed of, that of E. C. Rohloff et us vs. First National Bank, Waco, and this case was disposed of by an agreed judgment between the parties.

The criminal docket was called Monday morning and work begun to clear the slate and get ready for the capital cases in which special venues have been summoned, but up to this time very slow progress has been made, only two cases having been disposed of as follows:

The State of Texas vs. Crockett Brown, charged by indictment with assault with murder; verdict of guilty and punishment assessed at five years in the penitentiary, with sentence suspended during good behavior.

The State of Texas vs. J. D. Ward, charged with the offense of forgery; verdict in this case was brought in Wednesday night in which the defendant was declared not guilty.

The case of the State of Texas vs. Robert Moore, charged with the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor was called for trial Thursday morning. Late Thursday evening the jury declared him guilty and assessed the penalty at one year's sentence, suspended during good behavior.

COUNTY AGENT MAILS PERMITS FOR PLOWING

According to D. W. Sherrill, county emergency agent, 150 formal acceptances for cotton acreage reduction have been received at the local office. These will be mailed out to the farmers as soon as possible.

Upon receipt of this formal acceptance form the producer is authorized to begin destruction of cotton offered for retirement. When destruction is complete he must sign the performance certificate, get in touch with his farmer inspector who will certify the destruction and forward the form to the county agent who, in turn will certify the form and forward it to Washington. Check will then be mailed to the producer. First checks will probably reach producers in a few days.

As to methods of destruction Mr. Sherrill said, "The cotton must be completely destroyed, as to the method the government is not particular." The acreage may be grazed for ten or twelve days then plowed under, it may be plowed under immediately, or it may be mowed and hauled to livestock. If there are mature or open bolls on the stalk it cannot be stacked or baled for future use. In any event the cotton stubble must be plowed up.

If producer wishes to destroy cotton immediately and has not received formal acceptance slip he may get in touch with his farmer inspector and fill in application for an emergency permit to plow cotton under; if his cotton is opening, if his stock need to graze the cotton or if there is pushing need for planting feed stuffs he may get an emergency permit to destroy. This rush for destruction will not hasten the receipt of payment for cotton destroyed. Those who are not in a hurry are asked to wait for their formal acceptances.

the chosen officiating minister went to a ball game and forgot that he was to tie the knot for a man and his wife-to-be.

Notice to Farmers Who Have Chosen Option Cotton

Producers who have chosen option cotton must remember that they alone can exercise their option. The holders cannot sell before December 1, 1933, unless cotton will bring as much as 9½c per pound. At any time before May 1, 1934, the holders of the options may exercise their options regardless of the market price of cotton. Sec. Wallace has assured the cotton producers of the nation that cotton will be marketed in an orderly manner and will not be dumped on the market.

Attractively Dressed Windows Inherit Much Attention at Leaird's

Clever displays of merchandise in the windows of Byron Leaird's Department Store is creating quite a bit of attraction. The artistic exhibitions are being produced by W. L. (Bud) Rivers.

Mr. Rivers, who was formerly associated with the W. C. Munn Company, in charge of the clothing and shoe department needs no introduction to the people of Coryell County. By his courteous service and affable manner, he has won a host of friends, who have already expressed a welcome for his return to Gatesville.

'round the square

By The Snooper

When you get in that down-and-out humor look up young Joe Baker; that smile of his is enough to take the kinks out of anyone. Mary Lou Carlton and Penelope Hardin were trying to break the scales in front of a drug store the other day. E. W. Jones was having a terrible time trying to work out of a traffic jam—there happened to be a slow-moving truck in front of him. D. W. Sherrill may not be the biggest man in town but he is one of the "busiest." Loraine Moon didn't seem to fancy the sword-swallower that was performing under her office window. Tom Watson, of Jonesboro, served as one of the untiring cotton inspectors. Warren Beaman might as well establish his residence here; he's a jovial fellow. When D. R. Boone isn't talking hunting it isn't because he isn't interested, but because he doesn't happen to be near a hunter.

Contract to Be Let on Highway 7 When Commissioners Can Secure Right-of-Ways; Sept. 1, Date Set Local Force Attends Central Division of Texas-La. Power Co.

In accordance with the custom which has been followed heretofore, of holding regular tri-monthly meetings, the Texas-Louisiana Power Co. held its regular meeting of the central division at Glenrose last Saturday, July 15. Representatives from offices at Gatesville, Hamilton, Clinton, Meridian, Walnut Springs, McGregor, Richland Springs, Valley Mills, Goldthwaite, Hico, Comanche and Whitney attended the meeting.

Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Wallace and Miss Margaret McMordie, representatives of the local branch, were in attendance and both Mr. and Mrs. Wallace took part on program which was held Saturday 3 p. m. following a picnic barbecue given by the general office of the Texas-Louisiana Power Co.

Many of the ones who went to Glenrose took advantage of the resort facilities there and remained for the week end. Mr. and Mrs. Wallace and Miss McMordie were among those who joined the group for the remainder of the week end.

There were several of the Ft. Worth officials who attended the Glenrose meeting including R. L. Bowen, vice-president and general manager of the company.

"42nd Street" to Be Here Next Week at The Regal Theatre

One of the most unusual and stupendous cinema productions ever brought to Gatesville vividly picturing the backstage life of a musical comedy company is that of "42nd Street".

This premier production presents the superb acting of such stars as Warner Baxter and Ruby Keeler, the new song and dance sensation.

"42nd Street" is a new picture, revealing some of the late song hits of the day, with a galaxy of beautiful girls. This performance also provides a spectacle of dramatic intensity.

VISITING GOLFERS PLAY LOCAL COURSE

Warren Beaman of Waco, district manager of the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company, and Gayther Nowell, golf pro at the Waco Country Club, were here last Tuesday and gave local golf fans a treat by demonstrating their golfing ability. Several members of the Gatesville club played the eighteen holes with the visitors.

Mr. Beaman was kind enough to extend an invitation to local golfers to visit the Waco club and play the sporty central Texas course.

Practically every day that passes brings news of more progress being made in the road building program of Coryell County, more especially in regard to Highways 36 and 7.

Wednesday morning, Mr. Alex Young, division construction superintendent of the state highway department, met with the commissioners court to discuss plans to be followed in the work to be done on highway No. 36 from the Training School to Jonesboro. Fred Hill has moved here from Hamilton County and will be foreman in charge of this work. The camp will soon be located and work will begin immediately. Mr. Hill will bring with him a piling foreman and tractor and grader men, but the remainder of the work will be done by Coryell County labor. According to the plan, two-weeks shifts will be employed. Each laborer will be paid $2.40 a day, and if weather conditions will permit the highway work will be completed within three or four months. The No. 36 construction will be financed by the state maintenance fund.

Another member of the state highway department met with the county commissioners Wednesday to report on the proposed work for No. 7 from Gatesville to Oglesby. He stated that the plans were ready and that by September he hoped to see the county in possession of the right-of-ways in order that the contract might be let. This road will be done by contract which cannot be let until the right-of-ways are obtained. It is the plan to use local labor on this highway the same as on No. 36, with a minimum working wage of 30 cents per hour, and a maximum working week of forty hours.

"The commissioners must obtain the required right-of-ways on Highway No. 7," stated County Judge Robt. W. Brown, "and if a trade between the Commissioners and the land owner cannot be reached without delay, condemnation proceedings will be filed immediately."

"It is not our idea to take the right-of-way from any landowner, but we cannot afford to waste time on this road project," explained Judge Brown.

The Outlook

Cotton consumption the first ten months of the present year exceeded that of the same period last year by more than one million bales. Cotton mills in June broke all production records. This increase will, no doubt, be accentuated by the removal from production of close to ten million acres and will greatly boost the price of cotton.

This increased price for the cotton we will harvest, coupled with the $300,000.00 or more that will soon flow in from the acreage destroyed, will put a whole lot of money in the county.

The corn and oat crops are not turning out as we would like for them to, but more than 100 farmers with whom I have talked lead me to believe that we will produce enough to do us and that it will not be necessary to send but little, if any, money away. Inasmuch as our crops were made on a very small expense account, we are almost sure to have some surplus money available to meet obligations and to supply our fall and winter needs.

MONEY IS CHEAPER

More money will be required to supply our wants than for some time in the past. The Processing Tax goes into action next Tuesday, August 1st. It will increase overall prices 8 cents a pair, cotton duck 2 cents per yard, brown domestic 1 cent a yard, etc. Not only that the mills have kept pace in their advances. Only this morning overalls advanced to $1.25 per pair, wholesale. Grade "A" duck is now quoted by jobbers at 14 1/2 cents per yard. Shortened work hours, increased salaries and higher prices of raw materials are responsible for these advances.

MERCHANTS BOUGHT AHEAD

Most merchants looked forward and placed orders some time ago at lower prices than prevail today. This enables them to serve their patrons at some lower prices than would be possible had they waited until now to place their orders.

This Store Is Particularly Fortunate

Right after the inauguration of the President and with the first rumble of advances we began placing orders for staple goods, such as winter underwear, duck, brown domestic, wide sheeting, outing, chevots, and other articles that did not depend upon styling. Heavy shipments of these advance orders are now in the store and if there are doubters of our ability to take care of them, both in price and quantity, we invite them to visit our second floor and our warehouse where they will see thousands of dollars worth of winter goods stacked up ready for fall demand. This applies to furniture also, of which we bought two full cars already received.

Visit Our Store

We think we are prepared to offer you superior advantages as a place to do your trading, and will appreciate an opportunity to show you through our store.

CHAPTER 1

The world was black. The red circles poured in. They were swallowed by purple rings. She was lost. Vast hallways opened. She was going into a strange world. She was riding. She was going somewhere.

"You fainted, dearest. It's been too much for you."

She was burning hot. She was full of something like fear, but it was worse than fear. It flamed and crackled up as if she stood in the midst of a fire. She gasped as if smoke choked her.

"Poor darling."

She kept her eyes closed. She felt a motion of something under her, carrying her.

"Open your eyes, dear."

But she did not. She did not want to see the person who spoke to her. She knew she was in a vehicle of some kind, going somewhere.

Cautiously she clutched at the seat beneath her, running her fingers over cool leather. She half opened her eyes. A taxicab. She was riding in a taxi cab. She shivered and closed her eyes again.

"You're all right, sweet."

It was a man's voice. She hated it. She turned her head away from its presence. Beneath lifted lids she saw the streets of New York. A large firm hand closed over her's.

"I'm afraid it's been a shock."

She kept her head averted.

"Poor sweet."

"I don't—"

"Don't talk darling."

She turned and looked at the man beside her. Dark earnest eyes plumbed hers anxiously.

His tanned face was flushed. His brow was damp.

"You don't what, sweet?"

His thin mouth was twitching. She stared at it blankly.

"You don't what?"

"I don't know." She gave a long sigh and closed her eyes. Waves swept over her. She was losing something, or was it already lost? Her familiar self was fleeing. She opened her eyes. She straightened her hat.

"Feeling better?"

She searched his face. Every curve was strange. Who was he? He spoke as if he knew her well. Yet she could not remember him.

"All right now?"

Who was he? His smile was terrifying. She could not remember him. How had she got there? Where had she been before? Who was he? Who was anybody? She did not even remember her own name.

She sat straight and tense, her eyes wide open and frightened. The loss of her identity did not matter. If only she could get away from this horrible man.

His fingers were on hers again. Her eyes took him in furtively. He was young, yes, young, and well-dressed and in a way good looking.

"You need something to drink."

"No, no, I'm all right."

"I'm going to get you a bro-mide."

"I'll take nothing."

He set his jaw. There was a drug store in the next block.

She thought: I must get away from him. She thought so strongly there was no room for her to wonder even about the loss of her memory.

He was rapping on the glass window of the cab. "You'll feel better as soon as you've swallowed something soothing."

"Please don't bother."

The driver turned a roughly shaved face toward them.

"Stop at the drug store ahead."

She shook her head. "I won't take anything."

The cab was slowing down.

"Yes you will." His smile was wan and anxious. "I'll get them to mix something to make you feel better. It's the best of a jam. No wonder you fainted."

She did not ask what the jam was. She was filled with dread. But her eyes were determined.

"I'll take nothing from him. The cab was stopped. The driver leaned toward them.

"This will do." The young man's hand was already on the latch. "Come on. But no, you better wait here. I'll bring it out to you." He was forcing a smile. He was suffering. She saw that. But she did not pity him. He went down the street, turned into the drug store. As she saw the last of him through the swinging doors, she was flooded with relief. She sat paralyzed. He was gone. She leaned forward steadily against the glass behind the driver. "Drive on," she said. "Drive on."

The man turned his head slowly, looked at her stupidly.

"Drive on," she repeated. "Go on."

His heavy jaw dropped. "You want me to drive on?"

"Yes. Go on."

He bent to his gears. "Where to?"

"Straight ahead."

She relaxed, trembling. With a screeching of the gears, the car crawled into the traffic. She watched the door of the drug store with terror. They passed it safely. He might come out at any moment. He might run after the cab, waving and shouting.

"Then turn right. Only, turn. And then go on and I'll tell you when to stop."

Her fear was receding. She was weak with relief and a curious sense of triumph. The cab had turned.

She drew a long breath. The air was soft and springlike. The avenue was full of brightly painted new cars. She was feeling better. A clock in the street told her that it was half-past four. Her own watch verified the hour.

"Through the park, Miss?"

"Yes."

Where was she going? Where was her home? Perhaps in a few minutes it would all come back to her. She composed herself, sat tensely in the cab, trying to be calm, trying to be rational, trying to remember. Who was her mother? Who was her father?

"Look here," she whispered. "You must know somebody, even if you're an orphan. Just think of someone perhaps that you know. Anybody at all will do. Picture somebody's face!"

Thus commanded across her vision floated the picture of the taxi driver. Then the face of the man she had left in the drug store emerged clearly in her mind's eye. And that was all.

She began straining her eyes at everyone in the streets. Surely someone or something would give her a clue as to who she was, where she ought to go. She seemed to know New York, she thought with a feeling of gratitude. She could go to the hotel at least.

"Around the park again?"

The cab man questioned.

"No, Take me to the Biltmore."

She spoke with decision. She did not know why she said the Biltmore. But she was glad that her wits seemed to be returning. But what she would do after she got to the hotel she could not say. It dawned on her then that the young man she had left in the drug store was her single link with her past.

She drew her fox neckpiece closely about her chin. Where had she got the fur? Her clothes were very new. She racked her brains in order to think where she had put them on. She could not remember where she had dressed that morning. "I wonder what my face is like," she thought suddenly, "perhaps I'm an old woman!"

With anxious fingers she opened her bag and found a little mirror. Her eyes, young and frightened, looked back at her. There was not a wrinkle to be seen in the soft contours of her white face. She was glad she was still young. She hadn't felt old.

She could not tell much about her face though she spent some time inspecting it. Then she turned her attention to her hand bag. She drew out a handkerchief. It was of sheer white linen with the initial D embroidered in one corner. "D," she thought, "stands for Dorothy—or Daisy. I wonder if one of those names could be mine? Or Della? Or Drusilla?"

It was bewildering to be able to think of so many names. It was exasperating. She did not believe that any of those names belonged to her.

She returned to the exploration of her bag, and drew out a black enameled compact. This seemed to have her monogram on it in raised gold letters, but so elaborate was the design that she could not puzzle out what the letters were. The D was clear enough but whether the other two letters were N and M, or V and W she could not decide.

There was no card; nothing else but a bill-fold and a coin purse. She saw with relief that she had plenty of money with her. "At least," she thought, "I won't have to starve until I find out who I am and where I'm supposed to go."

On her hands were some cham- ois skin gloves. Now she stripped them off and looked down at her slim fingers.

On the third finger of her left hand was a platinum band set with tiny diamonds. "I'm married." This was unreal. It was unexpected and a blow between the eyes. She stared at the ring, wondering and whispered to herself unbelievably. "I'm married!"

The cab stopped with a jerk. She looked up. She was at the Vanderbilt entrance to the Biltmore. The uniformed doorman was opening the door.

She took hold of her purse firmly and prepared to get out.

"How much?"

"Dollar-sixty. Don't forget your bags."

Her bags! She was startled. The driver indicated the seat beside himself. It was loaded down with very smart-looking luggage.

She watched the doorman pull down two swagger looking bags of snakeskin, and an enormous hatbox of the same extravagant material.

oisy Vane! Why, she was married. She was Mrs. Somebody. Mrs. D. V. and then her imagination traveled straight back to the man she had left at the drug store.

Sweet, he had called her, and darling!

So that was her husband.

Her husband was a man she feared and hated.

She shivered. "No wonder I lost my mind," she said to herself half-cheerfully. "Perhaps he's saved the mortgage on my dear old home, and I've had to marry him out of gratitude; and on account of my conscience I've been living with him; so now some kind fate has made me lose my memory, so I won't have any conscience about leaving him."

Then, "Perhaps, after all, he isn't my husband—"

The slow minor strains of the string orchestra came from the tea room. Something gripped her heart. Perhaps she was going to remember. She knew the song. The words said themselves to her in a long, sinister drawl.

Oh give me something to remember you by!

When you are far away from me.

She was walking slowly in rhythm to its tedious beat as she repeated the words. But they brought no further recollections. Strange that a song should remain when nothing else did.

She moved along obscurely, but with an inner defiance. She was not a phantom and the silly dream would have to end. Hadn't she showed that she was no phantom by leaving her husband? Some girls wouldn't have been so daring. She hoped she wouldn't meet him.

"Register?" asked the clerk. The bellboy carrying her luggage had led her to the desk.

She flushed. What would she put down? Mrs. Drusilla Vance? But she couldn't. She hesitated. "No—not yet." She turned to the bellboy. "Take care of my bags for a few moments," she said, handing him a dollar. "I'll be right back."

She had thought of the long mirror in the ladies room. Surely one good look at her face and figure would bring back something important. She walked rapidly now, feeling more hopeful. Wasn't there something unconsciously directing her? Even if she had no positive recollections, wasn't she coming here at the bidding of some hidden memory? She fervently hoped so.

The face of the only man she now knew flashed before her. The man in the taxicab. Her reverie ended abruptly. She turned into the ladies' room, saying fervently. "But oh—perhaps—perhaps—after all that was not my husband."

Then she saw herself in the mirror. And everything else faded from her mind because though she saw with relief that she was young and pretty, that she was well dressed and had an air of smartness, not one flicker came into her mind of any kind of recollection. She could not even decide whether she had ever seen herself before or not. But she was certainly feeling better. She stood and gazed and gazed deep into her own eyes.

"Well, you'll know yourself the next time you see yourself, Girlie," said a voice. "But if you haven't any thing else to do for the rest of the day would you let me take a crack at that mirror for a minute?"

She turned.

A girl was grinning at her. A rakish dashing girl with lips of lively red.

"Hello," she faltered. Perhaps this girl was her friend.

"Move over, Cute." The stranger's eyes were ringed with mascara. Her pretty lips were painted blue. "Got something in my eye and this is the only mirror I can get close to." She edged in and pulled competently at her lashes.

"That's a shame," said the nameless girl sympathetically. She wanted to shout; Do you know me? What's my name?

So good a person! But she mustn't black out of her eye. "There that's that!" She stood back and eyed herself with critical admiration.

The nameless girl watched with a friendly eye, hoping that the newcomer's greeting had meant a former acquaintance. But the girl took no further notice of her for the moment.

The nameless girl took off her gloves to wash her hands. There was the wedding ring again. She thought; Wedding rings are usually inscribed on the inside. She drew it off and began to examine it.

She found the inscription.

"H. L. V. to D. M. May 19th 1932."

H. L. V. to D. M. The bride-groom would be H. L. V. And he had given the ring to the bride, D. M. and on their wedding day which was May 19, 1932.

She examined the ring wonderingly, turning it in her fingers.

The other girl spoke again. This time her voice held a note of humorous sarcasm.

"You're lucky that way, too!"

"Lucky?"

"Yeh! Got a wedding ring. I'm that way, too." Her husky voice grew more satirical. "Lucky, lucky. How do I get so lucky?"

"You don't sound as if you liked being married." The nameless girl spoke disinterestedly.

"Do I look crazy?"

"Not at all. Tell me—, The nameless girl paused. She wanted to ask if this talkative woman had ever seen her before. But it was hard to find the proper words. Such a question would seem very odd. She fingered her ring thoughtfully. May nineteen-th? She wondered how long ago that was. "Do you know the date

Secretary of State Says Work of World Parley Just Begun

London, July 23, Cordell Hull, American secretary of state, insisting that the work of the world economic conference scarcely had been started, was reliably reported today to be convinced that the recess of the parley must be definitely limited to assure a reconvening.

The secretary's position was claimed to be that an indefinite adjournment after next Thursday would leave such uncertainty over the fate of the world congress that resumption of the work would be jeopardized.

Mr. Hull was understood to have under consideration a recommendation that the recess be for a maximum period of three months, with the steering committee authorized to call the nations together earlier should it decide this is desirable.

Meanwhile Senator Key Pittman's pact between eight silver producing and holding countries seeking to raise the price of the white metal stood out as the greatest tangible achievement of the conference thus far. Some delegates feel that this in itself was adequate justification for the parley having been called.

MRS. J. W. RAMSEY

Mrs. J. W. Ramsey, 52, died at her home here early Wednesday morning, July 19, 1933. Her death was sudden though she had been in bad health for four or five years.

Mrs. Ramsey was born in Evergreen Community, north of McGregor, Sept. 22, 1880. As Miss Clara Price she was married to J. W. Ramsey on April 18, 1909, to this union were born three children, Dillard who is now in the Government Re-forestation Camp in Arizona, Delma and Rachel of Gatesville.

Mrs. Ramsey was converted and joined the Methodist Church in early childhood. She had been in ill health for several years having lost her eyesight four years ago. She was ever cheerful in spite of the fact that she was not privileged to view the beauties of nature and the faces of her friends.

The services were conducted by Rev. W. W. Ward, pastor of the Methodist Church, at the City Cemetery at 10 o'clock Thursday morning.

Mrs. Ramsey leaves to mourn her going, her husband, three children, beside relatives who live at McGregor and Valley Mills.

Mr. and Mrs. John Smith and Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Chestnut accompanied Mrs. Erlene Ellis to Corsicana Sunday. From there Mrs. Ellis went to Tyler for several weeks' visit. Mrs. Ellis taught in the El Paso Schools last year and since their close has been visiting her parents at the State Juvenile Training School.

TANGLED WIVES

today, by any chance," she finally asked.

"Do I know the date? Ask me?"

"I do ask you."

"She asks me. She asks me the date. Ask me now if I can forget it. The answer is no. No, I can't." [She sighed. She was rubbing some blue paste carefully into her eyelid. "Excuse me girlie for inflicting my dismal personal life on you, but you asked me the date. The date is 'der tag.' Get it—der tag!"]

"I'm afraid I don't."

"You wouldn't. It's just one of those things."

"The day—"

"The day I say good-by to all this. The day the big fight starts. And believe me, it's going to be a good old war while it lasts. The day, in words of one syllable, that I go off to prison."

"Prison?"

"Yeh. But I don't mean what you mean. I'm going to be a bird in a gilded cage, dearie, see? But, excuse me, you asked me for the date, didn't you—it's the nineteenth."

"Not May—Not May the nineteenth!"

The talkative girl swung around, and put her hands on her hips. Her expression was a little sarcastic. "Now listen. No kidding! Do you think it's December nineteenth? It's May the nineteenth, Girlie, and—" she went on talking but her audience was no longer listening. She was thinking. This was the nineteenth of May and—her wedding day.

She looked once more into the mirror. Her eyes were stary with excitement. Besides the varnished face of the other girl she looked very young and very beautiful, but she was not thinking of that now. She was thinking that some of the pictures of her jig-saw puzzle just were beginning to fit in. She had been married that day to the man in the cab. She hated him. The shock of marrying him had made her lose her memory, and no wonder.

She was grateful to the strong enclosing walls around her for shielding her from that man. She was grateful to the city for being so big and impersonal that she could lose herself in it. All she needed now was to rest quietly until her memory returned.

Her action in leaving the man had been purely instinctive. But she was glad that she had done it. Still, she wondered, was it as simple as it now seemed? She married a man she hated and then lost her memory because he was so horrible, and then had left him. She was not satisfied. It seemed too easy an explanation. Why had she married him? She would have to find him again sooner or later and tell him that she must divorce him. She could do that at Reno—for this strange chatty girl to whom she had scarcely been listening was talking about Reno.

"If I had the dough, Baby, believe me I'd be on my way to Reno right now."

"It's easy to get a divorce in Reno isn't it?"

"If you have the dough! But that's a big if, Girlie."

"How much does it cost?"

"About a thousand dollars, including the trip and everything, but I know a girl who did it for seven hundred and fifty. She had the door." She leaned over and examined the nameless girl's ring little item to hock," she said.

"I think I'll throw it down the next sewer I come to," said the nameless girl.

The woman grew kindly and fervent. "There's always Reno," she said. She became thoughtful. "If that cheap-skate husband of mine weren't so d—n stingy—Baby there's always Reno, if you have the dough. And you seem to have plenty!"

"You mean I could get a divorce?" said the nameless girl.

"It's easy in Reno—specially for a girl like you with plenty of cash."

The woman's eyes had dropped to the open hand bag on the dressing table. The nameless girl wondered if she could divorce a man whose name she didn't know.

"Reno!" said the girl in the blue coat. "G—d! And if you know what I have got to go through you wouldn't hesitate." She rambled on in a tone that was full of a resentment and self-pity. The nameless girl paid

But the other girl no longer wanted to talk. "Doubt that," she said briefly.

The nameless girl saw a towel rack and a row of washstands in an adjoining room. She rose and went in, leaving hat and purse on the tiny dressing table.

Her feeling of depression had now completely lifted. She was separated from a man she hated. She was in a comfortable hotel. She had plenty of money. She would make up a name, register under it, and try to get a good rest.

She washed her hands in warm water. Then she let ice water chill her wrists and hands, thinking that the shock might restore her memory. A cold shower would be even better, she thought almost happily. She looked thoughtfully in the glass. She was completely alone. Yet somewhere surely she must have friends. Perhaps they were looking for her now. She smiled. She would remember, of course she would remember.

She turned to go into the outer room. The girl was gone.

She went to the small dressing table and picked up her hat and fitted it slowly to her head.

Then she looked for her purse, made the gesture of picking it up, and found that her fingers slid over the smooth surface of the dressing table only. The purse was not there.

It was not on the floor. It was not in the room.

She walked out into the lobby once more. It was evident that the girl had taken it but she was nowhere to be seen.

a friend living out there, and her living expenses didn't cost her anything."

"It doesn't take very long, does it?"

"It takes exactly six weeks. Oh ask me anything about Reno. I know. I've been studying up on it like it was the Bible. You got to get out there and establish a residence, stay there six weeks, then file your suit. . . ."

As she talked the nameless girl was wondering. It was a little fantastic to be thinking about Reno when she did not yet know for certain that she was unhappily married. Could it be possible that the man in the cab was not her husband? Surely in a few moments she would be able to remember about herself, and when she did there would be time enough to make plans.

"So it's actually the nineteenth of May today."

"H—I, yes. There you go again."

The nameless girl slipped her wedding ring slowly back on her finger.

The girl in the blue coat winked. "Not so crazy about it, eh—well, there are a good many like you, Baby. Believe me, there's a lot like you that can't seem to see the charm in the old cottage for two stuff with the roses or what have you around little heed. Again—she noticed the woman's eyes on the bills that were visible in her purse.

Now it occurred to her to count them and find out how much she had. As she did so a silence fell over the small room of which the two were for the moment the only occupants.

There were nine hundred dollars in bills. And something under ten dollars in her coin purse.

She closed her purse, and as she did so, she was aware of a certain tenseness in the atmosphere. She turned her head to stare at the other girl, and she could have sworn that as she did so the woman turned away as if to give the impression that she had not been watching the younger one. Her former friendliness was washed from her face, but there was a watchfulness in the lines of the figure that the nameless girl could not understand. Perhaps the other girl did know her. Perhaps that is why she had spoken. And perhaps the lack of response in the nameless girl had offended her.

So she reasoned, but not in any way connecting the girl's sudden change with the large roll of bills she had shown.

"I've met you some place, haven't I?" she said at last half timidly.

That's why Sinclair PENNSYLVANIA lasts longer in the heat of fast driving

Just why the oldest crudes generally make the finest lubricants is not known—but the millions of years through which oils mellow and filter under the earth does have a definite effect. Sinclair Pennsylvania Motor Oil is made 100% from the oldest and costliest Pennsylvania grade crude—the famous Bradford-Allegany crude that has lain mellowing and filtering in the Pennsylvania field for a hundred million years. Sinclair de-waxes Sinclair Pennsylvania in process of manufacture and frees it from non-lubricating petroleum jelly—a process which requires chilling the oil down to as low as 60° F. below zero. Try it. A single crankcaseful will prove that Sinclair Pennsylvania stands up better and lasts longer than any oil you ever used before.

Pay Dirt at Last

For forty-seven years Robert Hoard, a negro, now sixty-one years old, scratched out of the mountains a scant living for himself and wife and their children. A few weeks ago he left his family in Canon City, Colo., and started toward Westcliffe where, after days of digging and searching around in the rocks, he found real "pay dirt" at last. His find was verified. Old Bob had hit rich gold. His samples assayed $80 a ton and more.

RADIO OPERATOR ACQUIRES LIBERAL EDUCATION IN TRAVELS

Sidney Crowder, who enrolled in our School of Radio from Haskell, Texas, writes us under date of June fifteenth from the Steamship Joseph M. Cudahy, on which he is Chief Radio Operator, as follows:

"This vocation has many advantages. During my past four years of service as Operator, I have gained a liberal education travelling from one part of the world to another, seeing strange people and countries. This would have been financially impossible for me except as a Radio operator. Tiring of foreign travel, I have settled down on this ship which has a coast-wise run from Houston to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. All the time we are in port is spare time and I very often run over to New York and Washington on sight-seeing trips."

Any young man may have the same experience as Mr. Crowder. To travel to the four corners of the world is surely an education within itself.

Most people pay dearly to travel. Not so with the Radio Operator. He travels and gets paid for travelling, with his uniform, stateroom, and board furnished in addition to his salary.

Why not investigate our Radio School by writing and asking for our Radio booklet R-67? It is free.

SCIENCE

OF THE WORLD

ARTIFICIAL LIGHTING

Just because we have learned to build electric lights that have candle power rating into the millions and tiny lamps used in connection with surgery, we need not get it into our heads that we have about attained perfection in the science of artificial lighting. Rays of light have even been made that will cast a shadow against the sun, but we must remember how far the sun is from us. Before going further let's concede that we have in no way begun to rival the sun.

Let us experiment. Before we leave the house let us close up all the windows in one room. Now we shall go out into the bright sunlight and spend a few minutes. When we go back into the house and turn on all the lights in one room, what do we find? To our surprise we find that the lighting is very weak and insufficient, which proves to us conclusively that we still have several steps in artificial lighting to take. Present day lighting is good only in comparison to that used by our forefathers.

We must learn to improve the lighting methods which we have. The first step in home illumination will probably be the glow lamp, which is now being used in advertising signs. Its advantage is that it casts light evenly over the whole of its interior, diminishing the glare. This type of bulb would have no wiring on the inside and would have no filament to burn out and no base to twist off. The life of this bulb would by far exceed the life of the one we now use; less expensive in many respects.

To date only a few colored lights of the glow variety have been made possible and a color suitable for household purposes has not been discovered, which explains the reason for not having them in our homes today. The necessary color will be found when a combination of certain gases are brought about which will give the desired light.

The problem of artificial lighting is being solved gradually and we may expect to see some wonderful inventions in this field during our life time.

ACTING THE CRITIC

It is a strange case indeed, that of Shirley Pellegrin, of Avenal California, age 7. She is possessed with what we might call "mirror vision", because she reads backward and writes backward, but is perfectly normal in every respect. One might think she is cross-eyed, but she is not; Shirley is normal in every respect except her reading and writing direction. The cause of her reversed vision, according to optometrists who have examined her eyes, lies in the optical centers of her brain, or probably in the reversal in the optical nerves leading from the eyeballs to the brain centers. Shirley sees every line of printing or script backward, and to her it is perfectly natural; it's just the way the optical impression "hits her", and to her it isn't backward at all.

How critical we are of those who do not have the same impressions that we have. Just because others do not have the same slant on life that we have had for so long, we usually assume the role of critic and brand them thoughtless or even idiotic. If some people fail to accept our point of view we say that they do not see the thing from the right angle. How easy it is for us to criticize the view of others and think their views are out of line.

Let us remember that that which seems out of reason to us may be "perfect vision" to the other fellow.

HE DEFENDED SPORTSMANSHIP

Jean Borotra is one of the greatest tennis players of all times and a true example of good sportsmanship to the "nth" degree. Borotra, the great French ace, has no sympathy at all for the man or woman who cannot act the good sport; in fact he has a great deal of dislike for that type of person.

We cuff France for her laxity concerning the payment of her war debt to America; we praise England for her heroic and courageous attitude in regard to the new those same two nations have their good and bad characteristics as well. Without meaning to criticize and policy of international peace and economic harmony, but praise either of the two countries, may we point out a little incident which happened recently involving a countryman of France.

Ellsworth Vines, the American Davis Cup number one player, was badly beaten by a member of the British team. As he limped from the court supported by Jean Borotra, some one called out "deflated." Borotra was near enough to give the bystander a vigorous slap; which he did, in behalf of the fallen American player. The son of France did not admire the lack of sportsmanship on the part of the heckler, and Borotra did not fail to demonstrate this fact.

VOTING IS THE THING

The voters of Texas will go to the polls in less than a month from today to vote on four vital issues. The most predominant in the minds of the voters at this time no doubt is prohibition, yet regardless of its importance we must not neglect the importance of the other issues which are to be voted upon and give them the same due consideration. Besides the prohibition amendment, we will find space on the August ballot for a vote either for or against the twenty million dollar relief bond issue; the amendment affecting the administration of city and county governments; and the tax exemption on homesteads in certain counties.

Too much cannot be said urging each citizen of Texas to go to the polls on August 26, and cast a vote on the vital state issues that have been passed back to the individual voters. We cannot over emphasize the importance of voting. Regardless of the personal attitude of the individual concerning the subject to be voted upon, the importance is in voting and not in "taking sides".

When eligible voters fail to cast a vote they are not only denying themselves the privilege of helping to form the principles of our government, but they are setting a poor precedent for others to follow.

A FIND IN HUGH S. JOHNSON

The administrator of the provisions of the National Recovery Act is Hugh S. Johnson and regardless of the fact that he is a strong advocate of the 30-hour a week working plan for the industrial workers he is a thirty-hour-a-day man himself.

Mr. Johnson has been on the job constantly since his appointment to that position by the President and has shown no signs of fatigue to date. To the average layman, the mere idea of the job gives a sickening headache, the program is so large. Administrator Johnson has the spirit of his task at heart and is so intent upon seeing the success of the recovery measure that he has no time to lose wondering how long he can stand the strain.

It makes us wonder just what means President Roosevelt employed in securing the services of such men as Hugh S. Johnson. It is bound to have been a difficult task even locating such capable personages. It seems evident that the President has many virtues and talents and among them is the ability to analyze character and ability in others.

"An Epic of Justice"

By
LEONARD A. BARRETT

The "Divine Comedy" was written by a man who had aured, for many years, a great sorrow in his heart. Dante the great Italian poet, was born in Florence in 1265. He lived in an age of political strife and persecution. When his own native city was betrayed into the hands of her enemies, Dante was banished with the decree that should he ever return he would be burned alive. During the period of his exile much of his literary work was accomplished, the most noteworthy being "The Divine Comedy." Two important experiences caused him to write the book, his great love for one woman and his great rebellion against the social injustice of his age. "The Divine Comedy" has been called, "An Epic of Justice." Dante interpreted Justice as a nature's supreme law, the workings of which law are evidenced in every one's daily experience.

The past three years through which we have passed cannot be characterized as one of political persecution and yet of these three years, evidencing the great depression known in our history, we naturally inquire, will any good come out of it? Have we learned any lessons that will guide us in the future? Will our experience be of a memory, and our attitude toward life's values be just the same as before, as soon as the recovery period has been completed? Questions like these give one cause for serious concern.

The adjustment of unstable banking laws; the discovery of loop holes making possible evasion of taxes, the efforts to stabilize prices at a just scale of the recovery period. The most important question still remains unanswered: Has national character suffered sufficiently to have enabled it to make any contribution of permanent value to literature, art or even the permanent security of democracy? Great art, like great literature, was created during the depression periods of history. Let us hope that some contribution will be made to the cultural development of our country that will strengthen and fortify our national character.

Fish Yarn in Paper Means of One Friend Locating Old Crony

One evening a year ago James McKim, 69, of 734 Clint Street picked up a copy of the Star Telegram and read that, in Osceola, Mo., a man had caught a 40 pound catfish.

Now Osceola was the boyhood home of McKim and he wrote the fisherman that catfish weighing 50 or 60 pounds were not unusual in his day. He mentioned two childhood friends, Bob Hicks and Bert Conant.

Apparently the fisherman went to the local newspaper with the letter.

McKim Monday received a letter from Hicks in Portland, Ore. It was the first word McKim had had of his old friend since 1879 when, at the age of 15, McKim left Osceola.

"It's funny," said McKim Tuesday, "but the last thing I remember about Hicks is that I had a fight with him in school and the teacher made us go to our desks. I don't remember now, even, what the fight was about."

After leaving Osceola, McKim lived in a number of places, finally moving to Fort Worth a number of years ago. He recalled another strange incident indirectly through reading the Star Telegram.

"I read, some time ago, about a woman who had told at some old settlers reunion of how wild pigeons suddenly disappeared from this country."

"That reminds me of an experience of my own. After I left Osceola I went to work on a farm eight miles east of Parsons, Kansas. I was plowing in a field one day when a flight of wild pigeons passed overhead. The flight was fully half a mile wide and it took five hours for the pigeons to pass the farm. I'm sure that there were millions of birds in that flight."

"Well, sir, after the wild pigeons disappeared completely, I don't remember ever seeing a wild pigeon again. I wonder if they didn't disappear from this part of the country about the same time.—Fort Worth Star Telegram.

Opportunity Is Knocking

Property owners who have been planning to repair old structures or build new ones better get busy unless they wish to pay heavily for delay. With better crop prices, heavy public expenditures for bridges, roads, public buildings, etc., it is not difficult to imagine rapid improvement in the employment situation and commodity price levels.

Cement, lumber, paint, structural steel, electrical equipment and all manner of building supplies will probably never again, in a generation at least, be at the bargain counter prices we have been witnessing. Today property owners can improve an old building or build a new one, from concrete foundation to fire-resisting roof, at record low prices. There is abundant labor, both skilled and unskilled. It seems certain that the foregoing combination of circumstances is doomed.

The investor in construction activity today not only gets double return for his money, but helps to start normal employment in the wage and price structures, which will rebound in benefits to himself in better business and rental values.

Remember that investment and employment are cheaper and better than charity.—Industrial News Review.

Who Is the Santa Claus?

A lot of people have come to look upon Uncle Sam as a financial Santa Claus.

They forget that every dollar that he gives to his children has to first be taken away from those children in the form of taxes. It is just beginning to percolate into the people's minds that the $3,300,000,000 public works program is going to have to be taken from them, the taxpayers.

Every community is clamoring or a share of this fund and although the government gives 60 per cent outright of the sum allotted to projects which it approves, the remaining 70 per cent must be returned by additional tax levies in every political sub-division obtaining a loan. The 30 per cent given outright must be dug up by all the people of the favored section to which it is given. The public works program which has been passed as an emergency measure in time of stress, must of necessity increase the burden of the taxpayers, unless ways and means are found to cut government costs in some manner, sufficiently to offset this new expense.

It is well for the people to begin to understand that each citizen is a separate Santa Claus, who pays for every "gift" presented to him by his government.—Industrial News Review.

POTPOURRI

The Toad

Unlike the frog, the toad has no teeth. Even so, he eats greedily of insects and consequently is a valuable farm ally. He drinks by absorbing water through the skin rather than through the mouth. They sleep in the ground during the winter and then migrate to the water to lay their eggs.

IS IT NOT BETTER TO TALK ABOUT DYING COST WHILE YOU LIVE THAN FOR OTHERS TO DISCUSS CASKET PRICES AND DEBTS AFTER YOU DIE? THINK IT OVER!

PRAYERS AND PREPARATION

WE CANNOT deny the fact that Life Insurance and Funerals are closely associated. Funerals call for Prayers. Prayers are often necessary due to the lack of Preparation, all of which leads us to believe that a man should have a "voice" at his funeral.

Suppose a man should preach his own funeral service while living; and have his thoughts and ideas recorded on a phonograph record! No doubt he would mention his life insurance policy, for he would want his friends and neighbors to know that he was not being buried on borrowed money. He would probably tell his mourners not to be concerned about food and shelter for his loved ones for he had provided for them with insurance. He might remind his listeners that a good citizen should not only meet his obligations while living, but should provide for their payment after he was gone by means of insurance.

Finally, is it not reasonable to suppose that such a man, who was true to his loved ones and his fellow man, would also make preparation for the life to come, for Eternity; that he would leave this life with a clear conscience and enter the hereafter with a confident soul? Think it over!

Frigidaire Plans to Use Additional Space With 500 Newspapers

Continuing its announced plans for using a liberal amount of printer's ink to spur on the wave of increased business that has been manifest for the past two months, Frigidaire will enlarge its selling plans still more during July and August, it was revealed today by I. O. Scott local representative for Frigidaire, subsidiary of General Motors.

With an unprecedented demand for electric refrigeration sweeping the entire country, Mr. I. O. Scott said, additional newspaper space reaching 100,000,000 readers will be used. Altogether 500 newspapers with a total circulation exceeding 30,000,000 will be used, it was stated on authority of the company's main office at Dayton, Ohio.

"The attitude of the country in general," said Mr. Scott, "towards business has changed so decidedly for the better that it has been found necessary to revise plans and additional advertising space has been decided upon. And following its policy adopted this year, Frigidaire will center its efforts on newspapers in getting its message to the people."

Analysis of the buying trend in refrigeration, Mr. Scott pointed out, "shows a definite trend toward a quality product at a low price. For this reason, he said, Frigidaire has developed a new principle of refrigeration permitting use of a compressor powered by an electric motor of only one twentieth horse power, a motor approximately half the size of the smallest heretofore used. Yet this motor supplies extra-ordinary refrigeration at a cost of operation of one ordinary light bulb.

According to Mr. Joe Hanna, local P. T. A. president, eminent speakers who are well able to handle the various topics have been invited to address the body. Mr. Hanna was very enthusiastic about the outlined program, saying "It will be well worth every minute time for it is something helpful, uplifting and good."

Miss Beatrice Lott, of the State Health Department at Austin, was in Gatesville last Wednesday making investigations as to a county-wide health program for the Fall. Last year Miss Lott administered the diphtheria antitoxin serum to some 3,500 school children in Coryell County.

According to Judge Brown, this county, since that time has not lost a single child due to diphtheria, whereas heretofore, several have died each year from this microbial disease. A report from the state health board stated that the program carried on in Coryell County was the best of its kind administered throughout the entire state; thanks to the splendid work of Miss Lott.

NEW FORM OF SPORT CHOSEN BY LOCAL FANS

A great deal of interest is being manifest here in the game of soft ball, a form of baseball, here.

There have been two clubs organized to date, the "Methodists", under the management of Mr. Bird Hair and the "Baptists" under the management of Mr. Luke Walker.

These two teams met in a tilt last Monday afternoon at the Fair Park. The Methodists won by a score of 10 to 6. Luke Walker said, however, that the Baptists were going to win the two other games scheduled for this week.

Much interest is being shown in the games and plans are to make an effort to light the court for night games. According to Luke Walker this lighting would not cost so very much. The fact that many of the players are forced to work in the late afternoon makes night playing almost a necessity. In the event these night games are made possible a source of entertainment will be made possible for baseball fans.

These proposed flood lights would fill a need for the Fair Association. In the past the night programs have been inadequately lighted. These lights, when and if installed, will furnish ample light for future night exhibitions at the Fair.
