It's going to be necessary, and right away, since the City is installing a "stop light" at the intersection of East Main Street and Lutterloh. It has the red green and amber lights, warning the four way traffic at this point that the traffic is coming, going, or stopping.

This has long been a dangerous corner, and, being a junction of Highways 7 and 36, it will halt a fast moving traffic, which should be checked before it reaches the down-town district.

WORLD COMMENT

THIRD TERM FOR ROOSEVELT?

Will Franklin Roosevelt flout the hundred and fifty year old two-term tradition for American chief executives and seek his party's nomination for a third term in 1940? Until Gov. George H. Earle of Pennsylvania issued his epochal declaration for a third term, little credence was lent persistent rumors that another solemn political precedent would be broken by the President, but now the third term spectre is one of the fundamental factors behind the break between the President and many of his friends in the Senate.

Governor Earle pointed out in his statement that there is no other Democrat of political stature comparable with Franklin Roosevelt. For this reason he does not believe there should be a change of party or national leadership in 1940. This assertion is quite true, but it has been true in almost every administration since the time of George Washington. The chief executive is always the leader of his party and there is little opportunity afforded aspiring party lieutenants to catch the public eye until the nominating conventions are near.

In spite of the fact that Franklin Roosevelt has surrounded himself with more "yes" men and political puppets than any other president since the first Roosevelt, the last three national elections have created one of the most promising groups of presidential possibilities the Democratic Party has ever had.

To mention only a few, there are Governors Earle of Pennsylvania and Murphy of Michigan, Cabinet officers James A. Farley and Henry A. Wallace, and Senators Barkley of Kentucky, Clark of Missouri, Guffey of Pennsylvania, and Byrd of Virginia.

This writer does not purport to know whether Pennsylvania's Earle made his statement with the blessing of the President. It would seem to me poor politics to bring such a touchy subject to the public attention at a time when the administration is striving to extend its power over the legislature and the federal judiciary. Nevertheless, the Earle statement could have been a trial balloon to test public reaction. It such was the case, no more will be heard of a third term for Mr. Roosevelt.

The Earle declaration has truly put the President on the spot. An open denial against a third term would tend to further weaken the ties now binding the administration to the Democratic representation in Congress. Aside from accelerating the revolt against the President, a flat assurance that Jan. 20, 1940 will wind up Mr. Roosevelt's tenure of office would divide his party into cliques each fostering the cause of some prospective candidate for the nomination. The one tie aside from patronage that will serve to hold the President's adherents together and keep the Senatorial revolt from jumping all bounds in the possibility that Franklin Roosevelt will again be a candidate for President.

Only two Presidents have challenged the two-term tradition. In 1876 President Grant's friends urged him to run for a third term, but instantaneous opposition within his own party blocked the eventuality. The House of Representatives at this time went so far as to pass a resolution reading: "Resolved, that it is the sense of the House of Representatives that the precedent established by Washington and other Presidents of the United States in retiring from the presidential office after their second term has become, by universal concurrence, a part of our republican system of government, and that any departure from this time-honored custom would be unwise, unpatriotic, and fraught with peril to our free institutions."

In 1880, four years after Grant retired from the presidency, another precedent in regard to a third term was established. In that year Grant lent himself to the designs of Pennsylvania and New York politicians who hoped to secure the Republican nomination for the ex-President. Grant went to the Chicago convention as the announced candidate of a large clique of the G. O. P., but after a rousing battle was thoroughly bested. Thus was established the precedent that even after a lapse of four years no American President shall serve for a third term.

Colonel Teddy Roosevelt regarded the seven and one-half years he served in the White House as equivalent to two terms and refused to run again in 1908, fostering the candidacy of his good friend, William H. Taft. In 1912 Roosevelt disregarded his pledge of 1908 and sought the Republican nomination, which he failed to wrest from Taft. Roosevelt organized his famous Progresssive (Bull Moose) party and ran in opposition to Wilson (Democrat) and Taft (Republican). While running well ahead of Taft, he fell far short of victory and his challenge of the two-term tradition failed of accomplishment.

What will Roosevelt do in 1940, My guess is that he will retire at the end of his second term as all other American chief executives have done, some undoubtedly unwillingly. Barring a complete about face in the Roosevelt methods in the next three years, the split in the Democratic party is certain to become more pronounced as time wear on. Even now a titanic struggle for control of the party is in prospect for 1940 between the New Dealers and those of more conservative thought. A complete collapse of party solidarity would follow an attempt to nominate Roosevelt for a third term. In spite of his many faults, this Mr. Roosevelt does not wish to see.

Let's Talk about Clothes

TEXAS STATE COLLEGE FOR WOMEN (CJ)

DENTON, July 7. Just as flutters, full skirts and femininity have monopolized the formal dress field, so have these soft fashions taken over the realm of lingerie.

Among the most expensive loot one finds frothy nightgowns in pink tinted or blue chiffons. One luxurious pink and white affair is trimmed in black lace, which swoops around a full skirt and forms a tricky design around the neckline.

In organzas there are printed floral creations with butterfly short sleeves and appliqued yokes. Over these gowns the girls at Texas State College for Women recommend long chiffon coats, either with quantities of shirring or with yards of fine pleating.

If one is in search of cool charm without the output of a small fortune, the new designs in cottons are a perfect answer. Old fashioned dimities with brief bodice tops and delicate handwork, offered in heavenly shades of shell pink, cloud blue yellow and white, will make one sleep as beautifully as chiffon and satin.

Luscious ribbons are being used on these cottons, tied like little-girl sashes or made into shoulder straps. Narrow lace trims other models, and a few crisp cottons even boast nosegays.

These cotton triumphs stay colorful after weeks of tubbing and become softer and more delicate as they grow older. Even the pajama enthusiast will have a hard time resisting these offerings of gown stylists and she who has always favored gowns can find everything her heart desires.

Twenty Questions on Social Security

QUESTION NO. 10

QUESTION: What happens under the old-age benefits section of the Social Security Act if an individual changes employment from an included occupation and vice-versa?

ANSWER: Employees are credited with wages received after the year 1936 and prior to age 65 in included occupations, and likewise are not credited for wages received in excluded occupations. When an employee enters a covered occupation for the first time, he is required to apply for an account number card. When an employee moves to an excluded occupation, he need make no report to anyone. Since he might again enter a covered occupation, he should keep his account number card. Wage credits earned while working in a covered occupation are not lost when a worker moves to an employment not covered by the law. These credits are retained and if the same employee later returns to a covered occupation, additional credits will be added to the previous credits earned. If an employee does not return to a covered occupation, payments due him at age 65 or death will be based on wages paid to him during the time he was employed in a covered employment.

(Further inquiries should be directed to the Social Security Board Office, 1530 Allen Bldg., Dallas, Texas.)

Pecan Grove 4-H Club at Encampment

The Pecan Grove 4-H Club girls were glad to act as hostess again for the annual 4-H Club encampment of Coryell County. Only one Pecan Grove member was absent, Miss Charlotte Davidson, who was working in town.

The girls arrived between 4:00 and 6:00 p. m. June 29 and camp adjourned after lunch June 30. About 70 girls were present and 8 or 9 clubs were represented.

Everyone was glad to have as visitors, Miss Sidney Gale Gibson's sister, Miss Elzira Ann and her friend, Miss Joyce Cochran of Trinity.

The principal schedule was swimming, handicraft, nature study, first aid, and cooking and eating (as you might guess).

Pecan Grove appreciates the nice condition in which the grounds were left and hope that the encampment will be held here again next year.

Uncle Jim Says

"Well distributed reservoirs make for more even grazing on the range."

One of the most popular features of the range conservation part of the Agricultural Conservation Program is the provision for payments for the construction of reservoirs. The county agricultural agents in the 173 Texas counties which are affected by the range conservation plan are reporting that most ranchmen are building one or several dams to impound reserves of water.

Ranchmen have long known that the concentration of animals around the water supply results in excess tramping and in overgrazing. As a result the area for a considerable distance round the watering place is usually bare of native grasses. In most cases these are replaced by weeds. In many instances, the area is a "blow hole." On the other hand, outlying ranges, far from water, are under grazed.

The establishment of more water reservoirs will promote balanced grazing. Extension Service livestock specialists also point out that it is reasonable to expect greater gains from livestock in cases where the distance to water is materially reduced.

NEWS OFFICE NOW HAS "CLEAN FACE" FOR INSPECTION

The Coryell County News has swept back the curtain on its activities for the gaze of an inquisitive public. For the first time in two years the front window has been washed!

The bitter complaints of Sports Editor Saunders, who had charge of the cleaning procedure, that he was "a journalist and not a window washer" had no effect on Editor Jones and today the window gleams like unto the shining pate of a bald-headed man. What was formerly supposed to be a grimy wall has been revealed as genuine plate glass, and woe be to he who besmirches that dazzling surface.

Dainty Hands Remove This Cap With Ease

Knife in Slot, Easy Twist, Off Comes Cap

HOUSEWIVES no longer need send out an SOS for two-fisted hubby to put on a kitchen wrestling match in opening some containers, which, like small boys, often stubbornly refuse to have their caps removed. Homemakers generally prefer the screw-on type of closure for glass jars, but even that popular cap sometimes is difficult to remove.

This perplexing problem has been solved by one progressive closure manufacturer who has introduced what is appropriately called a knife-opening cap. The cap is made of metal and differs from other closures in that on its top is a grooved slot.

To open any glass container equipped with this type of closure, simply tap around the outer rim of the cap with the knife handle, insert the blade of an ordinary table knife into the groove in the top of the cap. This supplies the necessary leverage to enable one to unscrew the cap. To reseal the jar, screw the cap on tightly by hand, or if you wish, you may again use the leverage of the knife to effect a seal as tight as the original.

Consumers acceptance of this new type cap is evidenced by the report from the manufacturer that many millions have been sold to food packers since the first of the year.

CASA MANANA MAKES GREAT START

Fort Worth, July 15—The Fort Worth Frontier Fiesta, featuring the 1937 Casa Manana Revue, this week got off to a flying start with a record attendance of 12,000 at the huge cafe-theatre alone on opening night.

As the successor attraction to the 1936 Frontier Centennial moved into high gear on its regular schedule, words of praise poured from the typewriters of eight distinguished newspaper and magazine critics who flew from New York for the formal opening.

Besides the huge crowd that three times jammed the house of tomorrow on opening night, thousands of persons witnessed these unique attractions that Billy Rose, Broadway showman deluxe, has placed on the grounds to make Fort Worth the fun spot of the Nation—Melody Lane, where famous composers play their own compositions; Firefly Garden, where the renowned Sallie Puppets perform; Pioneer Palace, already celebrated for the extraordinarily hilarious performance last year and the thrill show, "Flirting with Death."

Already the nation has learned that the Frontier Fiesta is even greater and more spectacular than the show last year. From the moment President Roosevelt, by remote control, severed the lariat stretched across the entrance of the grounds, there has been a continuous clicking of turnstiles as crowds poured in to see the galaxy of stars such as Paul Whiteman, Harriet Hocter, Everett Marshall and many others.

A completely new show is Casa Manana this year, using as its theme the four best selling books, "Gone With the Wind," "Wake Up and Live," "Lost Horizon" and "It Can't Happen Here."

YOUR CHILD AND THE SCHOOL

By Dr. ALLEN G. DEBLAND
Director, Physical and Health Education
New Jersey State Department of Public Instruction

The Afternoon Lift

Somehow, we overlook the fact that children get tired. Perhaps they keep going because of interest but really their nervous energy runs down to a low point. Parents and teachers should know this and provide for it. Give a "lift" is a popular expression.

It is important, of course, that one know how to do this, otherwise the child will not profit. Rest is desirable, but the child in returning home from school and all set to play, it is the last thing he wants. In fact, he rebels. The better plan is to insure the proper number of hours of sleep at night.

What, then, can we do about late afternoon lag? Personally, I favor the so-called after-school "snack." A light lunch at this time is apparently needed by many children. It restores the energy lost at school and prepares them for the outdoor play to which every child is entitled.

For this purpose, milk in some form is excellent. Fruit and fruit juices are also recommended. Small sandwiches and cereals with milk and sugar are very good. In giving solid food, however, we must restrict the amount if we find this luncheon is curbing the appetite for supper. Parents should watch this and provide accordingly. Incidentally, don't be disturbed if the child runs out to strenuous play after eating. His digestive machinery may be slowed a bit but it will work just as efficiently as ever.

SYNOPSIS

Jack Gordon, senior pilot of an air line, comes to New York on vacation but in an emergency, he is called back to fly a ship from Salt Lake City to San Francisco. He balks but changes his mind when he sees pretty Felice Rollins board the westbound plane. He helps her when she gets in difficulties about her ticket and she gives him a diamond ring. Jack takes that as a hint to get better acquainted but Felice ignores him. Other passengers on the plane are: Waldemar Pitt III, a troublesome society child and his governess, Miss Hawkins; Dr. Everts, a brain specialist; and a chap named Palmer.

CHAPTER III

The plane reached Chicago before sunup next morning, without Jack having made the slightest progress in his attempted conquest of the honey-haired blonde. She was cool to the point of fridity when he offered his assistance in providing her with breakfast so that Vi, with a grin, suggested as the pilot left the ship:

"How about paying me that two dollars now and saving postage?"

"We're not in Frisco yet," he replied grimly. Then, to Tex Noyle, the relief pilot, who loomed up through the darkness. "Hi-ya, you old triple-distilled buzzard—you flying us to Omaha? What's the weather west?"

"Good to Cheyenne," answered the lean and lanky airman as he pulled a weather map out of his pocket. Don't look so hot from there on. Last night they had a fog so thick even the birds had to walk."

"Hmmm!" Jack took the sheet and studied it thoughtfully. "Rain and snow and moving south fast—looks like we might reach Reno about the same time. That's not news—what is?"

He stopped talking abruptly and glanced toward the lunchroom of the airport, before the door of which Felice had become engaged in a heated argument with a swarthy, slick-haired individual whom Jack had never laid eyes on before. He watched for a moment, then as the quarrel became more violent, hurried over toward the girl. Noyle grinned after him pityingly—mixing dames and flying again, was he—then climbed into the cockpit of the ship and started warming the motors.

"You're a liar—an even more contemptible liar than your brother," Felice was storming at the stranger when Jack came within earshot.

"And you're a stupid, suspicious little fool," snapped slick-hair. "I tell you she's here and so is Alix—he has a lot of things he wants to discuss with you."

"I'd rather be dead than in the same room with him." Her eyes flashed.

"Now look here, Felice." Her unwelcome companion changed his tack and began to plead. "Katherine came to Chicago—I'll admit that—but neither of us knows where she is now and Alix doesn't care—you've got him all wrong."

"I don't believe you," Felice turned her back and started away.

"Wait a minute," snarled the man, grabbing her arm. "Let go of me." She tried to jerk away but he held her fast. "Katherine isn't in Chicago. She's on a west-bound train to San Francisco with Alix and I'm going after her."

"No you won't." He gripped her wrist and started dragging her away.

This was Jack's heaven-sent opportunity to be a knight in armor. "Oh, oh, naughty boy!" he said, stepping forward and cuffing the fellow's hands off Felice.

Like a flash the swarthy man swung a bony fist at the pilot. Jack ducked, straightened and connected one-two with the stranger's chin. The latter sagged to one knee and made a quick motion for his overcoat pocket. Jack kicked his hand as it brought a gun to light. As the weapon clattered to the ground its owner made a dive for it. Jack punted him out of the way and retrieved the gun.

"You go back to the ship," he said, turning to Felice, who had been watching breathlessly. "I'll take care of this mug."

"How about minding your own business?" The girl was suddenly furious to his complete amazement. "You've messed things up beautifully!" Without a backward glance she marched toward the plane. Hurt to the quick by such ingratitude, Jack ejected the shells

"I still do." His voice was defiant.

"And you tried to help me in spite of it? Why, how sweet of you. I'm sorry to have to solve this baffling mystery, Dr. Watson, but you see," she pointed to the front page. "I'm not this girl." She rapidly turned to the society section and held her photograph toward him. "I'm this girl."

As Jack stared, still half unbelievably, a dispatcher hurried up. "Pardon me, Jack," he said, "A message came through from Waller—said that Miss Rollins is okay—for you to apologize to her and give back her ring."

"So you are Miss Rollins," Jack muttered when they were alone again. "Then, if it isn't asking too much, would you mind telling who is the guy I just socked?"

"He's not a gangster," she

"You go back to the ship," Jack said to Felice. "I'll take care of this mug."

from the automatic, then returned the empty gun to the cowering foreigner.

"It's too bad," mumbled the latter, looking after the girl with venom in his black eyes. "She'd be much better off here in Chicago. It would save her a lot of headaches."

"Her head'll be all right. I'll see to that."

"Yeah?" The other snarled at him like a dog. Then a slow, enigmatic smile spread over his thin lips and he walked quickly away.

"You don't have to worry about that bozo any more," Jack began when he rejoined Felice at the ship.

"In the future, I'd prefer it if you'd permit me to handle my own affairs," answered the girl with a freezing look.

"That's gratitude for you," he shrugged. "But I know the set up."

"Set-up?"

"Now listen. I'll help you any way I can but you might try to help a little yourself."

"I'm sorry, but I really don't know what you're talking about."

"You don't, huh?" Jack was getting angry himself. "This is what I'm talking about." He thrust the newspaper at her and pointed to the paragraph about the girl jewel robber in the brown fur coat. Felice looked at it and frowned, not getting the connection for a moment. Then light dawned and she burst into laughter—loud, merry, almost uncontrollable. The airman stared at her in a daze.

"You mean that all the time you thought I was—this girl?"

smiled. "Merely a man I knew in Paris."

"Says here you socked some Russian duke over the head with an umbrella in a Paris night club and . . ."

"Yes . . . I read it," she cut him short.

"Here's your ring."

"No." She shook her head. "You keep it. That was the agreement. And it really isn't necessary for you to apologize. What you did tonight is one of the nicest things I ever had happen to me. I mean it. I'd forgotten that—well, that there was such a thing as chivalry."

"I left my armor home," he blushed. "It hurts my shins."

"I can't get over it," she continued seriously. It was then that the realization that Jack was pretty nice first struck her.

"I've been reading too many tabloids," he laughed uncomfortably. "Taking you for a bandit queen. That shows you how much I know about women. Lack of experience! That's my trouble."

"That's not really a usual disorder with you gentlemen of the air?"

"Well, you see flying's a pretty lonely sort of business . . ."

"Just a Hermit of the Clouds," she teased him solemnly.

"Yeah, sort of," he began, taking it big. Suddenly there was a commotion in the airport. A door flew open and a voluptuous blonde rushed toward the plane.

"Jackie! Baby!" she squealed with delight as she threw her arms around him and kissed him vigorously, leaving lipstick on his face. "Jackie, you old spare part. Gee, it's good to see you again."

FORMER CORYELL COUNTY LAD YODELS HIS WAY TO HOLLYWOOD

Following is a clipping from the Baylor County Banner which will interest many in Gatesville and Coryell County, especially those near Turnersville since the Stanford's were formerly of that place. The News joins young Stanford's many friends in wishing him continued success in his work:

"Seymour Lions who attended the banquet at Olney Tuesday evening were entertained by Zeke Williams and his Ramblin Cowboys. This organization was started in Seymour several years ago, and has since that time really gone places.

Zeke and the boys now play under the auspices of the Gulf company, and A. J. Cooper, local distributor of Gulf products was one of those who helped them get started. They broadcast over the Texas Quality Net Work, which includes WFAA-WBAP, each Tuesday and Friday at 8:00 a. m.

Besides Zeke, the only Seymourite left in the group is Everett "Hank" Stanford. Stanford is announcer, yodeler and bass fiddler for the orchestra just now, but he is on his way up starting immediately.

Recently Ted Fio Rito, who has one of the largest orchestras in the country, heard Stanford yodeling and after saying he was the best he had ever heard, he offered him a contract to be with Fio Rito both in appearances and motion picture work. The contract calls for a salary of over $100 week, with bonuses for the motion picture work soon to begin work on his first picture.

This is very satisfying to Seymour people, and the best of good wishes go with "Hank" on his new job, and Zeke as he continues his work in Dallas.

The boys took advantage of their being so close to home to drop over for a short visit with relatives and friends yesterday and today."

FRED ASTAIRE AND GINGER ROGERS ROLLER-SKATE 600 MILES

For the new filmical, showing at the Regal Theatre Saturday at 10:30 also Sun. and Mon., Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers have spent 32 hours on roller skate, doing their dance routine for their new RKO Radio musical, "Shall We Dance" and the scenes which lead up to it. Four full shooting days were required to film this sequence, and except for lunch hours, the stars never removed their skates during that working period.

While neither Astaire nor Miss Rogers wore a pedometer, thus making the actual figure a matter of conjectures, guesses on the number of miles they skated during the four days varied from 80 to 125. Except for brief rest periods, they were going at top speed all the time. Even when the camera setups were being changed and lights adjusted, the stars remained on the floor, practicing their dizzy whirls and spins.

Counting the distance traversed during their weeks of rehearsal, it is estimated that the stars have skated close to 600 miles.

Their unique skating dance was done on a specially prepared and surfaced cement floor designed to permit high speed and smooth rolling. Thanks to their rehearsal training, the stars emerged from the grind almost completely free of muscle soreness. Not so fortunate were Harry Cornbleth and Marie Osborne who, as their stand-ins, were required to work on skates while posing for set lighting and camera focusing. Both were so stiff they could scarcely walk when the routine was finally completed.

The skating number is one of the several dance routines, all created by Astaire and said to possess novel themes and back backgrounds, which feature the Pandro S. Berman production which Mark Sandrick directed. Music for the picture was written by George and Ira Gershwin and Mrs. Elsie Smith of Lammon; Mr. and Mrs. Guy Yard, Mr. and Mrs. Whitt Rivers; Mrs. Mary Rivers and little daughter; Mr. and Mrs. Grover Ragan and family, Miss Fay Yard.

We're all wishing Uncle Tom a speedy recovery and hope to see him up soon and back at his home in Crawford.

FEATURES of INTEREST

PROGRESS REPORT OF SCS GIVEN TUES. NITE

DR. BENNETT'S ADDRESS MAIN FEATURE OF DUBLIN PROGRAM

Dr. Bennett's address was the principal feature of a meeting planned in his honor and sponsored by Future Farmers of America from 78 high schools in the 34 counties of Texas Area IV, of which John Tarleton College is headquarters. Before he spoke, guests toured the watershed conservation area to observe methods of correct land utilization. The tour was arranged by experts of the Green Creek conservation staff in cooperation with Dublin businessmen.

Music by the Dublin band, the FFA opening ceremony by the Dublin FFA chapter and their advisor J. H. Taylor began the lecture session held at the Majestic Theater. Reginal Macmillan of Bradshaw, president of Area IV FFA, introduced Regional Soil Conservator L. P. Merrill of Fort Worth, who in turn introduced Dr. Bennett.

Outlining the extent of land disintegration which has resulted from exploitation of land resources, Dr. Bennett said: "The condition of our agriculture land in the southeast farming states, in Texas and Oklahoma, and in parts of Kansas, Colorado, Iowa, Illinois and many other states, is evidence that the people of this youthful nation have been squandering their rich heritage of productive land more rapidly than any other nation, civilized or barbaric, of which we have any record."

The national program of soil and water conservation now in progress he characterized as the beginning of a new area of land defense.

He emphasized the responsibility of the whole people—business and professional men, landowners, technicians, legislators, educators, ministers, the press, the radio, and local and national organizations—for cooperation in the program of safeguarding our land.

"Accelerated soil erosion presents the nation, not merely the individual land owners, with a physical land crisis of enormous importance to the continuing welfare of agriculture in particular, and the entire social and economic structure in general. Moreover, beyond this most acute aspect of the whole land problem, there exists the physical fact that there can be no permanent control of floods or prevention of stream and reservoir silting until run-off is better controlled over entire watersheds, instead of along stream channels after floods have arrived with their loads of suspended soil. Control of erosion is the first and most essential step in the direction of correct land utilization on something like 75 per cent of the present and potential cultivated area of the nation."

Bennett visited only the Green Creek watershed project and the

SEASONAL JOB SHEET FOR COOPERATORS

Cooperators of the local Soil Conservation Camp are urged to make special efforts since recent rains, to have teams, tools, and labor ready to finish and sodding operations yet to be done on their individual farms in order to give adequate erosion control as well as complete the cooperative agreement in this respect.

The recent rains will insure a live of grass on all areas to be sodded. Plans have been made to release all work crews on this one phase of the program until all available sodding operations have been finished. In limited cases, the rains may have done damage to newly sodded waterways in such instances maintenance work will be necessary.

Generally speaking, most farming operations require limited time now, considering that the grain crop has been harvested and that corn has been laid-by. In consideration of the above, the following jobs may be done in the futherer of the cooperative agreements which would otherwise be present during "rush periods" showing up during harvest or land preparation.

1. Plow out streak furrows or construct contour ridges on all land to be sodded and cover sod when placed.
2. Clean pastures of brush, prickly pear and stumps to permit mowing.
3. Mow all pasture areas.
4. Complete and repair all contour ridges and furrows.
5. Distribute fencing material for pasture fencing.
6. Plow in all active gullies in pasture areas and sod to grass.
7. Collect and storage grass and clover seeds.
8. Construct summer terraces on small grain stubble land and all other available areas.
9. Complete all terrace ends.

conservation project at Nacogdoches during his visit to Texas. After the conservation meeting, he was honor guest at a dinner given by the Dublin Development Club. Other special guests were: Louis P. Merrill, Regional SCS Conservator, A. J. Spangler, F.F.A. Advisor of Area IV, R. B. Mefferd, Supervisor Vocational agriculture Area IV, Paul H. Walser, J. W. Sargent, and G. H. Fletcher, State Conservation Coordinators for Texas, Arkansas, and Louisiana, H. N. Smith, Assistant State SCS Coordinator, R. E. Dickson, Spur Experiment Station, R. M. Millhollin and V. M. Woodman, SCS Project Managers from San Angelo and Temple, State Senators E. M. Davis and Manley Head from Brownwood and Stephenville, V. C. Marshall, member State Soil Conservation Committee, Temple, and County agents, C. V. Robinson, Guy Powell, L. L. Ballard, G. D. Everett from Coleman, Coryell Stephens, and Erath counties.

SENATOR CONNALLY URGES ASSISTANCE OF FARM TENANT

Washington, D. C.—Senator Tom Connally was active in aiding the passage of the Farm Tenant Bill in the Senate last week. Not only did the Texas Senator advocate the passage of the Farm Tenant Bill, but he sought to amend the bill to provide additional money for land purchasing, which would have meant land and homes for a larger number of tenants. The bill was passed, but without the Connally amendment.

The bill calls for the placing of deserving tenants upon their own land; the land to be amortized over a period not to exceed 50 years at a three per cent rate of interest. Senator Tom Connally expressed himself strongly favoring the bill, but felt that the sum of money authorized insufficient to substantially reduce the tenant problem.

As passed the bill authorizes the appropriation of $10,000,000 the first year, $25,000,000 the second year, and $50,000,000 the third year. The Connally amendment would have permitted the spending of $50,000,000 the first and second year as well as the third.

Senator Connally, in his plea for additional funds to place worthy tenants on their own land, stated the purpose of the bill in the following manner:

"This bill provides for the selection of industrious, successful farmers and for putting them on the land land letting them work out their own salvation. We appropriated $300,000,000 for resettlement but purposely only $10,000,000 for a substantial, sound program looking to the future. We need $50,000,000 more in the beginning of the program to take some of these people now on the W.P.A. and relief rolls and put them on these farms and give them some opportunity and some ambition and some hope.

"We appropriated $1,500,000,000 for so-called relief, free relief, imaginary relief, temporary relief, work relief, but we only propose to appropriate $10,000,000 for the tenant farmers of America to rebuild the civic structure of this Nation and provide homes in which a man when he gets home at night can feel he is anchored in the soil and that his children may grow up with the satisfaction that they are sheltered by the roof of their own parents rather fills and cuts immediately after construction.

10. Cut weeds in outlet channels.
11. Plow up all terraces which do not have growing crops on them in such a manner as not to affect the grade.
12. Break or list all fields to be nearly stripped on the contour.
13. List old crop strip areas.
14. Scatter sorghum seeds in gully when laying-by crops.

At a watermelon cut at the CCC camp last Tuesday night, prominent business men and farmers of the county heard the progress report of the activities of the local camp and expressed their approval of the splendid work that has been done in this sector.

The gathering, promoted by the Agricultural Committee of Coryell County which is composed of D. I. Glass, Monroe Blankenship, and chairman W. E. Lasseter, brought together members of the Chamber of Commerce and farmers of the county to promote better understanding of the benefits of the soil conservation program.

The welcoming address was given by E. E. McAllister, the technical supervisor of the camp, and the response was made by J. Hurl McClellan,

The Farm Tenant bill which passed the Senate had previously passed the House of Representatives in a slightly different form. The difference will have to be ironed out in conference before the bill is sent to the President for his signature.

WORLD COMMENT

Joe Burns

THE PASSING OF AN ERA

June marked the passing of the era of Allied supremacy in Europe.

The first thirty-six years of the twentieth century will in the historical compilations of the future be divided into two divisions or eras. The first period extended from the turn of the century until the Allied military and diplomatic victory in 1918. The second division included the period from 1918 to 1937. In the first era we witnessed a virtual balance of power between the major nations of Europe. The six great continental states—Britain, France, Russia, Germany, Italy, Austria-Hungary—were divided into two alliances of such balanced strength that for almost four years they contended with one another with neither able to gain the ascendancy. Only the intervention of the United States turned the tide of war definitely in favor of the Allied Powers.

This balance of power was destroyed by the Treaty of Versailles, which stripped Germany and her allies of colonial domains, military and naval armaments, and imposed crushing financial and commercial burdens upon the Central Powers. Germany, Austria, Hungary, and Bulgaria were placed in a position of subservience to the victorious states.

In 1933 Germany emerged from a state of subservience and in successive stages has repudiated the Versailles Treaty and revoked its provisions. But Adolph Hitler and his National Socialist party were not able to return Germany to its pre-war status of military, diplomatic, financial and commercial supremacy on the European continent. Four years of labor brought the Third Reich near a position of military dominance, although the last three objectives have not been attained, but it took a Russian madman to reverse the eighteen-year old Allied military domination of Europe. Just as in the first two decades of this century a mad Russian monk changed the course of the world and Czarist history, so has Josef Stalin, semi-invalid and crazed dictator of Soviet Russia, rendered his own state virtually impotent as a military factor and restored Germany to its position of military supremacy in Europe.

The events of June in Russia are well known by readers of this column. The terrorist campaign which has racked Russia since the inauguration of the Communist regime as did the Protestant purges in England and the tortures of the Inquisition in Spain flared anew in a series of executions which not only deprived the Russian Red Army of its best brains but revealed a counter-revolutionary movement extant in Russia which constitutes a serious menace to the Stalin regime.

French military strategists, in close touch with Russian military and diplomatic events by virtue of the Franco-Soviet mutual assistance treaty, readily admit that they can no longer count upon Russian assistance in a war with Germany. Mrshl Tukhachevsky, one of the Red generals executed for alleged "treasonable activities," was responsible for transforming the Soviet army from a propaganda machine to an effective fighting unit. It was this transformation that caused jittery French diplomats to overlook the dangers of an alliance with a Communist state and sign on the dotted line with the Soviets. Stalin's fear that these army will slip from his grasp caused him to execute its independent leaders and substitute for them control of the army by Communist party leaders.

There is another factor to be considered in this abrupt shifting of the balance of power in Europe. This is the French political situation. As in this country, the French treasury has been expanding more than it has been taking in for the social reforms of an idealistic, liberal reformer. Fortunately for the French, a thrifty Senate refused to grant dictatorial powers to Premier Leon Blum by which additional funds might have been raised at the expense of taxpayers. Blum was turned out of office for a more conservative leader, Camille Chautemps, substituted in his place.

Blum was in office long enough to virtually bankrupt the country, however, and today the French treasury is in a perilous condition. French taxpayers have found that they must pay for unbalanced budgets, public works, and social reform. As a result of the weakened condition of the French treasury and of finance there in general, French military prestige has dropped decidedly.

June, 1937, marked the passing of the era of Allied supremacy in Europe and witnessed the emergency of a new area with Germany as the dominating military and commercial power on the continent. Whether the Reich will regain its financial and diplomatic dominance no one can foretell.

Germany's army is undoubtedly the most potent in Europe. Created in the amazing period of scarcely 3 years, composed of the latest and most deadly armaments, it constitutes a force likened unto the Kaiser's Imperial Army of 1914 which is feared by every people, every state on the European continent.

Britain, by definitely allying herself with her former associated friends of the continent, would reverse the trend which took place in June. But this Britain has signified no intention of doing. Since the war youth in Britain has maintained frankly and determinedly that it will fight only in self-defense. In the face of a stand like this by the boys who would constitute the first line of defense, there is but one alternative for Downing Street to pursue: remain aloof from European entanglements, and strive to preserve the peace.

Meanwhile, Germany marches on.

MRS. W. J. WATSON HOSTESS TO JONESBORO W.M.S.

The Jonesboro W.M.S. met July 6 at the hospitable home of Mrs. W. J. Watson. The meeting was opened by the President, Mrs. Melbin Watson followed by Mrs. W. J. Watson reading a number of accomplishments the colored race of our nation has done. Since our program subject was on "Negroes" these thoughts were very interesting. I feel sure that few people know of these accomplishments. Do you know—

- That a negro invented the "Stop and Go" signal?
- That a negro invented the player piano?
- That a negro invented the telephone transmitter?
- That a negro invented the airship's stabilizer?
- That a negro invented improved valves for steam engines?
- That the first missionary from Southern Baptist territory to Africa was a negro?
- That a negro was awarded the Spingram medal in 1924?
- That it was on July 4th a negro Booker T. Washington, opened Tuskegee Institute in Alabama?
- That a negro composed the song, "When They Ring Those Golden Bells for Me?"
- Prayer of Praise for our nation and its citizens was led by Mrs. C. T. Huggins. Scripture reading; "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel," selected from Matt. 28th chapter, 19-20 verses given by Mrs. Sallie Farquhar. Vocal solo followed by Mrs. Melvin Watson. "Introducing the Negro," Miss Winnie Mirgan; "His Continent," by Miss Annie Ruth Morgan; "His Culture," by Mrs. Ira Mays; "His Sorrows" by Mrs. Ema Drake followed with the song, "When They Ring Those Golden Bells For Me," sung in unison.

Prayer by Mrs. H. H. Maynes. A very interesting study on the book entitled "Things We Should Know," given by Mrs. H. H. Haynes. Closing prayer by Mrs. Melvin Watson.

The hostess served delicious ice cream to 22 guests. The social hour conducted by Mrs.

Marvin Watson was indeed pleasant, affording much amusement. The next meeting will be at the home of Mrs. Marvin Watson on July 20. Mrs. C. T. Huggins of Fort Worth was an out of town visitor. We welcome all visitors. Reporter, Mrs. Ema Drake

Miss Grace Lesar, who has been visiting relatives in Houston returned to her home in this city the latter part of last week. She was accompanied by Miss Betty Lou Sylvester of that place who will spend the summer here with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Laudermilk and other relatives.

Enjoy this Summer!

THE DUST OF KINGS

By Frank E. Simmons

Lampasas, "Lilly Pads," for that is the interpretation of the Spanish name of that beautiful river. It flows thru a wide basin in our beautiful hill country. Most of the soil is stubborn and stony, but in its clutches many people think it holds the dust and wealth of an Aztec king.

After Cortez's first entry into the City of Mexico the native warriors arose and drove the Spaniards and their Flascalon allies out, but not until they had filched the city of several million dollars worth of gold. Before the second attack upon the city by the Spaniards, and their hundred thousand Indian allies, the Montezuma notified Cortez that if he was able to capture the city he would find it barren of gold. When the Indian monarch was convinced that a second attack was about to be made upon the city, he stripped it of every particle of gold and on the backs of fleet footed Indians sent it to the far outposts of the Aztec empire to be hidden in the earth. That was in 1519. Pictograph maps were made so that in the future this hidden treasure could be located by the proper owners. Legends say that the Mexican Charts we hear so much about have been in the secret possession of Aztec descendants all through the centuries and are now being used to locate Mexican gold.

Could old King Tut be brought to Coryell County and be shown the tomb of an ancient Aztec king that legends say the unrelenting hills hold in their miserly grip, he would turn green with envy. The proverbial Mexican came to the Lampasas with a chart, and fell in with a wood chopper. He was looking for a tomb containing three vaults, lined with solid masonry. A location was made and upon excavation some modern coffin handles were found. Our Mexican had read his chart wrong. To him the tomb is still lost, but one man, if not more, has it located.

In the hills north of Owl Creek, a hill farmer walks over this tomb every time he walks from his front yard gate into the house. Think of it, he nightly snores in peaceful slumber within the length of his bed of a tomb containing three chambers one of them empty. The middle one contains the dust of an ancient monarch and a jade, sacred turquoise and brilliant pearls. A crown that King Philip in all his glory, was too poor to duplicate. The Aztec goldsmiths were the most excellent the world has ever seen, and into the third chamber of this vault was thrown a load after load of gold trinkets representing birds, beasts, gods and every other conceivable form. They were not jack loads, for there were no jacks available to Mexicans of that time. They were man loads. Men bore the burdens of that day.

"Yes," my informant says. "It is there in that farm yard. I have tromped all over it. But what am I to do about it?" There it is where it has lain for more than four centuries. Who will contrive to redeem it? Will a dead monarch's dust someday be thrown out to mingle with the soil, and his gold be dissipated in riotous living?

In connection with this tomb that holds the dust, and wealth, of an ancient Indian king, there are some strange weird stories.

W. A. Mathney, of Waco and others have done a lot of exploring in the region along a route that follows an approximately straight line from the mouth of Owl Creek on the Leon river to Sugar Loaf mountain. The king's tomb is somewhat north of this line. On the Leon at our starting point Mathney and his confederates believe they have found the remains of an ancient dam that once impounded a large supply of water. Near this dam, Mathney found the entrance to a cave in the south bank of the river. The entrance had been sealed and was visible only at low tide.

(In reference to the damsite found by W. A. Mathney on the Leon river, it is not ancient at all. Descendants of pioneers tell of a mill dam and mill that "Old Captain Graham" once had on the Leon river at this place. I. C. Donaldson, now 65 years old and living at McGregor, remembers having been to mill at this place. We infer that "Old Captain Graham" means Capt. Gideon, Graham whose small son was killed by the Comanche Indians. Mr. Graham's early settlement was near The Grove.)

Following the line toward Sugar Loaf more caves were found. In one of them was found the skeleton of a man chained to a copper peg driven into the living rock. Nearby were more skeletons. Further on toward Sugar Loaf was a strange well that afforded an abundance of water which flows so strongly when the wind blows from the south that it floats out green leaves and living anamils, and furnishes a draft of air sufficiently strong to blow, "your hat off". When the wind is from the north the well almost dries up. Mathney comments that in all probability a subterranean cavern of vast proportions and length furnishes the air draught mentioned above. Numerous openings along this route leading to subterranean debts have been found by diligently searching the stony hills.

Over near Sugar Loaf are numerous caves, and a surveyor has been asked to trace line and carved symbols to their focal point. The point of supreme interest, is back in the hills north of Owl Creek, but on the way back let us go by Stovalls Cove, south of Owl Creek. Here many years ago Luther Stovall began the excavation of a curious cave in a bluff on his farm. The remains showed it to predate any Spanish influence. Hundreds of stone artifacts were found and the remains of numerous human beings. The Camp refuse had accumulated to several feet in debt. On numerous stones were carved many signs and symbols that could not be interpreted by the excavator. Below the cave, in the field was an extensive midden extremely rich in stone age artifacts. In this field, a man whom we are not permitted to name retrieved a piece of jade of several ounces weight, and a number of pieces of obsidian. There is no known source of supply for obsidian within seven hundred miles of Stovall's farm, and no man knows the source of the jade.

From Stovall's farm it is but a few miles into the hills north of Owl Creek to where strange things have happened. Some prospectors began to notice carving on stones. Drawn bows and arrows; three of them at different places, hundreds of yards apart. Spears, tomahawks and other symbols. Upon close study of these symbols it was that they focused on point. After months of exploring a few large stones were removed from a place on a hill overlooking a narrow deep valley. A shaft large enough for a man to go down into was revealed. In time this was penetrated to a depth of about thirty feet. Here a tunnel was found striking down at forty five degree angle. Here, in direct contact with limestone, was a very hard red sandstone dyke. A considerable part of the red sandstone had been hammered off and removed from the tunnel. Evidently it was an abandoned mine. Back on the surface a hammered copper spear head and a hammered copper knife were found. Copper was in common use among the Aztecs and other Mexican nations.

An Indian interpreter was brought to the scene. The Indian declared that the three bows and arrows indicated that three severe battles, between Indians had been fought there. Other symbols indicated that this had been a place of great importance to some ancient nation of Indians. Whatever the importance this place had for ancient men it is now no less important to modern men. It has furnished a legend, a dream of wealth and the hope of high adventure that ever tugs at the heart of man. There are no less than three separate parties, some of them professional men dreaming, of the gold that they believe to be hidden at the bottom of the ancient shaft. One party, a man and a woman from Waco, penetrated to the bottom of this hole in the gloom of a dismal rainy night. Their diving rod cut all kind of capers while around and in the shaft.

One of the caves on the line of strange signs and symbols has a very distinctly modern tinge in it so far as its contents are concerned. In this cave, five hundred feet, or was it yards W. A. Mathney found the Wells Fargo Express Company's strong box. This cave is big enough to take a horse into. Mathney hitched a horse to the handle of this box to try to draw it from the crevice in the rock. It was wedged so tightly that the handle pulled off, leaving the box. It is a copper box, and is still there according to Mathney.

A Sailor Wins a Home

Lieut. Richard F. Armknecht, U. S. N., smiles his thanks to Professor Quiz, famous "question-and-answer" man, who has just awarded him first prize in the national Kelvin Home contest—a new Kelvin Home, completely equipped with year-round air conditioning, electric refrigerator, electric range and electric laundry equipment. There were more than 140,000 other entries in the contest, which called for the completion of a partially-filled word square.

Lieutenant Armknecht, who is married and the father of two children, will have the home built in Cambridge, Mass. He is a graduate of the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis and received a Master's Degree from Rennselaer Polytechnic Institute. He is at present stationed at the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

A Virginia housewife, Mrs. Magnus M. Lewis Jr. of Fredericksburg, and a Detroit railroad man, Burch H. Springer, won other major prizes, each receiving a Nash car. More than a thousand other prizes were also distributed, consisting of Kelvinator products and cash awards.

The contest was conducted to focus public interest upon the advances made in the past few years in the design and manufacture of household appliances which have lowered the cost of better living.

KELVINATOR CERTIFICATE OF LOW COST OF OPERATION

The letter depends largely upon the following:

1. Amount of ice and dessert leaving.
2. Frequency with which the cooling unit is defrosted.
3. Maintenance of excessively low temperatures for any period of time.
4. Room temperature.
5. The greater the usage required, the greater will be the amount of electric current consumed with a less efficient refrigerator.
6. Statistics show that the average day and night year-round temperature in any part of the country is between 70 degrees and 80 degrees Fahrenheit.
7. The average year-round temperature in your kitchen, therefore, probably falls somewhere between these two figures.
8. In order to estimate the amount of electricity consumed by this Kelvinator in your kitchen, take into consideration all the usage you will demand of it throughout the year—add from 90 to 150 kilowatt-hours per year to the figures shown below for operation without load on the average temperature of your kitchen.

STUDENT DESCRIBES MANY NORWEGIAN CUSTOMS

Following is an excerpt from the Clifton Record which will be of interest to a wide circle of friends in this city and county.

From Campus Chat, Denton: Norwegian customs, dress, and scenery were discussed in the class in Clothing Design Tuesday by Miss Hannah Hoff, junior student in the college. Miss Hoff who lives at Clifton, Texas, and whose grandparents came America from Norway, wore the Norwegian national costume—a full black woolen skirt, long-sleeved, white blouse, velvet jacket and cap, white apron, beaded girdle, and silver brooch.

She explained that this costume is now worn only on holidays and other special occasions, that the apron represents the district or state of the wearer, and that the beaded girdle is representative of certain standings.

Miss Hoff illustrated her talk with slides showing Norwegian buildings, scenery dress and customs. She sang two songs in Norwegian, one a love song and the other the familiar "Silent Night."

The costume which Miss Hoff wore will be on display the remainder of this week on the third floor of the Manual Arts building, according to Miss Claire Dodson, teacher in the home economics department.—The Clifton Record.

FUNERAL SERVICES FOR BUFORD W. WALTON THURSDAY

Buford W. Walton, one of Hamilton county's most substantial citizens, a farmer of the Ireland section, passed away at the Central Texas Baptist Hospital in Waco on Wednesday morning July 7, at three o'clock. His death followed an operation for gall stones with a peritonitis complication. Mr. Walton had not been in vigorous health for a long period of time, but the end came unexpectedly to relatives and friends not fully acquainted with his condition.

Funeral services were held at the family home on Thursday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock, and burial was made in the Wiley Grubbs cemetery near Ireland.

Mr. and Mrs. Carter W. Walton, Mr. and Mrs. Leo F. Rendessey and other relatives and family connections in and around Hamilton attended the obsequies.

Buford W. Walton was a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Walton, who was prominently identified with the early life of Hamilton county. He was born in the state of Kentucky in 1871. The family came to Texas somewhere around 1890, and settled a few years later on Blue Ridge in Hamilton County. Buford Walton lived continuously in that section until called to his eternal home. His devoted companion is the former Lula Grubbs, and she with their only child, Miss Maude Walton, survive to mourn the loss of one, who to them was ever affectionate, considerate, and a good provider. Other survivors are three brothers and three sisters. The brothers are, William T. Walton and Tom E. Walton, of near Hamilton; Jim Walton, of the Moline section of Lampasas county. The sisters are Mrs. Annie Craddock, of Louisville, Kentucky, Mrs. Mary Walton Moor, Star, and Mrs. Ina Moore Hicks, of Moline. Mr. Walton is mourned by a number of nephews and nieces and other kin as well as a host of friends.

Mourning loved ones offered the consolation of the tender and understanding sympathy of every one who knows them and the good man, who has gone to his reward of Eternal life in the company of angels around the throne of the Father.

KNOW TEXAS

DENTON, JULY 7. When East Texas is mentioned the Magic word "oil" blots out all lesser ideas associated with the country. But no matter how much the tourist has heard about the vastness of the East Texas oil field, it will surpass all expectations.

Around Henderson, Glade-water, Tyler and other cities in the heart of the oil field the derricks are so thickly planted that they appear like a forest. At night this section is like a mammoth, gaily lighted carnival. All the picturesque characteristics of a country on the boom are visible from the thronging population and the shiny new houses and stores to the hundreds of by-product industries that follow any kind of discovered wealth. The traveler with a sociological turn of mind can view first hand what happens to a town like Longview, for instance, when its population shoots up from 5,000 to 25,000 over a short period of time.

The oil contry has other boasts to make, however, and in Tyler one sees the beds which furnish nearly half the nation's supply of roses. Festivals take the spotlight at Jacksonville, where the early summer visitor can view celebrations in honor of King and Queen Tomato.

History comes into the picture at Nacogdoches, where the Old Stone Fort is located, and down near Livingston the Alabama-Conshatti Indian Reservation provides interest. Both of Sam Houston's homes are open for inspection at Huntsville.

A trip down into the Southeast corner of the state places one in the midst of the greatest petroleum refining community in the world; and if the visitor is weary of seeing oil wells and refineries, the Gulf is nearby and various resorts are sprinkled heavily along the coast.

SECOND Anniversary

TO OUR FRIENDS AND CUSTOMERS:

We have been in Gatesville nearly two years. We want to thank each and every one that has had a part in making our business what it is.

We handle a complete line of McCORMICK-DEERING tractor and machines and genuine McCORMICK-DEERING parts. Don't be misled by someone selling inferior parts. The genuine may seem a little higher at the time you buy them, but they are cheaper in the long run, as well as experienced men working on your tractor. Money you have tied up in your machine can't be tampered with. You can't afford to let Tom, Dick and Harry fool with it when you can get a man that knows his business and got the equipment to do it wiith.

Why buy a machine and equipment that you can't get repairs for, or find a man that knows how to repair it?

Study this problem over and if you need some work done, give us a ring—day or night.

If you need to buy anything in our line, we would be glad to talk it over with you.

Again thanking you for your past business and hoping to retain it, we are,

Yours very truly,

Poston Brothers

Beginning with this issue this department will henceforth devote its space to short semi-weekly messages calculated to inspire and uplift. Everyday problems that are encountered in all walks of life will be dealt with in a manner that will be comprehensible and practical. From the crowded metropolitan centers and the peaceful rural scenes will come these questions that are a constant thorn in the side of the American public; from the Pierian Spring that we have drunk so deeply of and from the checkered career we have lead will come the answers to these annoyances.

If there is any doubt in the mind of any reader as to the ability of this department to undertake such a serious objective let him put his mind at rest. From our weighty years and wandering life on the troubled face of this planet has come a philosophy and outlook that neither an upheaval of nature or eight straight snake-eyes at a gaming table could upset. Through the medium of the printed page we shall exercise the prerogative of the Fourth Estate, to shake the warning finger and the wagging head at our neighbor, but only in the event that it becomes necessary. In the main we shall press only upon the straight and narrow. We shall extend the helping hand and the kindly word. Our only reward will be the thought that somewhere, someone will be benefited, their burdens will be made a little lighter by these age-tempered words of wisdom.

Casting about for a suitable problem to inaugurate these series we ran the gamut of human emotions before finally coming up triumphantly with this sockdologer—"What To Do About the Guest Towel Menace."

There comes a time in everyone's life, be he rich man, poor man, horse thief, or zither player, when he is compelled to pay a visit that he can not get out of—a visit in a home where he does not feel on the easiest of footing. A home where he feels that he must proceed with caution for on every hand criticizing eyes loom out, quick to catch his slightest error and to make mock (behind his back) of his crude and uncouth ways. Consequently his nerves are tightened to the breaking point. He is edged up to a tension that he hopes he can maintain until he can escape from this blank (fervent profanity) household and back onto familiar ground.

To properly set the stage with a time element, let us say he embarks upon his visit at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. That is the time when his collar-wilting stay begins in this stilted household.

"Br-r-r," goes the door bell, and he straightens his necktie preparatory to the zero hour when his hostess greets him.

For a time he does fairly well, although he wonders where in the name of demented furniture manufacturers they got the atrocity he is sitting in. The subjects of conversation run along such interesting lines as, "Unusual weather we're having at this time of the year," . . . Whatever became of that Schintzel woman who had such a crush on that snuff salesman?" . . . and other similar topics.

His host usually arrives on the scene about 6:30 and his entrance creates a momentary diversion. Soon things resume their normal course, however, and the poor visitor starts mentally twirling his thumbs again and wondering how soon he can politely take his leave of this den of deadening anguish.

Finally dinner is announced. (Back home you call it "supper.") With an arch leer of his eyebrows your host inquires if you would like to "wash up" before sitting down to partake of his board. With an obsequious gesture you indicate you would. And so he parades you through several rooms, and leaves you alone with your thoughts at last.

Here we have reached the crux of our problem. Hanging on a translucent shining rod by the wash basin is a small square of expensive fabric, adorned with painstaking embroidery, monograms, or other forms of feminine craftsmanship. You approach it cautiously and gingerly inspect it. "Blue-blazing thunder bolts," you groan, "another guest towel!"

What can be done about this parasite of the American bathroom? It is a physical impossibility to use it for the primary purpose of a towel, that of drying the hands and face after performing ablutions calculated to send one forth into the gaze of a critical public with a shining physiognomy and pinky paws. The guest towel is of neither size nor texture to perform that essential function. A daring pioneer in Tonowanda, Wisconsin, tried it once back in 1903. Now he is confined in an asylum for the mentally unbalanced and all he can mutter is, "Give me a postage stamp. I can do better with it."

What then is the solution for this burning question? Is one to sidestep the issue by wetting the hands and patting them gently on this monstrosity of society, trying to achieve the effect of having used the towel? No hostess has ever been fooled by that. Is one to look in the linen closet and brazenly pull out a mansized towel for his need? The average visitor rarely has the courage. The rough neck can rip out his shirt tail and hastily dry his face on it, but what of the opposite sex? The feminine visitor has no convenient shirt tail to extract.

What then is the solution???

Apparently there is no answer to this question. This issue isn't to be passed over that lightly however. There is something that can be done to this threat to a clean-visaged public.

Proceed in your marine activities, being sure to use a copious amount of water. And when you feel that you are clean if not dry, make not the slightest motion toward the guest towel. Walk right out of the bathroom into the dining room with water streaming down from your countenance and running in little rivulets down to the floor. You look like some spectre risen from Davy Jones's locker, but the result will be effective on your hostess.

She will give one frightened squawk when you walk into the room and then subside into embarrassed silence. Your host will probably take one look at you and roar with laughter, explaining in choked glee that he has had the same trouble with guest towels. Then you prove your mettle. If you break down and try to pass it off as a joke your sause is lost. The thing to do is preserve a frigid silence and cast penetrating stares at your hostess all during the meal. When she grows restless in her chair and begins to toy with her food you may rest assured your point is won. If you catch her stealing a surreptitious look at your damp countenance it will be all the better. You can fix her with an accusing glare.

Will Rogers' Humorous Story

By WILL ROGERS

A COUPLE of fellers were arguing in a hotel about some word or other that neither one seemed to know the meaning of, so that naturally led to a general discussion of words in general.

One of these here guys finally got pretty sarcastic like and said to the other, "You're so darn smart, you are, why I bet you don't even know who wrote the dictionary."

"Don't I though," said the other one, "well, I just bet you that I do."

"All right then, you're on. Tell me who was it that wrote the dictionary?"

"Why you poor sap, it was Dan'l Webster," was the reply.

"Daniel Webster, nothing," said the wise Aleck, "it was Noah."

"Noah, hell," said the other, "Noah ult the Ark."

WASHINGTON NEWS

CONGRESSMAN

W. R. PORGE

The debate on the judicial re-organization bill has commenced in the Senate and apparently little is to be done in either House until that is completed. Anyway the House has accomplished very little this week. In the Senate the original court bill has already been discarded and a completely new bill offered in its place. Some very well considered speeches are being made on both sides and I am sure many more will be made. I am trying to hear all I can of the discussion for my own information. However, the House is in session most of the time that the Senate debates.

There have been some thirty thousand Boy Scouts here for the past week and each day there have been hundreds of them visiting the Capital and other hundreds on all of the streets. I was very proud of the group from Central Texas and only wish that all our boys might have had this opportunity to visit the Nation's Capitol. Each night of the Jamboree, the Boy Scouts presented pageants and stunts in a huge open air arena. Wednesday night the Texas group presented their part of the program and were well received by the vast audience. Thursday President Roosevelt reviewed the thirty thousand Boy Scouts by driving down Constitution Avenue between the columns of these scouts.

Thursday, the House voted 205 to 128 to repeal the so-called 'married persons' clause of the Economy Act of 1932. This clause (Section 213) has been variously described and I think unnecessarily misrepresented by a great group of organizations that have been seeking its repeal ever since it was passed. They say it discriminates against women and against low paid employees. In my opinion both of these claims are ridiculous. The Section which was repealed reads as follows. "Section 213. In any reduction of personnel in any branch or service of United States Government or the District of Columbia, married person (living with husband or wife) employed in the class to be reduced, shall be dismissed before any other persons employed in such class are dismissed, if such husband or wife is also in the service of the United States or the District of Columbia. In the appointment of persons to the classified civil service, preference shall be given to persons other than married persons living with husband or wife, such husband or wife being in the service of the United States or the District of Columbia." I cannot see anything objectionable about this language. I voted against repealing it and in fact voted to strengthen it and extend it to every governmental agency, including the Congress, the Executive and the Judiciary. It is a strange fact that there are no federal laws against nepotism and the Federal departments are full of whole families on the government pay roll. I believe that as far as possible every salary the government pays should support a family and in each time we allow two or more of the same family to hold Federal jobs we make it impossible for some other family to have even one bread winner employed, and with the reduction that must necessarily take place in the Federal departments in the near future it is going to be the more unfortunate that this section was repealed.

Just yesterday, the president called the heads of all the independent agencies before him to discuss ways of carrying out a 10 per cent cut in their expenditures for the coming year. Early in the week he ordered such a cut which would result in a saving of nearly $400,000,000.00 to the taxpayers. I heartily approve of the reduction and believe it can be made without any material loss to the government but I hope that all of our people will realize that such a reduction can not be made without throwing thousands of people out of Federal jobs and that, if it is done, will be utterly impossible to find new jobs for the thousands who are now applying for Federal places.
