'Round These Parts

Politics being what it is, the item below, quoted from "Town Talk" of The Austin Statesman of May 4, seems pertinent.

"Town Talk" says, under a Washington date line, as follows: (reported from that city).

"POAGE FROM WACO. Waco's Bob Poage dropped by the table. He's supposed to be one of the best informed men in congress on agriculture. With Marvin Jones being appointed to a court job, the Texans are clamoring that Poage be named chairman of the house committee on agriculture. Poage is a plugger, plodding type, has a memory that never forgets anything"

"Acclaimed as one of the hardest working members of the Texas delegation. He married an Austin girl, Frances Cotton. While she isn't on the government payroll the story is that she is one of the hardest working members of his staff."

That sounds good from outside Congressman Poage's own district. Sometimes some of us don't appreciate our own people until we HEAR the good reports OTHERS say about them!

Don't forget, the American Red Cross is calling for "coin" again, for the suffering humanity across the pond.

It'd be better to let your pocket book suffer a little than to have to do the suffering "they" are having to put up with over there now! Let's make this quota—only $660, and there are over 20,000 of us in the county, and over 3,250 in Gatesville. It ought to be easy.

And, the WPA is holding open-house, nationally, putting it on big, with a national radio hook-up the 20th. You are particularly invited to see the Professional and Service Division projects, whatever they are. We think this means the sewing room.

Miss Josephine Milberger spent Sunday in West.

Billy McBride, who is attending an Austin business college, was a week end guest of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. D. McBride, at the State Training school.

10,000 SEE W. LEE 'O AT "MOTHER'S DAY" SERVICE SUNDAY

Literally pushed and shoved into Mother Neff Park Chapel, W. Lee O'Daniel, Governor of Texas, was greeted Sunday afternoon by more than 10,000 people of all ages, when he went to the park at the request of former governor, and now president of Baylor University, Pat M. Neff.

First, an attempt was made to have the Governor's string band play in the chapel, but the sound equipment failed and the Governor and his band moved out on top of a bread truck under the trees.

Surveying the thousands who had gathered at the park to witness the annual Mother's Day program, the Governor said:

"This sure would be an occasion for a professional politician to make a speech. As much as I would love to I can't say anything that is not in keeping with the proprieties of the occasion."

While waiting for the band to get on the truck, he told the audience he was publishing a newspaper for the "common folk," one within their means, and reminded them of the quarter subscription rate to the W. Lee O'Daniel News.

After a few numbers by the band, Governor O'Daniel spoke briefly only using a part of his time in reference to Mother's Day.

He said, in part: "There are some of you who have some suspicion something is wrong with the state government, and that he had been investigating and looking into various departments since he was elected governor and had found that there WAS something wrong. He said that it had taken years to get that way, and would take years to straighten it out so that the common people would get what they should have. He intimated that selfish people were the ones who had been getting the most from their government."

SON OF GATESVILLE BANKER HAS STORY IN MAGAZINE

W. L. Ayres, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leake Ayres, has an article in Better Homes & Gardens, the issue of June, 1940.

The subject of Mr. Ayres' article is "They Said I Couldn't Grow Roses."

Mr. Ayres goes on to write. "They said it couldn't be done and that's why I started growing roses."

He goes on to tell how, and there are two pictures of his yard, in one of which, is his own picture, showing him working with his "hobby".

We say hobby, because Mr. Ayres is a Professor of Mathematics at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor where he lives.

RED CROSS QUOTA $660: MONEY TO NON-FIGHTERS OF TORN COUNTRIES

Norman H. Davis, of the Red Cross of St. Louis, Missouri has telegraphed Mrs. Turk Brown, Chairman of the Red Cross for Coryell County the following message:

"With the invasion of Holland, Belgium and Luxemburg, the war has entered a phase which will inevitably bring widespread and appalling suffering to millions of helpless men, women and children. In order to inaugurate widespread relief measures, the American Red Cross is at once launching a campaign for a minimum war relief fund of 10,000,000,000. Your chapter quota is $660. Please at once mobilize the entire leadership of your chapter and community in order that you quota may be raised and exceeded without delay. Chapters may retain fifteen percent of collections to cover their local war relief expenses. Letter of instructions follows."

Mrs. Brown has asked us to announce those desiring to donate to this cause may leave the money at the National Bank of Gatesville with Andrew Kendrick, County Treasurer of the Red Cross or Mrs. Turk Brown. If not convenient to leave it at the bank, call Mrs. Brown and she will call for any donations.

L. C. ALEXANDER IS NAMED POSTMASTER AT WACO

L. C. Alexander, of Waco, received advice last Tuesday from Congressman W. R. (Bob) Poage that his name had been handed to President Franklin D. Roosevelt for appointment as Postmaster at Waco.

Alexander is a native Wacoan, and is a son of the late Judge L. C. Alexander, prominent attorney whose family were pioneer settlers of Waco. He is a graduate of The University of Texas, and has three children.

Alexander is prominent in state and national party affairs, and was a charter member of the original Roosevelt Club of Texas, and served as vice president of the State Campaign Committee for the Roosevelt-Garner ticket in 1932. At present he is secretary of the Produce Jobbers and Brokers Association of Waco, and is a former director of the National Food Brokers Association. He is an active member in the Austin Avenue Methodist Church.

When asked for comment, Mr. Alexander said, "I appreciate the confidence the people of Waco have shown in me, which has enabled me to qualify for this appointment. The list of twenty-two splendid citizens who applied made the selections of the Civil Service Commission very difficult, I am sure, and the graceful action of my friends, Capt. Robert Evans and Dr. Arthur Stout in withdrawing in order to permit Congressman Poage to confer this honor on me unanimously shows their confidence and friendship and am highly appreciative of the honor and responsibility."

Jonesboro Eagles Defeats Jackets 1-0

One of the biggest upsets in the high school baseball race occurred at Flat last Friday afternoon when the Jonesboro High school Eagles slipped up on the Flat Yellowjackets and defeated them by a score of 1-0. The game was mostly a pitching duel between Holcomb of Flat and Williams of Jonesboro with both boys displaying excellent form. Holcomb gave up only three hits during the entire nine innings and Williams held the Jackets down to four.

The Eagles combined two hits and a base on balls in the third inning to drive the only run of the game across the plate and hand the Flat youngsters their only defeat of the season.

After their defeat by Jonesboro the Jackets must win their two remaining scheduled games to win undisputed possession of the Coryell County High School League Trophy. Another interesting feature of last Friday's game was that both teams went the entire nine innings without a single error.

BRACKETED

By BRACK CURRY

In the world of today, century-old traditions are being challenged by a concept of life which recognizes no human rights, no property rights; which glorifies brute force as the highest achievement of a vigorous racial group.

Rights and standards of life which have been challenged both by domestic traitors and foreign oppressors throughout their history as national states again are being defended by the free peoples of the British and French empires.

Anglophobes contend that the Allies are fighting a war impelled by selfish motives, namely, perpetuation of their control over alien peoples. But anyone acquaint-ted with the mental attitude of the average Englishman and Frenchman during the post-war days knows that these peoples never would have been led into another war against their will.

The English and French are fighting today—sacrificing the fruits of long years of labor, undergoing untold hardships and anticipating harder days ahead—not because they were told by their leaders to fight. They are fighting for themselves—for their rights as freemen, for their homes, their business houses, their jobs, their law, their religion. Only a challenge to these fundamental rights and human institutions could have caused the English and French masses again to shoulder arms.

The English and the French, and similarly the Norwegians, Dutch, Belgians and Chinese, have found it necessary to fight for a way of life which they believe is worth fighting for. But are the American people correspondingly willing to fight to maintain their way of life?

For the present, at least, there is no necessity of employing armed force to maintain our basic social and political institutions, as the democratic states of Europe have been impelled to do. But it is apparent to all discerning people that the time has come when the American people must fight a war on the domestic battlefield which will be as significant in its future implications as the wars now raging in other continents.

Those wars are in progress decide whether the peoples of Europe and Asia are to be freemen or slaves; whether the institutions of democratic government are to be continued on sounder foundations than ever before or are to be wrecked upon the shoals of totalitarianism.

The choice before the American people is a similar one. Mental lethargy and indifference toward questions of governmental policy, spiritual decadence, economic chaos, social conflict, governmental ineptitude—these are as lethal in their effect upon democracy as the guns of Adolf Hitler and Josef Stalin.

Just as force of arms is necessary to destroy the menacing threats of Nazism and Communism in Europe, force of another nature is needed to root out these threats to our own way of life.

The force that should be employed in this country toward a speedy and equitable solution of our problems should consist primarily of an alert, informed public, quick to recognize and depose the demagogue, equally adept at lending intelligent support to sincere public officials.

Once this state of mind has been attained, the apparently insoluble character of our social, economic and political problems will disappear.

A spiritual revival extending

My Son My Son!

MY SON, MY SON!

FROM THE BEST-SELLING NOVEL BY HOWARD SPRING

MADELEINE CARROLL

BRIAN AHERNE LOUIS HAYWARD

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE:
William Essex, a young writer struggling against poverty in the slums of Manchester, marries prim little Nellie Moscrop when her father, his employer, dies. Resenting his poverty, he swears that any son of his shall receive all the luxuries he has missed. On the night that Essex receives printed copies of his first published book, a son is born to his close friends, Dermot and Sheila O'Riordan. A few months later, to his vast delight, Essex's own son, Oliver, is born. Essex angers his wife by indulging in the boy's every whim, turning him into a selfish, spoiled child. When Oliver is eight he is caught in a petty theft. Essex refuses to punish him, and a bitter quarrel ensues between him and Nellie.

Chapter Three

Nellie and I continued to live together in an emotional climate of mutual toleration — one of those relationships where deep-seated differences are rigidly kept below the surface for the sake of the children, for the sake of appearances before others, for the sake of an outwardly orderly existence.

Things were easier when Oliver, a couple of years later, went off to public school, and later to Balliol. Nellie withdrew deeper and deeper into her religion, while I abandoned myself to my work, producing book after book with one unflinching purpose; to increase my artistic standing and my fortune by making each book better than the last.

I decided to do a novel about the Yorkshire coal mining people, and in accordance with my custom I went into the district to live among the people about whom I intended writing, to observe their lives and their customs at first hand, to absorb their language and their ways of thought. Informing no one of my exact intentions, I secured a job as an ordinary laborer in the mines owned by Pogson, whose son was a classmate of Oliver's. Oliver had just turned nineteen at the time; a handsome lad of tremendous charm, whose winsomeness and ready wit carried him through many a scrape into which his spoiled impudence got him both in and out of school.

At the end of my second day's work in the mine, as I was emerging from the shaft in a lift with a group of other miners, the manager beckoned me aside. In my rough clothes, countryman's cap and smudged face, I must have looked a convincing miner, for it seemed that a young lady artist, who had been commissioned to make sketches of the mine and its surroundings, desired to draw me as a typical mine worker!

"Would you like to make a shilling?" the young lady asked me brightly.

Carefully keeping in my Yorkshireman's character, I surveyed her deliberately. The head above her shapeless smock was crowned with a mass of light yellow hair, in which the waning sun, peering in through the windows of the rude mine office, made a strange lustre. The features were delicately chiseled, the nostrils sensitive, the lips somewhat tight but quick to curl up at the corners, the chin delicately pointed and apt to tilt high. I looked, but permitted my face to betray nothing.

"A bob?" I answered her in my best Yorkshire drawl. "I might."

"Well, just stand over there by the wall and let me make a sketch of you."

"All of me?"

"Yes."

"That would be worth two bob."

She acquiesced with a laugh, and began her drawing. I stood submissively by the wall while she sketched with rapid, businesslike strokes.

"What do you do in the mine?" inquired the artist without looking up.

"Dig."

"Oh." She paused. "Do you like your work?"

"Do you mean to keep on asking questions?" I demanded. "It'll cost you another bob if you do."

"I'm not that interested," she retorted. "Turn your profile, please." I continued to gaze at her. "Side view, please!"

I presented my profile, and she resumed her sketching. "Do you do that for a living?" I asked her, "or just to amuse yourself?"

"If I answer, it'll cost you a bob," she said; then added, her mouth twitching, "I do it for a living."

A few minutes more, and she had finished. She showed me the drawing, which I praised lavishly; then she paid me my two shillings. I deliberately bit at the coin, then rang it on a piece of metal, then pocketed it and walked away without a word.

When I had washed up, changed into more livable clothes, and had my supper at the inn, I went for a stroll through the outskirts of the town, meditatively flipping my two-shilling coin. It eluded my palm and rolled around a bend in the road. When I caught up with it a slender young lady with a traveling bag was picking it up from the road. It was my artist friend.

She recognized me, despite my somewhat altered appearance, and headedly accused me of having defrauded her by posing as a typical miner.

I protested that I was a miner — an anxious deliver in my own mine that yielded an occasional gem — and sometimes just plain muck.

"That gives me a clue," she exclaimed. "You must be a writer!" I bowed a humble acknowledgment.

"It's all very interesting, I'm sure," said the lady, "but I haven't time to stand here talking. 'Carry your bag for a shilling, mum?'"

I lapsed quickly into my workman manner and speech. "Carry your bag for a shilling, mum?"

Never in my life had I talked so animatedly to anyone as we walked to the station, discussing the work we did. She, too, seemed to enjoy it enormously.

"I never knew talking to a woman could be like this," I suddenly exclaimed.

"What do you mean?"

"Well, I — I never knew a woman who did anything — who had a career, as you call it. I didn't know a woman could be beautiful and young and intelligent — all at the same time."

She faltered in her step for a moment and stared at me. In that instant, I think, we both realized how tremendously important was this meeting for both of us.

We walked on, and fell to discussing the current work of authors. She had, it seemed, been reading "Every Street", the newest work of one William Essex. I expressed interest, while betraying nothing. While she approved Essex's writing, she poked fun at his portrayal of feminine characters. This fellow Essex, she believed, knew nothing at all about women.

"But the critics like his love scenes," I protested.

"The critics are men," she laughed. "Now don't stand there and tell me you'd make love like William Essex!"

Unconsciously, we both stopped. I looked at her, and said slowly, "I might have once... I wouldn't now. Not after tonight. I'd say — I'd say —"

Before I knew it my arms were about her, straining her to me. Without hesitation her arms went about my neck. I kissed her fervently.

"Oh, my darling!"

It lasted only a moment. Then I withdrew from her embrace and gripped her almost fiercely by her shoulders. The words tumbled from my lips.

"I had no right to do that. I'm not a free man. But I shall love you forever and ever. I knew it from the first moment I heard your voice — from the first moment I saw your face... No, don't speak. Don't tell me anything about yourself. It isn't safe for me to know. I must never see you again."

Her lips trembled, and her eyes filled with tears.

"Please, please... not tears!" I whispered. "I don't think I can bear that!"

"I shall be in tears when I'm alone!"

I gazed at her for another moment, then turned abruptly and walked away.

Will Rogers' Humorous Story

By WILL ROGERS

THERE'S all kinds of reasons for getting married and divorced, and most of 'em has been used from time to time. But I heard of a case in New York not long ago that seemed like it might have some new possibilities in it. The lady was telling the judge what a lemon she drew at the marriage counter, and the judge just listened kinda tired-like. Then the lady says: "Why, your honor, he's a thief and purse-snatcher!"

"Is that true?" says the judge to the victim.

"Yes, Oh, yes, that's true, all right."

"Well, this changes the nature of the case. Of course I'll give this woman a divorce. Who wants to be married to a purse-snatcher?"

"But judge, I never would-a got her if I hadn't been a thief and a purse-snatcher."

"How's that?"

"Well, you see, I grabbed her purse and run, one day on the street here. She caught me, and then nothing would do, your honor, but she had to marry me for revenge."

TURNERSVILLE W.M.U.

The Turnersville WMU met May 1 with 18 members present.

This was the afternoon for the Royal Service program. The program was opened by singing the song "How Firm a Foundation." The Watchword for the year was repeated by all. The Bible Study was given by Mrs. R. M. Holder, and a prayer by Mrs. M. Coltharp.

Standard for the Nation," Mrs. A. C. Blankenship; "God's Standard and the WMU," Mrs. Newt Pruett. These talks were followed by a song.

The president then held a short business meeting.

Mrs. M. Coltharp has charge of the next meeting. The book of Genesis is to be read and then discussed at the meeting.

On next regular church day, May 12, Miss Tonya Karutune of Baylor University, a Russian born girl, will talk about the conditions existing in Russia and other parts of Europe. Everyone is cordially invited to attend this service.

"Have a Match, Boss?"
Nearsighted Old Gent—"I Thank You!"

BRACKETED—

through all strata of society is the rock upon which this new public outlook must be founded, and the spring from which will flow the accruing benefits to our national order.

Our nation was founded upon such simple vestiges as faith in God, thrift, honesty and hard work. All of these have been more or less discarded under the impression of two world wars within half a century and the partial breakdown of the capitalistic system resulting from the world-wide economic depression.

It is not sermonizing to contend that only when we have again embraced these principles can we in America return to a normal way of life. It is a simple truth. In the mad quest for wealth which characterized the era of the twenties, gold supplanted religion in the minds of our people. In the disillusionment which followed the collapse of this bubble, the people were prepared psychologically to turn to religion, as man always does in time of stress.

But during the last decade, which should have been a period of readjustment and recovery, we have been beset by panaceas which once again have turned the people toward the more materialistic aspects of life. We have been told for eight years that we can spend ourselves into prosperity, in contradiction to century-old economic theory. Is that what our forefathers did? Thrift and hard work were formerly the pillars upon which one prepared for old age or infirmity. Now we are told to spend, spend, spend, and when we have no more to spend, the government will give us work on the WPA and pension us at the age of 65.

If that had been the attitude of those footsore minutemen at Valley Forge; if the hardy pioneers who pushed into the West in the face of Indian attacks, drouth plague and famine had adopted that concept of life; if Lincoln had turned to materialism rather than to spiritualism when the Nation was at the crossroads—where would these United States of America be today?

We in America are confronted with a task equally as impelling and important as that before the peoples of Great Britain, France and the Low Countries. If we are prepared to make sacrifices commensurately as severe as those the Allied peoples are making, we shall, I submit, emerge victoriously from the struggle in which we are engaged.

It is patent that no great progress has been made under the present methods of attack. What is needed is a new battle plan, perhaps a new generalism at the head of the forces.

But it is the people who must carry on the struggle—and with them rests the final decision.

EXPERIMENTAL FARM COW PRODUCES 105,884 POUNDS OF 4% MILK IN EIGHT COMPLETE LACTATION PERIODS

Purina Farm Cow No. 132. Her fine calving and milk production record graphically illustrates the necessity of proper feeding and conditioning while dry.

She has no name—just a number. She is known only as Cow No. 132 in the Purina Experimental Farm herd at Gray Summit, Missouri. Yet did 132 is making a real name for herself by her contributions to the cause of building longer milking life and higher production in dairy cows.

Now in her twelfth year, she has dropped her ninth calf and produced a total of 105,884 lbs. of milk in 5 complete lactations, according to Wade Summers, manager of Purina Mills' Dairy Department. "Backed by so fine a record," says Summers, Cow 132 is definitely able to tell dairymen what it takes to increase her profitable milking span of a dairy cow's life, and cut down costly herd replacements due to breakdown or prematurely worn out animals.

Down and Up Again
"In 1931, Cow 132 produced 9,830 lbs. of milk. But in 1932, she dropped back to 7,481 lbs. because for experimental purposes she was not conditioned on any special dry-cow ration during her dry period. After her 1932 milking year she was put on Dry and Freshening Chow (experimental ration), and each year since then she has been conditioned on Dry and Freshening Chow during her dry period. Her production records have been consistently high since that time:

| Year | Lbs. Milk | Lbs. Fat |
|------|-----------|----------|
| 1933 | 14,703 | 602 |
| 1934 | 17,551 | 737 |
| 1935 | 14,203 | 596 |
| 1936 | 15,458 | 602 |
| 1937 | 12,961 | 518 |
| 1938 | 13,695 | 548 |

"Taking in the figures of her first two lactations, this makes a total of 105,884 lbs. of milk, yielding 4,271 lbs. butterfat—a lifetime fat test of 4%! And she's still going strong. She has bred regularly year after year and her nine calves have all been normal and vigorous.

"This all points to one of the most important steps in dairy herd management—namely, the importance of proper feeding during the dry period," says Summers.
