4TH of JULY

1776—1937

One hundred sixty-one years ago, something happened. A young fellow left his mama, and stepped out on his own. This young fellow was no other than your Uncle Sam.

Mama Britain, besides wanting him to be a "tea hound" wanted him to pay her too dearly by using a method known as "taxing." Sammy got his fur ruffled up and promptly told her where to head in, and, since then, has found it cost plenty to live with the Taxation he is now using, not to mention the "tea."

The "tax" in 1937 will, in traffic toll, and other accidents, including injured hands by fireworks (everywhere but in the South), drownings, and a number of others.

"The Fourth" is a signal for celebrations in every part of the country, and the going and coming to and from these celebrations takes the principal toll in lives of the celebrants, any holiday or week-day take their quotas, but it usually remains for the grand and glorious Fourth to show them all up.

We're just hoping we'll see you, and all together in one piece, after the fourth, and that you have a real "Fourth" celebration.

WORLD COMMENT

Joe Burns

The real issue at stake in the seven state steel strike is likely to be obscured under the avalanche of reports of conflict and violence in the battle area. The violence occurring around the beleaguered plants of the four independent steel plants which have refused to sign written contracts with John Lewis' C.I.O. is foremost in the minds of the people. This condition can only be alleviated when the basic issue is settled: that is, are the rights of labor to be protected by a responsible union recognized by industry as the representative bargaining agency of labor.

The agreements of Republic, Inland Steel, Youngstown Sheet and Tube and Bethlehem Steel against signing a written agreement with the Committee of Industrial Organization are that the union would be so strengthened by a contract that it would promptly demand the closed shop and the check-off. The closed shop permits only the members of the union to work. Under the checkoff system the employe's union dues are taken from his pay envelope by the employer and turned over to the union.

It is the further contention of Mr. Tom Girdler of Republic Steel and the other recalcitrants of the steel industry that the C.I.O. does not abide by its contracts. Citing General Motors as an example, they point out that following the signing of a contract between this corporation and the C.I.O. 200 sporadic and illegal strikes were held in violation of the written agreement signed between the two contractual parties.

Mr. Girdler's statements are true without a doubt. The rapid growth of Mr. Lewis' labor movement has left much if his organization without responsible and well-trained leaders. Such regrettable incidents as the illegal strikes in General Motors plants were and are inevitable under the current setup in the Committee for Industrial Organization.

But this much can be said about the stand of Mr. Girdler and his friends in refusing to "recognize" John L. Lewis. Mr. Lewis, controlling as he does 3,000,000-odd American workers, cannot be ignored as a factor in labor because of his methods and the actions of some of his subordinates. As things look now, Mr. Lewis is here to stay and nothing can be gained by ignoring him.

In my opinion, the only wise and logical course for the independents to pursue is that previously taken by the U. S. Steel and 139 other steel companies. That is to sign an agreement with Mr. Lewis and his C.I.O. and then demand in the courts of the land, if necessary, that the contract be respected.

If Mr. Lewis assumes the responsibility of representing the workers of a concern or industry, he must be made to fulfill his agreements.

Mr. Girdler and his friends are apparently working upon the assumption that a weak union is the best union. Mr. Taylor of United States Steel recognized early that the best basis for peace in steel is a strong, unified union. Mr. Taylor of United States Steel recognized early that the best basis for steel is a strong, unified union which accepts its responsibilities and abides by its agreements.

Because of the past record of the C.I.O. the steel independents would be thoroughly justified in

First National Bank Building

This week-end the Jefferson Islands Club is playing host to all Democratic members of Congress—in both House and Senate at a series of "stag" parties, the first of which I attended yesterday. Another group is in attendance today and still a third group goes down Sunday. The President of the United States is guest of honor at each of these parties. He and most of the cabinet and the heads of the independent offices, such as Harry Hopkins of the W.P.A., Dr. Will Alexander of Resettlement, etc., will stay overnight with the leaders of the House and Senate and will be present all three days. Invitations were issued under the name of Senator Joe Robinson, who is President of the Club. The meetings are supposed to have great political significance, but I must confess that I was not privileged to observe and "heavy conferences."

As I saw it, the party was similar to one of our Texas barbecues. I drove over to Annapolis with four other Texas Congressmen. There we were required to show our invitations and to be identified by the doorkeeper of the House, and then to sign a register. Then we were allowed to go aboard a boat. There were about five or six boats, each carrying about 25 passengers. It is 18 miles from Annapolis to Jefferson Island. We had a perfect day. The Bay (Chesapeake) was absolutely smooth and the sun bright, but not extremely hot. When we got within about a mile of the island we had to transfer to smaller boats to get into the shallow water. We came up to a long pier where we disembarked and walked ashore to a low inlet of probably 80 acres, partly covered with nice pines. On one end there had been about five or six acres cleared out and a very, but not elaborate, club house erected.

On landing, the visitors were met by democratic leaders, Joe Robinson and Sam Rayburn and Speaker Bankhead. They led us down to a tree about a hundred yards from the house, where the President was sitting. Each one of us was introduced and the President gave a warm handshake and a broad smile and told us how glad he was to see us. As there were others coming on we had to move along.

Up at the house they were serving all kinds of drinks and groups gathered in every shade to stop and talk. Joined by George Mahon of Texas and Wilburn Cartwright of Oklahoma, I tramped all around and over the small islet and at least learned some geography. On coming back to the house we joined various groups and I drifted back into the President's group. He is very friendly and has a fine stock of knowledge, but you can understand that from ten to twenty men around all the time and each wanting to ask about something of special interest to him and his district, there was not opportunity to get any very definite discussion of any controversial issue. I heard no mention of the strikes, the Court, reorganization or any of the more outstanding issues, either by the President or to him.

This is one of the unfortunate features of our government. It is really discuss matters with the President, although many of them like to tell the people about how close they are to the President. Speaker Bankhead told me yesterday that during his first four years in Congress he never met the President but one time. So I hope my constituents who write and ask me to see the President for them will not be too disappointed if I fail in the effort.

I did get an opportunity to talk to the President about the Brazos River project and found that he was very confused about the whole project and thought that we were in some way connected with the Trinity Canal. I tried to make it clear to him that ours was a flood control project, but with a dozen others all wanting to tell him of their projects and some of the "ring-master" always trying to keep the crowd moving, no conference could be very successful.

After lunch which was served just like any Texas picnic (except there was no chicken or barbecue) a group of about fifteen of us went over to an unhabited beach and went swimming, just as we did when we were boys. On the whole, the crowd of about 150 seemed to enjoy themselves quit informally. Most everybody was in his shirt-sleeves around the house, as was the President. They gathered in groups to talk just like Central Texas farmers and told jokes and talked of everything under the sun. Only one or two in the crowd seemed to have celebrated in excess. I left about 4:30 and got back to Washington about 7:30, with sore feet and a blistered back, but feeling that I had had a good trip and enjoyed good company.

Although the developments in the labor troubled steel districts have overshadowed all other matters Congress has shown a strong "do nothing" disposition. There have been any number of members who have condemned the C.I.O. practices and a large number of attacks on the management of the steel mills, but in view of the attitude of the Secretary of Labor and of many of the northern democrats it has not seemed probable that Congress would take any action. I feel, and I think most of the southern democrats feel, that the government owes the duty to protect every man in his right to strike regardless of why he strikes, but that on the other hand the duty exists to protect every man who wants to continue in his work in his right to do so. I cannot but feel that it was indeed a sad page in American history when the governor of Pennsylvania ordered out state troops to close a plant that was operating peaceably and where men wanted to continue to work simply because John not closed he would import a mob and do violence to the men who were staying with the jobs they had had for years. There were no strike breakers. The men simply wanted to continue at their work. Lewis said they could not work. As I see it, the State of Pennsylvania owed a duty to these men to protect them from John L. Lewis and I am humiliated that a Democratic governor should have so failed in his duty.

Just today I saw a letter from Hon. William Green, President of the American Federation of Labor, that has tried so hard to bring about labor reforms on a legitimate and orderly basis, written to Congressman Luecke, in which Mr. Green says: "like you, I have been apprehensive over what has been taking place in the C.I.O. organization movement. An evil influence has caused groups of newly organized workers connected with the C.I.O. to follow a destructive policy. As a result, public opinion is turning against them."

As a concrete example of just what can be accomplished by organized labor when it is directed by wise and democratic leadership, we have the action of the House of Representatives this week. On Monday the House passed, with but one dissenting vote, the new Railroad Retirement bill, and on Thursday voted the necessary tax to support it. (This tax by the way falls only on the railroads and the men themselves and is in the nature of a compulsory old age insurance). The railroad men were not included in the general social security bill because it was felt they had established a better retirement system already. This new legislation is an effort to make this retirement system apply to all railroad men. I supported both measures.

Two other important pieces of legislation passed the House this week. The first, a measure to provide a practical method of removing Federal judges who are guilty of bad behavior, without the cumbersome process of impeachment, was passed by the house after a hot debate. I voted for the bill, as I have seen how nearly impossible it is to impeach a judge, who although admittedly unfit for office, could not be proven guilty of any crime. I think we should have a way of removing judges when they became unfit and I think this bill provides the means.

The other bill is intended to aid debt loaded communities in solving their refinancing problems. The bill gives municipalities the right to appear in Federal District Courts in bankruptcy proceedings. The court is given power to make effective any plan of settlement agreed to by two-thirds of the creditors. It is aimed to bring about a swift adjustment of indebtedness of insolvent taxing agencies such as drainage, levee, water, irrigation, road school, an in fact all similar improvement districts, as well as towns and cities, and it is thought that it meets the objections of the Supreme Court to the old bill. I supported this bill, believing that it gives both the communities and the creditors a more practical method of settlement than existed in the past.

ALEXANDER KORDA Presents

Marlene DIETRICH
Robert DONAT in
Knights without Armor

SYNOPSIS
Countess Alexandra Adrazine, lovely Russian noblewoman, is twice rescued from the Reds during the Revolution by a strange Englishman, A. J. Fothergill, who is masquerading as Peter Uramov, a Red commissar. Finally they escape together into a forest where, as Peter protects her from pursuing soldiers, they confess their mutual love. They elude their pursuers and make their way to a railroad station where they hope to board a refugee train for the border. Refused a place on the packed train, Peter places his head in front of the wheels and threatens suicide unless they are taken aboard.

Chapter Five

Peter's reckless subterfuge worked. Even these hardened refugees, steeled though they were to scenes of desolation and carnage, could not bear to see this handsome lad killed in cold blood.

"Stop," cried an aged woman. "Are we all heathens?"

"Let us see your hands."

"Get up here, brother," added a beard-bitten muzhik. And they helped Alexandra up into the car, Peter clambering after her. Both dropped, utterly exhausted to the floor of the already jammed car. The train took up its lumbering journey.

Dusk was gathering. Peter looked around at the strange, unkempt faces about them.

"Darling," he whispered, "I'm afraid for you..."

"Nonsense," she smiled. "They are dears. Don't you like them, comrade?"

"Well—yes, I do."

"And do you love me, comrade?" she murmured close to his ear.

He nodded. They both nodded frowsily, and in a few seconds were fast asleep.

When the train at last chugged its way into the station at Kazan the worn travelers found themselves in the midst of what seemed a fortress. Red soldiers were everywhere with fixed bayonets, herding the refugees out of the train for examination, lest any among them proved to be White spies.

In and about the little station the air was charged with tenseness. The feeling was almost as of the Day of Judgment localized in that one spot on earth. Those getting off the train were quickly scrutinized; the lucky ones were shoved to one side; and those considered suspects were ushered before an impromptu court of inquisition. If their stories sounded plausible they were permitted to pass on; if they incriminated themselves in any way, they were taken out and shot without ceremony.

"Let's see your hands," the guards ordered Peter and Alexandra. They obeyed.

"The man passes," intoned an officer mechanically. "Hold the woman—in there with her."

Alexandra was hustled into the requisition room. And close by her side, throwing away his chance for freedom, came Peter in spite of her protests.

They stood before the examining captain at his table.

"Your name? Your occupation? Your destination?" he fired at Peter.

"Anton Gregorovitch Andreyev. Traveling from Takarovsk to Soborsk. I am an electrician—but now I am taking my sister, who is ill, to our elder brother at Soborsk for rest and care."

Pushkov, one of the inquisitor's lieutenants, showed a disposition to accept their story. "Very well—pass," he rapped out.

But the examiner himself, one Kaliev, was not so easily put off. As the fugitives hurried toward the door his voice rang out in a rasping staccato:

"Countess!"

Caught off her guard for a split second, Alexandra stopped in her tracks and half turned around. But at a look from Peter, she recovered and turned the gesture into one of looking about for the "Countess" who had been called.

"Well done, Countess," growled Kaliev. "You are Countess Alexandra Adrazine, fugitive from the people's justice!"

He pointed to a photograph in a book before him. Pushkov looked at it. "Yes, there is a slight resemblance."

"Don't be a fool, Pushkov," shouted the inquisitor. "It's a complete resemblance—she's the woman!"

Finally Pushkov proposed a solution. He was about to leave to report at the divisional headquarters in Samara. He would conduct the prisoners there, and if the woman was identified both would be shot. To this Kaliev reluctantly agreed.

Back on the train, this time under guard, Peter and Alexandra stolidly made the most of their dubious plight. Pushkov was friendly, and together they shared a meal from their respective knapsacks. After they had grown better acquainted the Red officer, a sensitive and evidently idealistic youth, shyly confessed his admiration of and devotion to the woman who was in his custody. Then, going further, he admitted that he was aware of her identity but was determined to save her life.

Toward dusk the train stopped at the little village of Tarzov. Pushkov led his grateful prisoners out of the train and through the dense crowd that filled the station. He pointed down a little street.

"This town is on the Volga. If one should go down this street, one would reach the river in about ten minutes. There are barges, some of them owned by Tartars—stout, good-humored fellows who know no friends and no enemies." They listened, and understood.

"Excuse me," said Pushkov suddenly. "I must go back to the train for something." And he disappeared, leaving them again face to face with freedom.

A moment later, from the direction of the train, they heard a pistol shot followed by screams from the crowd.

110 POUNDS OF TRADES DAY TICKETS ARE BOUGHT BY C OF C

People have been staying at home and trying to keep cool as much as possible the past few days; so merchants are expecting a large crowd in town Saturday to make the purchases they would normally have made at other times, and to attend the monthly trades day program.

A fairly large crowd has attended every trades day program even in the coldest weather.

Tickets used in the drawing last month, and that will be used Saturday, are part of a shipment ordered about two months ago by the Chamber of Commerce. 100,000 tickets were shipped in two large cardboard boxes each weighing 55 pounds. It is estimated the supply will last about twelve months.—Copperas Cove Crony.

World Comment—

demanding guarantees that the union would live up to its promises. The union could be required to post bond to recompense the employer for any losses sustained by illegal strikes. In addition, the C.O.I. should be willing to write into its contracts a clause calling for all disputes arising out of an agreement to be settled in Federal or State courts.

A revision of the Wagner Labor Relations Act is essential if permanent peace is to be brought to the embattled area embracing seven states of the East and Middle West. The act as at present constituted reflects the general attitude of partiality toward labor prevalent at the White House and the Department of Labor. Responsibility for keeping an agreement is placed upon the employer with no provisions included for enforcing an agreement signed by a union.

Within a new Wagner Act must be included provisions protecting workers who do not desire to join a union from molestation and compulsory measures designed to force taking out a union membership card. The C.I.O. has frankly engaged in a campaign of terrorism designed to drive all non-union employees in steel, rubber, and automobiles into its ranks. As the Wagner Act contains no provisions which afford protection for independent workers, the initiative should come from the White House in affording the protection these people so badly need.

The President should definitely dispel the opinion prevalent among the C.I.O. unionists and those they are endeavoring to organize that the administration is backing the Lewisites. At all costs all in all eventualities, the impartiality of the Presidency must be maintained. There can be no justice in the steel troubles so long as the Committee for Industrial Organization marches to battle against the independent steel companies and their unorganized laborers with unofficial endorsement and support of President Roosevelt.

14,000 POUNDS RUN OVER HIM AND HE LIVES TO TELL THE TALE

Ray Hollingsworth, Gatesville trucker, is nursing a stiff leg but thankful that his injuries are not more serious as a result of an accident he suffered in New Mexico last Saturday.

Standing on the running board of his truck, which was pulling slowly against an uphill grade, Hollingsworth was fiddling with the radiator cap and attempting to adjust it. The cap came off and he ducked to avoid the scalding vapor that boiled out, losing his balance and falling under the 14,000 pound truck.

Fortunately the right drive wheel missed his head and upper portion of his body, but ground over his right leg, catching the thigh, knee and calf. No bones were broken but the leg was severely scratched and bruised.

THE WHITE STALLION

All romance of the early days was not Indian fighting, gold hunting or feudistic contests for possession of the open range. There has been handed down to posterity the story of a beautiful white stallion that once roamed the prairies from the Rio Grande to the River Platte. This was a horse who according to tradition lived to be a very great age for a horse, for it is said that he was hunted for a period of probably fifty years. He was known as the "Pacing White Stallion."

When the Spaniards overran and conquered the great Aztec Empire of Mexico, the rode the best of Arabian horses. Some of these horses escaped from their owners and escaped to the great prairies of the north and rapidly multiplied until the time Angle Americans reached the plains there were vast herds of wild horses, the progeny of these that had escaped from the Spaniards. They became the Texas Mustang. The toughest and longest winded horses that ever had saddle leather strapped on them. It was while "Mustanging" in Texas that Philip Nolan was killed and Ellis P. Bean was captured and taken to Mexico. Some of Benas descendants now live in the Pidoke community.

A bit of thrilling romance is connected with the famous White Stallion that was once king of Texas horses. Milk white and as beautifully formed as any that Bedouin horsemen ever rode over Arabian sands. This famous horse gathered about him a range herd that no horseman could catch. Authority among range horses was absolute, as that of a Comanche chief among his tribesmen, for the herd looked to him for leadership.

Every pioneer who looked upon this horse became possessed with a desire to place a lasso around his neck. That desire was never satisfied for so great was his speed that one the approach of a horseman, with a shrill whistle he would call his herd together and lead them straight out of the country. He never confined the herd to a restricted grazing area as many mustang leaders did but led them to new grazing grounds as encroachments by man were made upon his kingdom. He was wary defiant, and unapproachable. Although reputed to be of amable and generous disposition to the herd gathered about him. It is said the great showman P. T. Barnum once offered a fabulous price to any one who would capture and deliver the horse to him.

Many a hard riding ranger tried vainly to capture him. Many years ago (1895) I stood on Coolers Knob, a hill south of McGregor, with an old pioneer, Mr. George McNeil, who was then grizzled and bronzed from long, long years of range service and pioneering. He pointed to a spot over toward the Besque and said, "With two other men I was chasing the White Stallion. We started him in Coryell about the mid forenoon and had followed him until mid afternoon. We had been saving our horses as best we could for a final dash. Just below that big mesquite my horse stepped in a hole, we were going at full gallop, stumbled and fell head long, breaking my leg. The horse hunt was over. We were three miles from the nearest house but I managed to mount and ride in with my broken leg. No the horse was never captured. He could pace faster than any horse I ever owned could run."

The old pioneer told me that after every effort of the plainmen to capture the White Stallion had failed, a noted man, a fine marksman, conceived the idea of "creasing the neck," that is to fire a shot to strike just at the root of the mane which would "knock the horse out" for a time and he could be captured while down. After much skirmishing for position the shot was fired, but to low. The proud animal was brought to the ground never to rise again. His self confidence had played him into the hands of the destroyer. His kingdom perished with him, for there was none to take it. His wild free herd was scattered over the prairie.

Forty years after the above story was related to me "Uncle" Matt Lenoard now 84 years of age, and who was a citizen of Coryell County for more than fifty years, and now resides in Waco, related the following story to me: "My father W. F. Leonard, came to Oak Cliff with Peters colony and built the second house in the town. Father was an expert shot with a rifle and it became his duty to supply meat to the settlers by killing deer, buffalo, bear or any wild game that would do for a family meat supply.

While on a hunting expedition father heard of the White Stallion. It was he who conceived the idea of creasing his neck. He manouvered for months and finally fired on the horse from a cover of elms near a water hole. Just as he fired the horse sensed danger and raised his head from the water and the bullet broke his neck, tail and brought the hair home. Father clipped the mane and tail and brought the hair home. He wove a pair of bridle reins of part of the long glossy, white hair. A part of it was kept to hair fiddle bows. I have seen several bows fitted with hair that came off the White Stallion. From fathers account he must have been a wonderful horse."

Lets Talk about Clothes

Denton, June 28.—Plain laziness keeps the majority of women from having the rich, glossy hair for which they envy others. For, unfortunately, one can "get by" without taking care of the texture of one's hair, and few people realize that a weekly trip to the beauty parlor is not enough to guarantee lovely locks.

Everyone knows that brushing is good for the hair, but few people know why. First of all, it removes the dust and grimy dirt that collects on each separate hair of one's head. Second, it stimulates and keeps a steady flow of blood at the roots where oil glands are located.

Sun devotees who defy its strong summer rays should become brush devotees as well, since this treatment distributes the oil down the length of each hair, and those parched spots remain a treat rather than a reality. Much artificial hair oil is wasted by women who refuse to take advantage of the scalp's natural supply.

Some beauticians call for one hundred strokes a day; others say brush for five minutes, but they all say "brush." Brushes must be kept clean (soap and water do it wonderfully) and the bristles should be long and firm enough to reach through the hair to the scalp.

To get the most benefit from the least output of energy, one should brush upward on all sides, then forward from the nape of the neck all through the length of the hair, finishing up with several strokes back from the forehead to calm down the curls and waves again.

San Francisco's 1939 world's fair will have half a million square feet of exhibit space.

CAMP DEFEATS MERCHANTS TO MOVE INTO SECOND PLACE

Cashing in on their bets to better advantage than the Merchants, the camp moved into second place ahead of the Fireboys by defeating the cellar-dwellers by the score of 7 to 5. Stephens although touched for eight blows, had fine support, while Ivy, although he yielded the same number of hits had faulty backing, the Merchants making seven errors.

The Camp won the game in the fourth inning when they scored five runs. In that frame Teague got on base on an error by Fore and then McNutt knocked a long home run over the left fielder's head. Brown, the next man up, got to first on an error by Chick McAlister, and Theo Whatley then poked an other long home run. The fifth run came as a result of a single by Jordan who scored on successive errors of Bradford and Fore.

Rogers, left fielder for the camp, turned in some brilliant fielding, making several difficult catches, while McNutt was the leading hitter.

DOC'S DEFEATS FIREBOYS IN EXTRA INNING TILT

Doc's Sandwich Shop came from behind with two runs in the fifth and one in the seventh and eighth innings to win a close decision from the Fireboys, five to four. Doc Ray seemed to have the situation well under control until the fifth inning, when he weakened visibly. Wilson, pitching for Doc's, hurled fair ball, although he had very poor support, his teammates making twelve errors.

The Sandwich Shop team scored their two runs in the fifth inning as a result of Busby's infield hit, Thornton's triple, and an error by Baker. In the last half of the seventh with two down and nobody on, Jack Wiggins homered to tie the score.

The winning run was scored in the last half of the eighth, when Tackett doubled and went all the way home when Biffle fumbled Wilson's grounder.

FROM THE COUNTY AGR'L AGENT

Trench Silos

"Even disaster has its compensations. After last summer's drought, if you had gone out into your cornfield and been forced to admit that it would not make 15 bushels, you would have felt pretty sick. Yet Paul Gerlaugh of the Ohio Experiment station put it into his Madison County silos anyhow and made 64 tons of beef per ton off silage alone with 2 lbs. of his soybean-tankage-cottonseed supplement. No grain. Per acre of corn he got 322 lbs. of gain on Shorthorn steers that went into the feedlot in October weighing 730 lbs. and came out in April weighing 1,120 lbs. went in at $6.80 per cwt. and came out at $11.50. Those steers gained 2.16 lbs. per day on drought silage along with proper protein supplement, of course. Proving that no farmer who feeds can afford to be without a silo."—Breeder's Gazette.

LAST RITES FOR MRS. CARL McCLENDON TUESDAY AT TVVILLE

Mrs. Carl McClendon, charming young citizen of this city, died at her home on Main street of this city Tuesday morning at 2 a. m. She had been seriously ill for the past few weeks and in a poor state of health for a period of three years. She was only 38 years of age at the time of her demise.

Surviving are her husband and one son, Carl Sterling, her father, J. C. Weaver of Turnersville; three brothers, O. C., J. T. and R. L. Weaver of Pancake; and three sisters, Mesdames Ula McLarty and C. E. Jones of Dallas and Mrs. Hattie Young of Pancake.

Funeral services were conducted Tuesday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock from the Turnersville Methodist church with Dr. W. W. Ward of Waco officiating assisted by Reverends M. M. Chunn of this city and D. L. Barnes of Turnersville. Burial followed in the Turnersville Cemetery with Eastern Star in charge. Scott Funeral Directors completed the funeral arrangements.

ments and had charge of interment services.

Nol Weaver was born on September 16, 1899 at Mt. Zion known as Pancake now. She was converted and united with the Methodist Church at an early age, having been a member of the local church at the time of her death. On March 13, 1925 she was married to Carl McClendon to which happy union a son was born.

Although Mrs. McClendon had been in ill health for the past three years she was a loyal church worker and an outstanding member of the Turnersville Chapter of the Eastern Star. For the past eight years Mr. and Mrs. McClendon have made their home in and near Gatesville, where they have many friends who will mourn the loss of such a fine, noble character as Mrs. McClendon.

Twenty Questions on Social Security

Question No. 8

QUESTION: How may an individual figure the amount of his benefits under the Old-Age Benefits provisions of the Social Security Act?

ANSWER: Add up the total amount of wages received in covered occupations after the year 1936 and prior to the attainment of age 65, including only wages received in any one calendar year up to and including $3,000 from one employer. If total wages during the entire period are less than $2,000, the worker is not eligible for monthly retirement benefits but will be paid 3 1/2 per cent of such wages upon attainment of age 65.

If wages total $2,000 or more for the entire period, calculate monthly benefits as follows:

One half of one per cent of the first $3,000; one twelfth of one per cent of the next $42,000; one twenty-fourth of one per cent of any amount in excess of $45,000.

A total of $129,000 is the largest amount which may be credited for old-age benefits monthly income, and the maximum monthly benefit payable is $85.00.

For example: A man makes $62,100 in covered occupations after December 31, 1936, and before reaching the age 65. One-half of one per cent of the first $3,000 is $15; one twelfth of one per cent of the next $42,000 is $35; and one twenty-fourth of one per cent of the remaining 17,100 is $7.12; a total federal old-age retirement benefit of $57.12 per month for the remainder of this man's life.

(Further inquiries should be directed to the Social Security Board Office, 1530 Allen Bldg., Dallas, Texas)
