Central Texas Pioneer Resident of McGregor Succumbs at His Home

McGREGOR, March 4—S. Amsler, 92, pioneer Texan and one of the builders of McGregor, died here at his home Sunday morning.

He quit business to enlist in the Confederate army during the Civil War and was a member of company G, Green's cavalry brigade. Otto Mackensen, who died at the age of 104, recently, was Amsler's last comrade in that dashing group to survive. Amsler was the last of the brigade who rode over Texas and New Mexico to the strains of "if you wanta have a good time, jine the cavalry."

Funeral services were held from the Methodist church Monday at 2:30 p. m.—Temple Telegram

ALEX L. FREEMAN

Alex L. Freeman, a respected citizen of this county, aged 64, died at the family home near Ireland last Friday afternoon. Mr. Freeman was born in Tennessee August 11, 1870, and came to Texas with his parents at the age of two years.

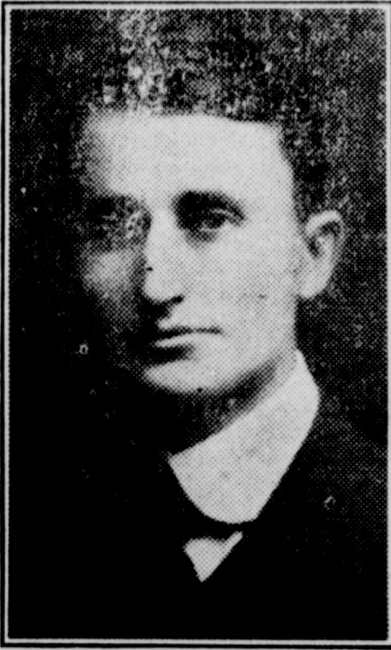

In 1897 he was married to Miss Winnie Drew and to this union were born seven children, all of whom, including the widow, survive the deceased, and are living at the following places: Mrs. Luther Ham Texon, Louis W. Freman Kosse, Lillian Freeman, Alvin Freeman, Way Freeman, Miss Verda Freeman, Ireland, and Mrs. Theron Bickley Coleman, all these children were present at the funeral.

Mr. Freeman had been in delicate health for some time but his death came rather suddenly. Heart trouble was the direct cause of death. He was buried at Evergreen Cemetery, near Purmela Saturday afternoon, services were conducted by the Rev. Steve Melton of Hamilton, who paid a glowing tribute to the life that the deceased had lived.

To know Alex Freeman was to like him. He was a man of deep and abiding convictions, true and loyal to his friends and fair and just to his enemies, if he had any. He believed in treating his fellow man as he would like to be treated and was scrupulously honest in his dealings with his fellows, taking the life of the babe born in Bethlehem as his guide to follow and emulate.

Morning Speaker

DR. J. M. DAWSON

Pastor of the First Baptist Church of Waco and one of the State Baptist leaders, who will bring one of the major addresses of the Convention this morning at 11:20 on the subject "The Baptist Message of the Hour."

District 14, SS & BTS Convention Opened Mon. With Large Attendance

The annual session of the Fourteenth District of the State B. T. S. and Sunday School Convention opened here at 2 P. M. yesterday with more than 25 out of town visitors already registered. Almost every one of the nine counties was well represented despite the fact that Coryell is the far western county of the district.

Rev. C. A. Morton, pastor of the local church opened the convention with words of welcome to which Dr. Pool of Baylor University at Waco responded. Rev. E. T. Miller of Corsicana was in the chair in the absence of Rev. M. E. Ramey of Itasca. Rev. W. B. Pierce of Waco brought a splendid address concerning the State Baptist publication. Rev. Alvin Swindell of Hillsboro closed the afternoon session with a masterful address outlining the relation of the teaching and training services of the church to the denomination program.

Last night's session was marked by three splendid addresses. The first was by Rev. M. O. Cheek of Hubbard and formerly missionary to China. The others were by Dr. T. C. Gardner, state secretary of Baptist Young People and Dr. Frank Tripp of St. Joseph Missouri who brought a message from the Southern Baptist Convention.

Bud Russell Stops in City on 50th Birthday And 25th Anniversary

Bud Russell, his wagon, his knife and all of the trimmings were here last Saturday for the purpose of transferring prisoners from the local Bastille to their new home in the state Penitentiary.

Two striking things about this trip are the facts that Saturday was Bud's 50th birthday and the 25th anniversary of his accepting the position of Prison transfer agent. During his twenty-five years at the job of hauling prisoners only one has ever gotten away and Russell recaptured that one himself.

HOWARD SMART OF IZORO ACCIDENTALLY SHOT

Howard John, 14-year old son of Mr. and Mrs. T. S. Smart, of Izoro was accidentally shot Saturday while out playing with two of his boy companions. The boys with him were Norman Allen Smith and Alvin Dumas who helped him to get home. He was brought to Lampasas where on examination it was advised by the physician that he be carried to Temple. Mr. Smart left Temple Tuesday morning and Howard was getting along fine.

The boys had a .22 caliber pistol and were practicing shooting on the mountain near home when in some way the pistol was accidentally discharged, the bullet striking Howard in the right side, going through the top of the lung and lodging in the back. It was not removed by the physicians in Temple.—Lampasas Record.

Will Powell who has been critically ill at his home on East Leon Street for the past few days was reported to be greatly improved late Monday evening.

ON TEXAS FARMS

By W. H. Darrow
Extension Service Editor
A. & M. College

A total of 1019 wheat benefit checks, amounting to 97 per cent of all such checks due on the first payment, have been received by Carson county farmers. The checks received total $257,718.46.

To use land retired from cotton advantage, 2000 beery vines have been supplied 30 home demonstration club women in Matagorda county communities. These women are to demonstrate how fruit may be produced at home.

Carthage—Panola county has bought four terracing graders to loan farmers to terrace land and plans to buy 36 more as they are needed. Thousands of acres are being terraced, much of it by a terracing crew of 36 men trained by R. M. Hooker, county agent.

Canadian—A crew of 6 to 10 CWA workers has been distributing poison grain to prairie dogs in Hartley county in cooperation with the U. S. Biological Survey and the county agent. The work is done at no cost to land owners. The object is to completely exterminate this pest from the county.

Goliad—Thirty-two hens that couldn't be trained to roost in a new house their owner built them, and who refused to come around to eat mash, furnish the horrible example poultrymen love to point out when speaking of the value of good housing and feeding. These headstrong hens laid about six eggs per week between them on the farm of R.J. Kornfuehrer in Goliad county. This is about a 3 per cent laying rate. Their sisters, comfortably housed and well fed, laid at 55 per cent rate during the same time.

Another lesson from this demonstration in cooperation with the county agent is that young juicy alfalfa from a nearby field is eaten ravenously by the hens and helps keep up production and keep down worms.

Paris—Besides supplying her family and neighbors with fresh vegetables all the year and more than filling her canning budget by canning 712 quarts for her family of four Mrs. E. C. Hindman of Howland Home Demonstration Club has helped others to can and canned in her own kitchen 1115 quarts for other people according to the report of Miss Beulah Blackwell, county home demonstration agent of Lamar county. She has also built a storage pantry for her own use. People receiving help from Mrs. Hindman are neighbors, Red Coss, C. W. A. workers, orphans and a negro club at Reed's Prairie. This club is sponsored by Mrs. Hindman and Mrs. Claude Duncan. The Reed's Prairie Club has canned 2,784 containers of food.

Cameron—A proof that the cotton reduction program has really done more than reduce the cotton crop was brought to light at a recent meeting of the Marlow 4-H Girls' Club meeting when a request came from 11 4-H club boys to meet with the girls for the hotbed demonstration, Miss Bertha Fae Strange, home demonstration agent of Milam county reports. The boys proved to be good helpers and since there is no women's home demonstration club in the community, each of the boys plans to assume the responsibility of making mother's hotbed, and helping sister to make her bed. Instructions in making and putting out grape cuttings and fertilizing berry vines were given to both boys and girls. The assignments for each boy is to root 12 grape vines (an exchange of cuttings was planned). Miss McKimm Massey, agriculture teacher, is sponsoring the organization and checks with the club on their yard and garden demonstration.

Brownwood—Four hundred eighty-nine cans of sliced and ground turkey and chicken have been prepared for sale by Miss Frances Miller, member of a home demonstration club in Brown county. Her poultry on foot were so low. Miss Miller standardized her canned chicken and turkey in March 1933, according to Extension Service methods. In addition to her own fowls, she bought 12 of her neighbor's turkeys for $19.35. The 12 weighed 212 pounds on foot and from them she canned 192 containers which she sold for $32.33. She has sold to date $59.69 worth of these canned products and still has nearly 200 cans ready for market.

Comanche—One acre of 25 pecan trees planted 23 years ago has averaged $113 per acre per year for the last six years on the farm of C. F. Denny in Comanche county. The yield last year was 550 pounds, the lowest in the six years. Mr. Denny keeps a record of a number of individual trees in this acre. A Texas prolific tree heads the list with production last year of 116 pounds, followed by a Halbert farm seedling that produced 76 pounds. On 1016 other trees on this 100-acre farm which has more than 90 acres in pecans, the following records are reported by J. A. Barton, county agent; an average of 4 1/2 pounds per tree was made on 99 Texas Prolific and 587 Halbert trees, and 330 Burkett trees averaged 5.8 pounds per tree.

The Dallas Milk Co. and Mistletoe Creameries, Inc., Dallas, will hereafter be operated under the name of Borden's. The plants have been owned by Borden's for the past two years, but continued to operate separately. Over $90,000 has been spent in new equipment and remodeling.

GATESVILLE NEEDS INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT

Gatesville is situated in the heart of one of the most diversified sections in the United States. Natural resources abound on every hand. Possibilities for development are apparent at every mental turn and yet very little has been done to take advantage of these vast possibilities in an industrial way. Gatesville cannot advance much further without some kind of industrial development to provide a pay roll. A few of the possibilities which come to mind are worth mentioning.

The blackland and sandyland reaches of Coryell County now produce fifty-four varieties of vegetation which are preservable in cans. Any one of the many products can be raised in the county in quantities which would justify a cannery in Coryell County. Is it not, then, practical for Coryell to have a cannery?

The hills of Coryell County abound in clay which far surpasses that in counties where there is a brick kiln or a pottery and yet Coryell County has never had an attempt at developing this vast resource. Why could it not be?

These same hills are filled with limestone in the crude. Lime is used in every building. Lime must be manufactured. Why can't Coryell County furnish a portion of the lime to America?

Coryell County is situated in the center of one of the largest poultry producing territories in Texas. Which fact suggests that it would not be amiss for Coryell County to pack its own poultry and have its own egg cracker.

Livestock abounds in central Texas. Is there any reason why we should not have a packing plant? Dairying is a flourishing industry in this section. Is there any law against our having a cheese plant?

Corn, oats and wheat are raised in fine quality and ample quantity for another industry. Twenty-seven million housewives serve cereals at least once a day. These cereals are made from the mentioned grains. They have to be made somewhere. Why should they not be made where the raw products are raised and where the Leon River provides plenty of water for power?

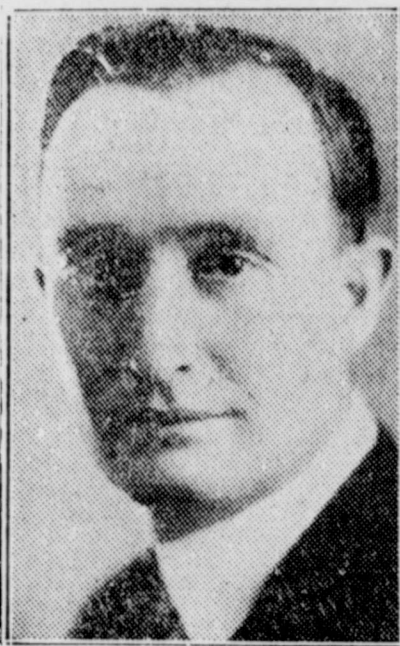

We may rest assured that outside capital is never going to build Coryell County. Gatesville doesn't offer the required railroad facilities. Coryell Must Care For Her Own Development.

THE ARMY FLIERS

In his radio speech Tuesday night, Major General Foulois, chief of the Army Air Corps, said what doubtless many army men have wanted to say before. It is that the "sympathy" which has been coming in a flood from certain sources on account of the turning over to the Army of the job of flying the mails is not only misdirected but a gratuitous reflection upon the Army's aviation and upon the courage and skill of the Army's flying personnel. The air corps wants no sympathy, and needs none, General Foulois points out. In the matter of flying, the men who wear the uniform do not ask odds of any pilot.

Americans of all classes have realized this, of course. If indeed our military fliers were such as need to be protected from the dangers of flying—young gentlemen who merely play at the game of piloting airplanes—then the national defense would be in a bad way. General Foulois, himself a flier, calls things by their right names. The Nation has no use of an army which holds back and wishes to be protected from danger, and it has not now, never has had, and never will have an army that does it.—Fort Worth Star Telegram

They meet the health requirements for Grade A dairy farms. The dairy association finances its members for materials and the C. W. A. supplies the labor.

WELL, as we scan the headlines of the big dailies, we continue to see the name of Austria, the present hot-bed of Europe. The Hapsburgs, who were the former rulers of Austria, and the Nazis, have kept gossip buzzing in Vienna during the last few days as to what the future status of the government will be. Chancellor Dollfuss and the Heimwehr don't seem to know what to do with their recent victory over the Socialists. They realize that they are in possession of a bankrupt country, and that allied against them are the Nazis and the Socialists, who have been flocking to the Nazi colors in considerable numbers since their defeat by government troops and police.

If the forces aligned against them prove to be too strong, they will probably reestablish the monarchy, toward which the Austrian people continue to hold a feeling of loyalty. The Hapsburgs, allied with Dollfuss and the Italian-backed Heimwehr, could probably "put it over" in Austria, provided the economic situation clarifies within the next year or two.

As a last alternative, Dollfuss may have to turn to the Nazis. Rumor has already spread in Vienna that friendly gestures have been made toward the Nazis by the government, and that a complete conciliation made be effected soon. If such should be the case, the government of Dollfuss is already doomed. If the Nazis are allowed a single wedge in the government, meaning of course a few cabinet members, they will soon after be in complete possession of all authority in Vienna. Events during the last year in Germany will testify to that.

Hitler does not want to use force in bringing Austria within the folds of the Reich. He believes Austria will come to him. General Goering, the German Chancellor's right hand, has urged that the Austrian Legion, camped in southern Germany and made up of exiled Austrian Nazis, be allowed to march on Vienna and take possession of the country. Hitler realizes that this would provoke a European crisis, and this he desires to avert at the present. Czechoslovakia has made known during the last few days that it will fight to maintain Austrian independence. A glance at the map will show the necessity of such a move on the part of the Czechs.

Meanwhile, let us keep our eye on Austria. Really, no one wants another European war, which might lead to a world conflagration. Little Austria holds, at the present, the key to European peace and tranquility or European war and bloodshed. Let us not forget this.

THE FORMER ruling house of China returns to its ancient home-Manchuria. Near the middle of the eighteenth century the Manchurians or Manchus entered China as peaceful conquerors, and established the Ting dynasty which ruled for three centuries. Henry Pu-yi, crowned Emperor of the Japanese puppet state Manchukuo March 1, is the last of this great dynasty which emerged from the wilds of Manchuria to become the rulers of a great nation which at one time stretched from the Caspian Sea to the Pacific Ocean. He was placed upon the dragon throne when he was four years of age, but was driven out of the country in 1911, only to return for a reign of four days in 1912.

He sought refuge in the Japanese consular office in Tientsin, and since that time has lived in luxury on Japanese money. Please don't get the impression readers that the Japs are so kind—they had a purpose in caring for the little ruler. They were merely waiting for a present situation to arise, whereby they could use the royal boy to a real advantage.

So, when the Japanese statesmen decided that they could not annex Manchuria or Manchukuo outright, they decided to establish a puppet empire with little Pu-yi puppet ruler. So, back in 1931, he was made regent or president of the country, and now to use his own words, by "the will of Heaven" he is made Emperor of the Manchus.

Of course, Henry won't have any thing to do but sign on the dotted line, but he is being well paid for his so-called duties. The Japanese announce that he will be paid the mild salary of $2,500,000 a year—not so much, so the Japanese say, for the heavy duties and burdens that will be heaped upon his young shoulders. All we can say is that Pu-yi is getting himself fixed up to be shot (a diplomat would say assassinated) and Japan is making a Far-Eastern "Austria."

"I've told you that I only knew Mr. Franklin very casually. Webster Spears and I are good friends, nothing more. I believe I was more than frank," declared the girl angrily, "when I told you that I am in love with Rylie Carmody. After that, the rest of your questions are in very poor taste, to say the least."

"And that's all you have to say?"

"There's nothing else left to say," retorted the girl. "Now may I go?"

Kilday scowled. He was evidently at a loss as to how to proceed further with his questioning. "All right," he declared reluctantly, "you may go, but," he repeated the instructions he had previously given

Webster Spears about remaining within reach. "We'll probably want another talk with you, later," he added.

The minute the girl had left, an assistant announced the arrival of Daniel Bullis. The sergeant's surprise was apparent as he looked up at the politician whose bulk filled the doorway.

"Come in, Mr. Bullis. What can I do for you this morning?"

Bullis smiled with his lips, while his eyes darted inquisitively about the room. "You sent a man for my finger-prints," he declared. "Why?"

"Finger-prints?" Kilday affected not to understand.

The politician eased himself into a chair which creaked under his weight. "Oh, your man didn't ink my fingers. But he was very anxious that I take a cigarette from one of those polished cases of yours. I've heard of them before." He studied the detective thoughtfully. "I don't smoke cigarettes, Sergeant," he added. As though to emphasize his point he bit the end from a fat black cigar.

"I wouldn't be surprised but what I'd left several finger prints in the study of that church, Sergeant," Bullis went on evenly. His pale eyes had come to a focus on Kilday

"I Want to Know What There Was Between You and Jim Franklin?"

but there was no way of reading the expression behind that gaze. "It would be odd if I hadn't. I was there, you know. I don't make any bones about that."

Again he paused. He gave the impression of choosing each word deliberately. Peter found himself weighing them for any hidden significance not at first apparent, but could find none. Evidently it was only the man's manner.

"It's funny," Bullis rumbled on, "we've both been around this town a long time, but we'd never met before. Of course, I had heard about you, Sergeant, from time to time."

The sergeant smiled. "I'd heard a great deal about you, too, Mr. Bullis."

The politician nodded. "I guess—you have," he said. "Most people do. And you'll hear more of me. I intend to hang around a good while longer."

It sounded like a challenge. Peter saw the sergeant stiffen.

"Now about those finger-prints," Bullis' voice had again lapsed into a monotone. "You know I was there. What do you expect them to prove?"

"Possibly nothing," Kilday declared. "It's a means of identifying every one there. Often finger-prints provide us with a means of elimination. By identifying those persons we know to be innocent, we have left only those of the person who is guilty. The simple fact that there are finger-prints of an individual in that room doesn't convict that person." The officer faced the politician squarely. "Not that I'm making any promises, you understand."

Bullis nodded silently. "Above those finger-prints," the detective continued. "You say my man didn't get them?"

"I don't smoke cigarettes," Bullis repeated.

The sergeant extracted a cigarette case from a drawer of his desk. "As I've explained, it's largely a matter of form, but I'll need samples of yours, Mr. Bullis."

The politician made no move to take the case. "I don't like finger-

Alice Brady Together With Miss O'Sullivan
Share Honors in Show

A drama that packs emotional punches into every scene is offered in "Stage Mother," which features Alice Brady in a leading role. The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production opened Sunday at the Palace Theatre.

The picture, filmed from an original story by Bradford Ropes, author of "42nd Street," is a vivid presentation of the heart-breaking ambition that causes "stage mothers" to drive their children to success in the theatre. Skillfully blended into the drama are many light touches of sparkling comedy.

In the role of the ambitious mother, Alice Brady scores another personal triumph that is even more notable than her portrayal in "When Ladies Meet." She is as adept at winning tears as she is in throwing an audience into convulsions of laughter. Her dramatic power reaches its greatest height in a scene where she is forced to leave her child with an austere family of relatives. This pathos is quickly followed by comedy scenes causing an uproar of laughter.

Maureen O'Sullivan is given the best opportunity of her screen career as the daughter who is buffeted about her mother's ambition. She is delicately charming when she makes her debut as a young dancer and shows a grace and poise that marks her as one of the most able young actresses on the screen. In early sequences she wears pigtails and short skirts, creating a perfect illusion of childhood.

Franchot Tone Helps

Franchot Tone scores as Miss O'Sullivan's youthful lover. He shows the same powerful charm that made him outstanding in "Today We Live," "The Stranger's Return" and "Midnight Mary." Phillips Holmes attempts a mature role as Lord Aylesworth, titled Englishman who tries to win Miss O'Sullivan after she has gained fame on the stage. He is polished and suave in his handling of the role and provides another problem to the romantic difficulties of the "stage mother" victim.

prints," he said. "They're too-permanent. I've already told you I was there."

"Did you have a revolver, Mr. Bullis?"

The politician's eyes betrayed a flicker of interest. "No."

"Did you see a revolver in that study, or handle one?"

"No."

"Well, I have to identify a thumb-print on a revolver. You've nothing to worry about, apparently. Besides," he added smilingly, "this isn't a permanent record. These specimens can be destroyed, after we compare them."

Bullis still hesitated, then, taking the cigarette case, he pressed his fingers against it deliberately. "I'll depend on you, Sergeant," he said. "I'll confess I don't like the idea."

That was all. With only a nod to Peter, he lumbered from the room.

The sergeant puffed meditatively after Bullis' departure. "What do you suppose was on his mind? There's something worrying him, Peter. He didn't seem worried when I mentioned the revolver. He knows we couldn't have anything else on him, but he's bothered. Can you figure it out?"

"It may be just as he says," the novelist pointed out, "a natural aversion to being finger-printed. Remember, if you can judge the man by his reputation, he's had a great deal to do with the underworld. That would explain such an aversion."

With the aid of Kilday's polished cigarette cases, the finger-prints of most of those under suspicion had already been collected. The sergeant himself had obtained those of Choo Choo Train, Callis Shipley and Daniel Bullis. The men who had been dispatched for the others had returned by now, and the work of attempting to identify the five sets of prints found in the study, together with the thumb mark on the revolver, had begun.

In the Bertillon laboratory, each print had been photographed after careful preparation. Then the work of matching began, each whorl and line of a print serving as a guide to the identity of the person making it. On a flat desk in the center of a room whose walls were lined with pictures of criminals whose identity had been established in this very way, lay a number of square white cards.

In a second orderly pile were the negatives of specimens collected by the detectives, from the suspects. A clerk armed with a reading-glass was attempting to match the prints in the two piles.

"One set has already been matched," declared the sergeant. He handed Peter two cards, clipped together, and pointed out the means by which the specimens had been identified. "Nick Royce," said the sergeant. He read the label attached to the card. "Finger-prints found on the telephone and on surface of desk. 'H'm. Seems to bear out his story, doesn't it?"

"So far, at least," agreed Peter.

The officer indicated a vacant chair for the novelist and drew one up for himself. "What luck are you having with the one on the gun?" he inquired of his assistant. "That's the most important one."

Silently the man handed him another clip of cards. Kilday inspected them earnestly, and then passed them on to Peter.

"The thumb-print matches these prints found in the study," he said. "Now we have only to find which one of our suspects left these prints."

Reaching among the specimens, he selected those of Webster Spears. He made no attempt to conceal his eagerness as he compared these with the print on the revolver, but after only a moment he looked up, frowning.

"Not Spears," he said.

He next tried specimens of Rylie Carmody's finger-prints, with the same disappointing result. He slammed the cards impatiently upon the desk. "What do you think of that, Peter? If neither of them is gully, what was the girl trying to protect them for? Unless," a light dawned on his face, "h'm! Perhaps it was herself she was protecting."

But Callis Shipley's prints did not match the one on the gun, either.

The work progressed with slow care. Neither Callis Shipley's nor Choo Choo Train's prints could be identified with any of those found in the study. This disappointed the officer. He stared at one of the cards in perplexity. "I'd have sworn that these were a woman's prints," he said. "Small and slender. Of course, they might belong to a boy or a small man." His tone was doubtful.

Nor did they find any prints which corresponded with those of Rylie Carmody and his father. Apparently neither had left any marks in the study.

"Odd," said Peter.

Kilday raised his eyebrows.

"I mean that I'm more suspicious when a man leaves no finger-prints," the novelist explained. "I have always felt that the gully man, or the man who knew that a crime had been or would be committed, took precautions against leaving finger-prints which might later identify him. The person who scatters finger-prints about either has a clear conscience or is very foolish. I don't think we are dealing with the latter class here."

"Then how do you explain the print on the gun?" demanded Kilday.

"That's what I asked you a bit ago. I can't explain it. I'm not even trying to, yet."

The work went patiently on. None of the other prints would match. Of all those found in the room, only those of Doctor Abernathy, Nick Royce and Dan Bullis matched. As for the others, Ambrose Carmody and his son, Rylie; Choo Choo Train and Callis Shipley had none of them left prints. Of the two unidentified sets, one were those Kilday had been so sure were made by a woman.

The thumb-print on the gun had been identified with prints found in the room, but not with those of any of these persons under suspicion.
