3rd Annual Exes Picnic To Be Held at Ewing Saturday, July 16th

"Join the Parade" is the heading on the window cards and posters that are being passed out by the Ewing Ex-Student's Association, calling attention to their Third Annual Picnic, to be held Saturday of this week in this progressive community.

Featured in the entertainment which begins at 9:30 Saturday morning and continues as "long as you can take it," or anyway until Saturday midnight, first, is the Donkey Relay, which takes off at 10 a. m. Throughout the day, there will be plenty of music, according to Clayton Powell originator and promoter, and after the noon hours, when folks will eat their fill at the concessions, a "hard ball" baseball game will start at 1:30 p. m.

Following this, will be the attraction of the afternoon, when Gatesville Limbernecks will take on Ewing Brushrabbits in the big laugh of the picnic, a donkey "softball" game.

In the evening, 8:15 being the hour, "Hullabaloo," a three act comedy will be presented at the school with the following cast: Lettie Hopper, a country girl, Scotty Seward; Cara Morton, school teacher, Gertrude Brown; Nolly Toliver, Clayton Powell; Eric Boardman, banker, Rufus Smith; Albert Boardman, his son, J. B. Brown; Mrs. Morton; Cara's Mother, Mary Evelyn Eubanks; and Benito, young gypsie, Wayland Holt.

SCOTT AND SCOTT RETURN SUN. FROM CHICAGO MARKET

Scott & son, of the firm of Morton Scott, Housefurnisher, returned from a visit and buying trip in the Chicago furniture market known as the Furniture Mart.

Robert, spokesman for the twain, said it was hot, and they didn't see the CIO panic, and didn't stop in St. Louis. That's all we could get.

GV. TELEPHONE AND LIGHT POLES WILL BEAR NO MORE SIGNS

Gatesville light or telephone poles will bear no more advertising matter of any kind according to Claude Wallace and Bill Bamburg, respective managers of the Community Public Service and Gulf States Telephone Exchange.

Gatesville merchants have been complaining of the unsightliness of such an advertising medium so the poles will revert to their bare and native state. Linemen accustomed to scampering up and down the poles may now procede with abandon, as there will be no more tacks supporting placards to cause them embarrassment.

Grand Jury "Interviews" Thirteen First Day Court

An unlucky thirteen, or lucky, however you look at it, were interviewed by the July Term of District Court Grand Jury which started working yesterday morning. No information was given as to what the interviews brought out, but this will probably come out later. Bailiffs, Sheriff, deputies and others were much in notice as well as local legal talent. Preparations are being made for Coryell county's July term of District Court, which, so far, promises nothing sensational.

Out of the Grand Jury list furnished, the ones chosen were: J. H. Connor, L. T. Sadler, Lloyd Williamson, Herman Lockhart, James Shults, H. J. White, Foreman, R. M. Holder, Homer Painter, L. C. Perryman, Edgar Jones, M. W. Carroll and W. F. Hamil.

HOW MUCH DID IT RAIN? ANSWER: WHEN? FRI SAT. OR SUN.

The answers are, since we are able to give all the answers: Friday, .77; Saturday, 2.76; Sunday, .38; Total 3.91.

There is still some debate as to whether it "did good" or "did damage," but anyway, that's what the reading was on the rain gauge here in Gatesville.

NOTES FROM COUNTY SUPT'S OFFICE

Saturday morning, Supt J. M. Witcher and C. D. Boyer, S. V. Dixon, G. G. Northcutt attended a meeting in Waco and heard L. A. SYNOPSIS

Jack Gordon, senior pilot of a transcontinental air line, is in New York for his vacation when at the last minute, he is called to fly a ship from Salt Lake City to San Francisco. He balks but changes his mind when he sees pretty Felice Rollins preparing to take the west-bound plane. Felice has trouble having her check accepted in payment of her ticket so Jack gallantly comes to her aid. She gives him a diamond ring as security and then ignores him. Undismayed, Jack makes a bet with the stewardess that he will take Felice to dinner when they arrive in San Francisco.

CHAPTER II.

"Oh, Mr. Gordon," Vi's voice jerked the pilot out of his reverie. "Will you come here a moment."

When he arrived at the door of the plane she introduced him to a fluttery little governess who was gripping an imp of a boy of nine

"Glad to meet you, young fellow." Jack extended his hand. "We'll . . ."

As he grasped the boy's grimy paw, a jet of water from a squirt gun which the latter had palmed, hit him square in the eye.

"Oh boy!" exulted Waldemar Pitt, III. "A bullseye."

"Waldemar!" His governess was distressed. "I've told you not to do that! Some day you'll hurt somebody!"

"Or somebody'll hurt you," added Jack grimly as he wiped his eyes. Then, as Vi came back from an errand inside the plane, he decided to let her in on the thing.

"Vi, this is Waldemar," he beamed.

"Well, well," beamed the girl. "A regular little man, making such a long trip."

Waldemar looked at her with his and dispatch all messages to or from Dr. Evarts over ship radio," it read.

"Big shot," Vi whispered to Jack as the passenger climbed aboard.

They too boarded the ship and closed the door behind them. A moment later the pilot gave his engines "the juice" and the plane roared down the runway and took the air.

"Oh, we're moving," wailed Miss Harkins. "Oh, what if we should crash?"

"You'd never know what happened," answered Waldemar in high glee. "Gee, I saw a picture of a plane that crashed—it was scattered all over."

"Why . . . why, we're flying," gasped the governess, peering fearfully out of the window. At that psychological moment Waldemar released the catch on the reclining seat in front of her, allowing the back to fall into her lap. Sure that the plane had started to fall apart, Miss Harkins let out a blood-curdling scream and fainted dead away.

Everybody in the ship were enjoying these antics to the utmost except Palmer and Dr. Evarts, who seemed to be watching each other and the rest of the passengers with peculiar intentness.

When Miss Haskins had been revived, Palmer turned to the doctor and tried to strike up a conversation.

"You a doctor?" he asked, indicating a medical book Evarts was reading.

"Yes," answered the latter, a little startled.

"Practice in New York, eh?"

"Just coming from there," the answer came after a moment of hesitation. Then Evarts rose abruptly and motioned for Jack to follow him to the rear of the cabin.

"Pardon me," he said when they were out of earshot of the others. "But I understand you're one of the pilots going through to the coast. Tell me—is there any way a person can get out of this plane?"

"Sure," grinned Gordon. "You just open that door and walk out. But be careful—that first step's a son-of-a-gun."

"No parachutes?"

"None."

"Fine!" The doctor returned to his seat and resumed reading his book on "Cerebral Surgery and Trepanning."

Jack also returned to his seat and glanced soulfully at Felice. Stumped for a moment as to how to start a conversation, he finally remembered his newspaper and fished it out of his pocket. Folding it so that the headlines about the robbery would be the first to strike her eye, he held it across the aisle.

"Newspaper?" he inquired.

"Thanks," she replied. Merely glancing at the first page, she threw back her brown fur coat from about her shoulders and settled down to pursue the society columns while Jack studied her in astonishment. She certainly had nerve!

Soon Miss Rollins found a story which did engage her complete attention. It began with a two-column picture of herself. Underneath was the caption: "SOCIALITE AND HEIRESS RETURNS FROM EUROPE."

Folding the newspaper so that the headlines about the robbery would be the first to strike her eye, Jack held it across the aisle. "Newspaper?" he inquired.

by the hand while she gazed at the plane in dismay.

"This is Miss Harkins," began the stewardess.

"I'm Waldemar's governess," the newcomer interrupted breathlessly, "and this is Waldemar—Waldemar Pitt, III." She exhibited the youngster, who was wearing cream trousers, an Eton jacket and a derby hat. "Mr. Waller says you are to take care of Waldemar and me on the plane. We've never flown before and it's imperative Waldemar arrive in San Francisco precisely on schedule. If sonny boy isn't there by tomorrow night, well, I shudder to think of the consequences." She suited the action to the word. "His mother probably will sue for a million dollars—she always has in the past."

"Sue the air line?" Jack was trying to get all this straight.

"No, no — sue Waldemar's father. You see, Mr. Pitt is forever getting dates mixed and forgetting to deliver Waldemar on time, and Mrs. Pitt is always bringing suit for contempt of court and so Mr. Waller says you are to take charge of us. Waldemar, come here, please."

She looked wildly around and found Waldemar getting himself nicely greased by crawling under the plane. As the boy crawled out again, his face a black smear, and came up to them, she continued: "This is Mr. Gordon."

head cocked to one side. Apparently what he saw pleased him.

"Hi-ya, Toots," he responded, giving her the eye. He took careful aim with his squirt gun but Jack spoiled the shot by a quick shove.

At this moment a man hurried up from the station and started to climb aboard in a great hurry.

"Your name, please," Vi stopped him.

"Who? Me?" The hawk-faced individual hesitated, then added: "My name's Palmer—Curtis Palmer. Will we get to San Francisco on time?"

"I think so," she answered mechanically. "Seat number 3, Mr. Palmer!"

As she spoke the mail clerks put on the last pouches of mail and Pilot Rickhauser started the engines. "Everybody aboard?" he called.

"One more somewhere," answered the girl. Just as she did so a huge black limousine careened up the driveway and came to a stop. A liveried chauffeur hopped out, opened the door and pulled out a bag. A distinguished grey-haired man followed and they hurried to the plane.

"Are you Dr. Evarts?" asked Vi as they approached.

"Yes—will we make Frisco on time?" the older man demanded. As the girl nodded he handed her a letter signed by Waller. "Accept

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance.

The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

"BLACK LEGION" PICTURE EXPOSES COWARDLY ORDER

Lifted directly from the banner-lines and news columns of the daily papers of a few weeks ago is the thrilling melodrama "Black Legion," which opened at the Regal Theatre today.

This Warner Bros. production was begun a few days after the press revealed that such a secret organization was operating in the State of Michigan and was concluded, according to studio officials, on the very day a Detroit judge sentenced the hooded orders to life imprisonment.

"Black Legion" gripped the interest and won the applause of deeply-moved audiences at Regal. If it were purely a fiction story, it would have been an excellent movie. But containing as it does, so many close parallels to the truth about the dastardly night-riders, it has tremendous additional power as a social document. "Black Legion" will probably take rank alongside that other Warner "spot news" film of several years ago, "I am a Fugitive From a Chain Gang," which was one of the most successful pictures any studio ever turned out.

STOP THE FLEA HOPPERS NECESSARY FOR TEXAS COTTON FARMERS

Meeting for farmers are being held in various Texas counties this month to consider ways and means of stopping what is said to be about the worst infestation of flea hoppers in years. The cotton flea hopper has become in recent years one of the major pests on cotton in Texas, ranking with the cotton boll weevil and at times actually doing more damage than the boll weevil. In Dallas county, for example, the 1935 cotton crop was cut more than 50 per cent by the flea hopper, which literally strips the cotton stalk. So the farmers are out to stop the hoppers' depredations. And apparently the best way of doing that is through the use of a mineral which Texas produces in enormous quantities: sulphur.

Research of State and Federal agricultural authorities has developed the fact that ground sulphur dust is one of the cheapest, safest and most effective insecticides for controlling the flea hopper. Sulphur ground so that at least 93 to 95 per cent passes 325-mesh screen is of the proper degree of fineness. It may be obtained commercially in the condition and unconditioned forms. Conditioned sulphur now contains from 2½ to 8 per cent of a light fluffy material of conditioning agent to improve its physical qualities for dusting purposes unconditioned sulphur and pure sublimed sulphur give satisfactory results when properly applied, but a good application may be somewhat difficult to obtain unless the dusting equipment is new or in first class operating condition. At any rate, coarsely ground or lump sulphur should never be used to control the flea hopper. Dusting should be started when it becomes evident that the cotton plants are not putting on squares as ordinarily would be expected. From 12 to 20 pounds per acre should be used for each application, the determining factors being the size of the cotton, the severity of the infestation, and the lateness of the season.

The bulletin of the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station on cotton flea hopper control has this to say about the cost of sulphur dusting: "suitable conditioned sulphurs have been selling for 3 to 3½ cents per pound retail, making the cost of an application about 75 cents per acre. The average cost of controlling flea hoppers during the past several days has varied from $2.00 to $4.00 per acre for the season. This expenditure has produced an increase in yield over untreated areas of 102 to 361 pounds of seed cotton per acre and provided a net gain of $2.08 to $10.44 per acre as a result of controlling the cotton flea hopper depredations should be told how the Texas mineral can be used to save Texas cotton—The Texas Weekly.

BETTER COTTON QUALITY IS ESSENTIAL IF FARMERS HOLD MARKET

John H. McFadden, Jr.

During the recent weeks annual Course of Study in Cotton Classing conducted at Houston by Anderson, Clayton & Co. for ginner and their other regularly established buying connections, several of the sessions were devoted to discussion of the essential necessity of improving the staple quality of the Texas cotton crop. Invitation was extended to Mr. John H. McFadden Jr., one of the world's largest cotton merchants, to come before the group and give the views of the firm of Geo. H. McFadden & Bro. on the subject. Mr. McFadden made this statement. It is of most significant importance in view of the world-wide scope of operations of his firm.—Editor.

I can tell you in the most emphatic language at my command that it is our unqualified belief that unless the Texas farmer does improve the staple of his cotton crop, Texas is going to lose its place as the most important exporting state in the cotton belt. No one who has been in the cotton shipping business during the last few years can question the correctness of this statement because it is backed up with irrefutable proof.

Let me give you briefly a picture of the export situation and our foreign markets as we see them. Most of Central Europe and Italy, and now recently Japan, are on a quota basis owing to financial restrictions. This means that every bale of cotton these countries buy must have the maximum spinning qualities for the mills requirements; they cannot afford mistakes and they cannot afford waste; the result of this is that these countries are demanding better cotton than they have used in the past. If they cannot find the cotton they want in this country, they can and actually are finding it elsewhere. The most outstanding example of this is the fact that Japan this year has taken, so far, 122,000 bales of Brazilian cotton as compared to only 8,000 the season before.

Four years ago I became so apprehensive regarding the stringent control of production in this country that I went to Brazil to open an office for our firm, not because we wanted to exploit cotton grown in some other region, but because it was the only sensible hedge that we could put in to protect our business. Our Brazilian office so far has proved an excellent investment because not only has it provided us with additional quality but it has also given us us qualities of which there are insufficient quantities in this country.

Now another competitor has come into the field, namely Russia. I understand that they have stepped up their production to take care of their domestic consumption and now have a small exportable surplus which they are offering for sale in Europe. I am told by some friends in

SECRETARY WALLACE SETS THE FARMER ON THE ROAD TO POLITICAL POWER

STANLEY HIGH SEES "NUMBER 1 CORN-HOG STATESMAN" AS PRESIDENTIAL FACTOR IN 1940.

Philadelphia, July 12.—Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace as builder and leader of a "united front of the nation's farmers," emerges as a potent political factor on the 1940 presidential horizon in an article called, "Will It Be Wallace?" by Stanley High in this week's Saturday Evening Post.

The potentialities of organized agriculture—for both the farmer and for Secretary Wallace—are found in the fact that the "New Deal has built among the farmers one of the most formidable class organizations in the history of American Government.

"The farm population of the United States is approximately 32,000,000. With an $80,000,000,000 cash income in 1936, farmers run the nation's largest business," Dr. High writes. "But the farmers, in the past, have seldom thought nationally and they, have had practically no national solidarity. They have been sectional in their thinking, and as a result, their economic aches and pains have always had sectional treatment."

Political and Economic New

Liverpool who have seen the types that it is beautiful cotton, well prepared, and running in length from 15-16 to 1 inch. It may easily be that in the not far distant future Russia may develop into a much more dangerous competitor than Brazil, for the reason that in that country, they have the labor and energetic characteristics lacking in Brazil.

The threat of these various foreign competitors cannot and must not be taken lightly. If we are to preserve our world markets for cotton we must have the quality of merchandise, the buyer wants.

There has been a very dangerous amount of "poof-poofing" foreign competitors but I tell you, with all sincerity, that the days of our cotton monopoly are over and the only possible way that we can ever continue to hold the place which we may now have is to produce what our customers want to buy.

Let me tell you a fact which has brought the question of quality improvement home to us, as I hope it will to you. In the past few years we have had to refuse perfectly good orders on tens of thousands of bales of cotton for the sole reason that we did not have it in stock and could not obtain it. Whenever we are obliged to send out a cable reading: "Regret cannot offer quality unobtainable" it constitutes a direct invitation for that mill to look to another country to supply its needs.—Acco Press.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace has done "a job of almost presidential proportions."

Deal for Farmers

All that has been changed, according to Stanley High, because Secretary Wallace "undertook the creation of a farmer class consciousness and a national agricultural solidarity." He is giving the farmers "not merely and economic New Deal of the sort he thinks they need, but is giving them a political New Deal of the sort he thinks they have to have." He has said in his own words, "I'm convinced that the method of settling problems in this country is going to be more and more on a functional basis—labor problems through labor unions and farm problems through farm organizations. This means that they are going to take some Federal power. That's all right, because the corporations have had it for a long time."

The Welding of the Farmers' Front

Early in March, 1933, Secretary Wallace sat down with fifty farm leaders whom he had invited to Washington. "They were spokesmen for every major farm interest North and South. They had never before sat around the same table. A number of them were not acquainted. Almost all of them were suspicious." But the reached an agreement on a legislative program and "Henry Wallace had made the first significant dent in the walls of agricultural sectionalism."

The Secretary went on the radio two or three times a week over a national farm and home program. The farmers, instead of being "asked to swallow a farm program," had the opportunity of voting on it.

The administrative machinery, as Mr. High says, is where "Mr. Wallace's crusade really got down to the grass roots." The jobs was turned over to the farmers themselves through what were first called Production Control Committees, now Agricultural conservation Associations.

The farmer joins the organization automatically when he signs a crop contract with the government. He becomes active because it is to his interest. Local divisions elect officers which in turn serve on a county committee. State committees and regional directors are appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture. There are 2800 rural counties in the United States and every one is organized. Seventy per cent of the nation's farmers are members.

Revival of the Old Town-Meeting Idea

Secretary Wallace describes the associations as "a revival of the old New England town-meeting idea." Mr. High writes: "They are the machinery of the United farm front. For national coverage and rank-and-file participation, and for a clear channel from the township unit to the national Capitol, no party organization ever matched them" and to the possibilities are "sufficient to make the professional politicians mouth water."

Bigger Things for Wallace

Describing the Secretary's loyal and effective staff, Mr. High says, "The single-mindedness of their devotion to the cause of agriculture has not interfered with their efforts to groom the Secretary of Agriculture for bigger things."

Mr. Wallace, a registered republican until the Spring of 1936, is now the "number one corn-hog statesman" who "a good many people believe is Mr. Roosevelt's heir-apparent."

The farmers' total cash income in 1935 was approximately $7,000,000,000. That is 60 per cent more than it was in 1932. This year it will probably reach $10,000,000,000. In "helping the farmers out of the economic slough, Secretary Wallace landed them in a place of unprecedented political power."

Mr. High writes: "If Mr. Wallace has not pulled the strings to make the farmers jump it is not because the strings are not all there. It is an axiom of American politics that booms which bloom early are subject to frost. But if this boom withers; if, in 1940, Mr. Roosevelt's hands are laid on some other head it will not be because Mr. Wallace has faltered in his understanding and practice of the New Deal gospel or has failed, in his special field, to do a job of almost presidential proportions. No other department of the government is so deeply indoctrinated with New Deal ideas or has so faithfully sought to make those ideas work. No previous Secretary of Agriculture has been able to devise a farm program substantial enough to constitute the first plans in a presidential platform. And—what, in the end, may turn out to be even more important—Mr. Wallace with his gospel and his program, has put the farmers of the nation in a state of mind and of organization that makes them more potent politically than they have been at any time since the populist uprising of the 90's."

players not included under the old-age benefits program of the Social Security Act?

ANSWER: The Social Security Act was designed to afford protection against Social hazards where it is most urgently needed. While employers receive no direct benefits in the form of monthly payments, they will, nevertheless, receive indirect benefits as a result of the more constant flow of consumer purchasing power resulting from the periodic payments to recipients of benefits under the Social Security Act.

Employers will no more be able to escape some of the benefits of the program than they could have escaped some of the troubles of the depression. The man who reaches 65 and is no longer employed will still be a customer. Thus, benefits to the employers are real even though they are indirect. (Further inquiries should be directed to the Social Security Board Office, 1530 Allen Bldg., Dallas Texas)

As a part of the Texaco National Road Test fleet which includes cars representing about 95 per cent of the motor industry's output, the Plymouth left Detroit on May 15th and will be on the road until September 18th, rolling every day until it comes back to the engineers for final scoring of its performance.

HUMBLE EXHIBIT IS STILL OUTSTANDING PAN-AM. EXHIBIT

Houston, July 8.—Petroleum's important position in the economic structure of Texas is given proper representation in the several oil company exhibits at the Pan American Exposition in Dallas, and many of the heretofore misunderstood or unknown activities necessary to the discovery of oil are explained to the layman in the geology and geophysics displays shown in Humble's Hall of Texas History.

Last year the Humble company exhibited, along with a group of 14 historical dioramas, a series of geologic maps and miniature oil fields. The relief maps, pictured the geologic development of Texas through millions of years and showed, in a measure, the reasons for oil deposits in the state, while the miniature oil fields give graphic illustrations of the various strata of earth to a depth of 11,000 feet.

All these materials are again being shown this year, and to them have been added others which gave the average observer a still better insight into the overall picture.

A special wing, added to the building these new material, is divided into two sections: "How the Geologist knows what is Underground," and "How the Geophysicist knows what is Underground." In these sections are exhibited the instruments and finds of the geophysicist, which many people have long felt were secrets carefully guarded by the oil companies. Actual working models of a magnetometer, a torsion balance instrument and a sound truck as they are employed in exploration work by the geophysicist are on display. Along with these are elaborate graphs and explanatory plaques which give full detail on the workings of the instrument.

In the geologic section pictures and explanatory guides give details on how the geologist traces the strata of the earth in which he is particularly interested. In well lighted cases are shown specimens from which tions and deposits from which geologists arrive at their conclusions regarding the possibility of petroleum deposits.

Specially trained and experienced young geologists and geophysicists are on duty at all hours to aid visitors in interpreting facts and findings of the scientists and to explain in detail the workings of the instruments.
