AUGUST TENTH

Don't mean a thing! At least, unless you join the Calvacade to Hamilton.

Hamilton, on that date, is the local point of high-wayical aspirations of Highway 36 Association, and that includes, whether you have ever "joined" or not, every citizen in Coryell county.

This is an association expressly for YOUR interest because it is working primarily for this highway which will run from Jonesboro through the county toward Temple.
Things are ripe for furthering this highway. Two State Highway Commissioners will be there and YOU are expected to be, too.

Be at the west side of the square at 8 a. m. that morning, August 10, and be ready to "add your little weight" to this worthy movement for ALL of Coryell county.

SCOUTS

Scouts, Gatesville Scouts, Coryell Scouts, McGregor
Scouts, left yesterday morning on a trek to western Texas and Eastern New Mexico, on a worthy trip. Under the auspices of the Boy Scouts of America (and ask Mr.
Witcher when he gets back is it isn't so, because he got in touch with the "head man" before leaving) this is billed as an Educational Tour, and, since travel is educational, it certainly is educational.

Now, the Falls Creek Long Hike was good, but an improvement on a good thing is always for the best, and this is an improvement.

These boys will come back with new ideas from the west, a better look on life, healthier, after having made this guided, organized trip to a great part of two great states.

It's a great idea!

WEDNESDAY MARKED THE PASSING OF A WOMAN 78 YEARS YOUNG

Friends and relatives mourn the death of Mrs. Laura Harris, widow of the late George Harris. She was not a woman given to outstanding public activities, but her influential service through channels of the church, her talent for music, her kindly, gracious social life and tenderly sympathetic spirit that ever reached out to succor and to minister to the unfortunate and suffering placed her in an enshrined affection and admiration universally cherished.

Mrs. Harris passed away in the night Tuesday of heart attack. She lived a full, active life up until the end, just as she had always wished. Only last Friday she was leader of the devotional at the Church and played a piano composition at the close of the service. She attended church regularly and especially enjoyed the music of the church, for she said that she always felt closer to God when she heard His name exalted in song. She was a member of the Methodist Church.

Funeral services were held Thursday morning at 9 o'clock at the First Methodist Church of this city with the pastor, Rev. Marcus M. Chunn officiating. Interment followed in the King Cemetery with Scott's in charge.

Surviving are the following children; P. G. Haines, Bryon; L. C. Haines, Dallas; Mrs. W. Lewis, Gatesville; Mrs. W. E. Whitworth, Mrs. A. A. Eberle, Sweetwater Mrs. Alma Haines of Austin, who were all present. Two children who were not able to attend were Mrs. W. A. Schnieder, New York City, N. Y., and Mrs. W. H. Manley of San Francisco, Cal. She is also survived by 13 grandchildren and a host of other relatives and friends.

The deceased was born in La Grange, Texas, January 11, 1861. Mrs. Harris was twice married, having become the bride of T. W. Haines in 1897. Mr. Haines passed away in 1911 and it was in 1917 that she was married to George Harris, who's demise occurred in 1933.

Mrs. Harris had a splendid library and loved to read and discuss modern and ancient literature. With all her reading of new and old books it was said that she never lost faith in God. Her pastor said of her, "she grew old gracefully. She could go into any circle of educated people and converse on any subject intelligently."

In a closing chapter of such a life so fragrant in memory and so inspirational in influence it might be summed up in these immortal lines, "You may break, you may shatter the vase if you will, but the scent of the rose lingers round it still."

Relatives and friends who came from a distance to pay a last tribute of affection and esteem to one so loved in life were; Mr. and Mrs. Bill Boyles, Mrs. Leonard Chapman of Sweetwater who were adult grandchildren, Mrs. Woodson Stewart, a niece of Waco; Dick Miller of College Station.

Mrs. Jonnie Johnson of Dallas is visiting her brother, J. D. Brown Jr.

Mrs. T. F. Tadlock, sales lady for Leaird's, spent her vacation with her sister, Mrs. L. A. Evrett in Waco last week.

Brydenn Hollingsworth has returned home after spending several weeks in Houston with relatives.

New York—In the embellishment of the grounds of the New York World's Fair of 1939, 10,000 trees of many species, bought from several eastern States over thousands of miles of railroad, highway or water for transplanting, will be part of the exposition's $1,500,000 landscaping design. Some of those already transported to the site for the Spring are 40 years old, 55 feet tall with trunks 18 inches in diameter. They are under the constant care of skilled arboriculturists.

NEW BROADCAST METHODS

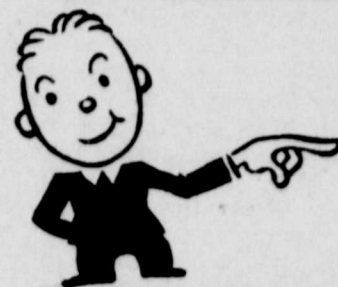

New York—Radio projectors of entirely new design will be employed at the New York World's Fair of 1939 to broadcast "The Voice of the Fair" from the summit of its 700-foot trylon spire which, with its neighboring elevated Perisphere, 200 feet in diameter, form the dominant architectural group of the exposition. The announcements from these projectors, which eliminate interference by any other radio waves, will be picked up by receiving and amplifying apparatus set up at numerous points in the grounds.

"No Politics, No Loss in the Billions Handled by RFC" Says Jones

WORLD COMMENT

Joe Buras

The Japanese military machine has duplicated in North China its conquest in 1931 of the Chinese province of Manchuria. The Mikado's troops, numbering 25,000 to 35,000 veterans of the Kwangtung (Asiatic) army, are in undisputed possession of the Tientsin-Peiping area and are moving southward in what is apparently an attempt to subjugate all of North China.

The sporadic defense was conducted against the Nippinese by the independent Chinese Twenty-ninth route army. Thus far the central or nationalist government of China controlled by Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek of has taken no part in the military operations designed to forestall or halt the advance of the vigorous yellow men from across the China Sea. Unverified reports emanating from the battle area have for the last two weeks told of troops moving from Central China to repel the Japanese Chiang Kai-Shek was said to be sending from 50,000 to 100,000 crack German-trained troops to engage in the expulsion of the Japs.

While the fates of world peace may rest upon the decision of Generalissimo Chiang to fight the Nippinese, the odds are that North China will remain in the hands of the Mikado's troops as did Manchuria in 1931 following the expulsion of the "Young Marshal" Chang Hseu-Liang. The old province of Manchuria, from whence came the Manchu emperors who ruled China for thousands of years until 1911, was converted into the independent empire of Manchukuo, of which Henry Pu-Yi was established as ruler under the "protection" of Japan.

The same fate is apparently in store for North China, a great wheat and cotton growing region which would make a valued addition to the ever-expanding Japanese Empire.

If Chiang Kai-Shek fights, as many military and political observers believe he must do to obtain his position as virtual dictator of the Central Chinese Government, Soviet Russia may enter the fight in the hope of crushing Japanese imperialism while the Japs are engaged with the Chinese. Should Russia enter the Fracas, France, Germany, Italy, Poland and Britain could easily become involved through the intricate system of alliances and secret treaties which bind the European states so closely together.

Where does America's interest in the North China dispute lie. Surely the twenty-five million dollar investment of American interests in North China need not involve this country in any turmoil that may emerge from the conflict there.

By law, if Japan and China engage in warfare over the disputed area, the President must invoke the neutrality act against both belligerents. The exportation of arms and munitions would be barred to each of the warring states and only by paying cash transporting needed materials could American commodities be obtained. Recognizing the seriousness of the situation and the responsibility under the neutrality act, President Roosevelt has been in constant communication with Secretary Hull over developments in North China. Neither the chief executive nor the director of America's foreign policy has recognized a state of warfare as existing in the battle area and the neutrality provisions have not been invoked against Imperialist Japan nor Nationalist China.

Aside from trade reprisals by both parties concerned and an unfavorable reaction among the Chinese and Japanese peoples, invocation of the neutrality act by the President would cinch Japanese victory in any conflict that may ensue from the present troubles. China would be deprived of needed munitions—being this country's largest purchaser of military aircraft and a large buyer of munitions of all kinds—as well as such necessities as foodstuffs, cotton goods, machinery, etc.

Affected American industries would surely put up a tremendous howl but that was both expected and prophesied when the neutrality act was enacted by Congress. Yet the first test of American neutrality, demanded by an overwhelming majority of the voting public—men, women, children, boys who would carry the rifles—may come such an isolated and—to the layman—insignificant occurrence as the slaughter of thousands of innocent Chinese by trained Japanese. The many cries of doubt raised as to the feasibility and possibility of American neutrality in any European or Asiatic war would be settled once and for all in the event of the invocation of the neutrality act by the President during the crisis in China.

In any prolonged conflict, would American industry and particularly the American people be willing to forego vast and tempting profits available from a costless war? What price neutrality? A great price in terms of dollars and cents, for the wheat farmer, the munitions factory worker, the cotton picker, the longshoreman, the shipper—millions in all industries, high and low—would have to forego the profits which fell into their laps from 1914 to 1917 like manna from Heaven.

Columbia manufacturers are enlarging factories.

Twenty Questions on Social Security

QUESTION No. 15

QUESTION: Are board, lodging and tips considered wages under the old-age benefits provision of the Social Security Act?

ANSWER: The Act States that "wages" means cash remuneration for employment and any remuneration other than cash. Board and lodging, therefore, are considered wages. A fair and reasonable cash value of board and lodging must be determined by giving due consideration to all circumstances affecting the case.

Tips, under the old-age benefits part of the Act, are not considered wages when such tips are paid directly to an employee by a customer, and not in any way accounted for by the employee by a customer, and not in any way accounted for by the employee to the employer.

(Further inquiries should be directed to the Social Security Board Office, 1530 Allen Bldg., Dallas, Texas.)

THREE MILE STEEL FENCE

New York—The physical construction of the New York World's Fair has so progressed that a steel fencing some feet high and of a total length of three miles is being erected to enclose the central exhibit area, more than 389 acres in extent. This has become necessary for the proper protection of the $900,000 Administration Building almost completed, the 500 shade trees already transplanted in the landscaping of the grounds, which will include 10,000 trees of all species; and the bridges and avenues which are being built in this section.

"WOMEN," SAYS NORMAN ROCKWELL, "ARE LIKE THAT!"

For many long years, we have been watching Norman Rockwell's Saturday Evening Post covers. They reveal, in a kind and pleasant way, the quirks of human nature that make people what they are. And we have always wondered where his ideas came from.

So the other day we resolved to find out. We called him up long distance. We said, out of a clear sky, "Mr. Rockwell, on the current Post, there is a cover of yours showing a woman returning from an auction sale. Just for the sake of curiosity, we'd like to know how you came to paint it?"

"That's easy," said Mr. Rockwell. "My wife went to Connecticut one day with a neighbor. While they were up there they stopped in at an auction sale of antiques just to see what was going on. When they returned that night, they looked about like that picture on the cover. But it was wonderful to see their enthusiasm.

"For instance, my wife went into raptures over an antique gadget that resembled nothing anyone had ever seen. When she was through talking about it, I asked her what it was and she didn't know. That was five months ago. She still doesn't know. It's up in the attic now; it gets taken out in the light only when an antique expert comes to the house. The last expert said he thought it was something off something that the Confederate soldiers used to burn oil in—or something.

"And the neighbor's wife," Mr. Rockwell explained, "had bought a bottle. It was a beautiful bottle—'hand blown,' she boasted. 'back in the early days of the country,' she had found a real bargain, she assured us—it only cost three dollars!

"When she went home that night she showed it to her husband, who somehow couldn't share her enthusiasm. When she finished eulogizing the ancient art of glass blowing, the husband went up stairs into the bathroom and picked up a duplicate bottle off the shelf. It was identical in every respect.

"This is a good bottle, too," he said. 'Do you remember where you picked up this antique? You got it in some department store full of bath salts.'

"Women," commented Mr. Rockwell sagely, "are like that."

Aden, Arabia, is shipping more goatskins to the United States than in recent years.

H. Jones, RFC chairman, in Saturday Evening Post out to Mr. Jones sums up the view of the RFC and the principles which have guided its office in putting the depression-wracked financial structure of United States on a solid basis.

Though there is nearly even division of politics among the directors of the corporation "Our records would disclose dissenting votes in the board since reorganization under Roosevelt Administration. Usually we act unanimously," adds that loans are not made if any director "can give valid reason" why it should be granted.

"We try," Mr. Jones writes "to be a generous creditor have taken a long-range view values, in the knowledge of the Government does not intend to liquidate its loans hurriedly and in the conviction that American people will pay their debt if given the opportunity."

The Balance Sheet is in the Black. Out of the billions of dollars that went into the myriad loans, Mr. Jones says, "in large an operation, we shall fer some losses, but it is expectation that that there be no ultimate net loss."

He tells how the RFC, if interest received, has paid its operating expenses, $191,887 in interest to the Treasury and has built up an operating surplus to May 1, 1937, of $137,993.83, "which will be more than enough to cover losses loans and investments in which our directors had discretion."

In 1936, the corporation its regular operations, not counting allocations to other governmental agencies and for relief, paid the Treasury $600,000 more than it borrowed.

This record is all the more remarkable because, "Included $2,795,788,515 allocated to other governmental agencies for relief by direction of Congress, our total authorization May 1, 1937 were $11,556,819.39 of which $9,172,403.61 had been disbursed," counting the allocations made Congress, "the RFC as of 1, 1937, had authorized 37 loans and investments, aggregating $8,750,334,813.50. Of that loan and investment authorizations, 29,235, aggregating 461,118,373.34, has been disbursed and $4,592,619.93 or about 71 per cent, had repaid."

Mr. Jones pays high tribute to the RFC personnel of men and women throughout United States. To them and the unfailing confidence and port given it by the President and the Congress "is due assistance as the RFC has derived in aid of recovery."

Of his own service, he writes "Notwithstanding any personal sacrifice of whatever nature I am glad to have been invited to two Presidents to serve my country in a period that has tried the very souls of men."

GATESVILLE, TEXAS

SYNOPSIS

Jack Gordon, crack pilot, is in New York on vacation when he is called to Salt Lake City to fly a ship to San Francisco. He balks but changes his mind when he sees pretty Felice Rollins, society heiress, board the westbound plane. Complications set in when a gun-toting foreigner named Stephani attempts to stop Felice from continuing her trip. Jack saves Felice and finds out why she is so anxious to get to the Coast. On his leg of the flight, a howling storm forces Jack to make a landing in a snow-filled pass. While Jack and the copilot explore the situation, a government agent posing as a Dr. Everts attempts to arrest another passenger, Palmer, who is a notorious bank-robber. The latter pulls a gun and wounds Everts and the co-pilot. Jack gets ready to defend the plane.

CHAPTER IX.

"WHERE'S your gun?" Jack demanded as he lifted Everts through the cabin door. "Palmer took it and Freddy's "Is he dead?" Waldemar inquired hopefully as Ann helped the pilot lift her sweetheart into the cabin.

"No. But we've got to work fast. Ann, get the emergency kit. Felice, I need some hot water."

For half an hour the three worked rapidly bandaging the wounded. Neither was as badly hurt as it had seemed at first. Everts had a clean wound completely through the right shoulder. Freddy's skull had been creased by a bullet but the bone had not been broken.

"Any you people got a gun in your bag?" inquired Jack at last. "I have," answered Waldemar, proudly displaying his water pistol.

"He'll come back and shoot us," wailed Miss Harkins. "I know it.

It's all my fault for letting her know such people. I can't let her suffer for my stupidity."

"Humph!" A great load seemed to lift from Jack's shoulders. "The outlook isn't particularly bright at the moment, but if there's any chance of getting you to the Coast before noon tomorrow I'll grab it."

"Did you see it?" Ann burst in upon them, closely followed by Waldemar. Then, realizing that she had disturbed an important conversation, she stammered. "I mean the light. It came and went—like a match. Do you suppose it was Palmer?"

"Probably," shrugged Jack. "I think he'll wait for daylight before coming back, though. That would help his aim. Our only chance is to get off in the morning before he shows up."

"And if he gets here first?" inquired Felice.

"I'd give my left ear for a gun," was the glum reply. Suddenly he looked at the girl appraisingly and demanded: "How's your nerve?"

"I think it'll get by." Her blue eyes met his brown ones steadily. "That's swell—because we're going to give it a workout. See that? He reached through the cockpit door and unhooked the fire extinguisher which hung on the cabin wall. "I got some of that stuff in my eyes once—couldn't see or breathe for five minutes. And it squirts yards—like a gun."

"He'll never give you the chance to use it," said Felice.

"Not me, maybe. But he won't be watching you. Now if the party gets rough you hide it under your coat and I'll maneuver him into position—then let him have it. Think you can do it?"

"I can try."

"O. K. Now suppose you catch yourself a little nap—nothing we can do until daylight. And you, Waldo, for the love of Mike get out from under foot for once."

Waldemar retaliated by kicking him on the shin.

The next morning found the wounded men much stronger. The sky also seemed to be in a much healthier condition.

"Any sign of Palmer?" whispered Everts as Jack felt his pulse.

"Nope. Okay with you if we leave him here?" Then to Freddy, who had started to get up but found himself too weak to do so. "Don't crowd your luck, kid. Stay quiet. I can take off all right."

He entered the cockpit and switched on the starters. Instantly a pistol cracked outside and a bullet tore across the top corner of the cockpit. Felice, who was sitting beside him, barely escaped.

"Hey, you! Gordon," came Palmer's voice. "I'm coming aboard and I'm heeled. I don't think you've got a gun but if you have—forget it." He ducked under the wing and moved toward the door.

Jack grabbed Felice by the arm and rushed her into a seat at the front of the cabin. "Quick now!" he commanded. "Sit there!"

As she slipped into the first seat he reached behind him for the fire extinguisher. It was not in its rack. The pilot looked frantically down the cabin.

"Who's got that fire extinguisher?" he whispered hoarsely. There was no answer from the passengers as the cabin door slowly opened and the muzzle of an automatic was thrust through the crack.

(To be continued)

"I want you to know that I feel terribly sorry—and entirely responsible for all of this," she began contritely.

too," gasped the wounded man. "Freddy's?" screamed Ann.

"What happened to him?"

"Palmer shot him," groaned Jack, too dazed by the catastrophe to realize the effect his words would have on the girl.

"Freddy—shot! Freddy—Freddy . . ." Before he could stop her the girl had torn the door open and was dashing out through the snow.

"Here—take care of him," Gordon commanded Felice as he placed the wounded man in the aisle. Then he ran back into the storm.

"Ann! Ann! Come back here, you idiot," he shouted. "Palmer will get you too." Catching up with her, he gripped her arm. "You're going back to the plane. We've got trouble enough."

"Trouble! You've got trouble!" she laughed hysterically. "That's a good one. What about Freddy lying out there all alone—bleeding to death—while you stand there and keep me from . . ."

Realizing that she was rapidly going into hysterics Jack slapped her hard across the face, then spun her toward the plane.

"Sorry," he said quietly. "Now go on back. I'll find Freddy."

Tracing Everts' footsteps through the snow, he finally came to a dark mass lying across the path. He hurried forward and picked Freddy up in his arms. The boy was unconscious. Jack's face hardened as he staggered back to the plane.

I know it! I'm so nervous I could jump right out of my skin."

"Go ahead, lady—and we'll make a rug out of it." Jack was savage.

"Look!" cried Ann. "Freddy's coming out of it."

"Fine!" he exclaimed as his copilot's eyes flickered open for a second. "Better dish out some hot coffee to the others."

Completely exhausted, he climbed into the cockpit and started the cold motors again. Felice found him there.

"I want you to know I feel terribly sorry—and entirely responsible for all of this," she began contritely.

"Aw, forget it. These things just happen." He was too tired to care.

"No—I kept egging you on—urging you to take chances . . ."

"You must be kinda crazy about that guy in San Francisco . . ."

"What guy are you talking about? What did Stephani tell you?"

"Oh, he made a couple of cracks."

"All right. Now I'm going to make a couple of cracks. My sister, Kay, and I met this Stephani—and his brother Alix—last summer in New York. When they found out who we were, Alix gave Kay the old Continental rush and swept her off her feet—she's just a kid—eighteen. I pleaded—did everything I could—but she's on her way to San Francisco with him now. They plan to be married in Honolulu. I've got to stop them.

MOUND NEWS

Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Lam and Mr. John Lam of Oglesby spent Sunday in the home of Mr.

STRAWS

in the Wind

SUMMER brings its own beauty problems! How many times do you start out freshly and immaculately made up; find yourself a short time later with shiny nose and lipstick half gone? You're miles from your own dressing table, so what do you do? Patch up your makeup as best you can with any odd assortment of cosmetics you happen to have in your handbag.

But here's a way to solve this problem in a twinkling. Simply store away your regular full-sized makeup and get two or three of those complete little matching kits that contain powder, rouge, lipstick and eye-makeup in miniature sizes. Keep one on your dressing table, one in the pocket of your car, the contents of another in your handbag. You'll never again be caught unaware, victim of wind and sun. So you can be particularly chic, and sure your makeup really matches your personality. These clever cosmetics are keyed to the color of your eyes!

THEO SCHEONEWOLF'S TAKE LONG TRIP

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Scheonewolf of the Plainview community left the early part of this week for an extensive tour of the northwestern states.

Their six-weeks' itinerary includes Lubbock, Texas where they will visit his brother and his family; then to Oklahoma for a visit with an aunt and other relatives; from Oklahoma to Merton, Wisconsin where Mrs. Scheonewolf will visit a sister Mrs. Tover whom she had not seen for thirty-five years.

On the return trip they plan to visit in Hot Springs Arkansas.

Poland has established a board to control prices.

KING CAROL ACCEPTS

New York—King Carol of Rumania has assured President Roosevelt that at the New York World's Fair of 1939, Rumania's arts and industries will be fully represented. This message was conveyed in the King's acceptance of the President's invitation for the Rumanian participation in the exposition. Grover Whalen, President of the Fair, commenting upon this, and the friendship between the United States and Rumania, said: "We see in the New York Fair an opportunity to solidify our relations and we hope to be able to clasp the hand of King Carol in 1939."

MODEL OF 1939 FAIR

New York—Every step, wherever taken, in the physical construction of the New York World's Fair of 1939, is shown upon a large scale model of the entire site on exhibition in the Empire State Building, Fifth Avenue and 34th Street. The model makers in charge of it keep daily pace with the progress of the work, whether it be the digging of a trench, the grading or filling of an area, the planting of a tree or the erection of steel. In every such case, a miniature reproduction of what has been done is added to the model in its true relative size. Close beside it is a similar model showing the shabby, ash-dump site of the Fair before the staff of engineers and designers took it over.

85 RESTAURANTS FOR FAIR

New York—There will be no dearth of places in which to obtain food, either comparatively expensive or contrived for the slender purse, at the New York World's Fair of 1939, according to plans. Provision has been made for 85 restaurants and cafeterias, with a seating capacity of 43,200, within the grounds. It is estimated that the potential business to be done by the food purveyors at the Fair will be $18,000,000 by the restaurants and $4,647,000 by the food stands during six months of operation from April 30, 1939.
