Town's silent! Since Saddy we had music, with The word is verboten!

Everything was set for a carolling Christmas, but intersperced in the beautiful music, were 'sour notes'—several of them.

The 'sour notes' blew it to heck in a handbasket and many were the squawks heard hereabouts as the loud speakers blared forth with names of merchants from neighboring settlements.

Well, it's a mistake—a little bit worse than our 'proof-reading' about which we hear a heck of a lot about, and 'they don't excuse us'!

Promised you, an answer to the 'brain budget' today, and it's here (if this gets published). 1. Kaaba. 2. Unit of measure. 3. Pottery.

Oratory

WOMEN are generally thought to have sweeter voices than men, and as far as this serves as any guide, we may infer that they first acquired musical powers in order to attract the other sex. But, if so, this must have occurred long ago, before our ancestors had become sufficiently human to treat and value their women merely as useful slaves. The impassioned orator, bard or musician, when with his varied tones and cadences he excites the strongest emotions in his hearers, little suspects that he uses the same means by which his half-human ancestors long ago aroused each other's ardent passions, during their courtship and rivalry. — Charles Darwin (1809-1882) in "The Descent of Man."

A dangerous ambition more often lurks behind the specious mask of zeal for the rights of the people than under the forbidding appearance of zeal for the firmness and efficiency of government. History will teach us that the former has been found a much more certain road to the introduction of despotism than the latter. — Alexander Hamilton (1757-1804) in The Federalist Papers.

Socrates: I am contented with the admission that rhetoric is of two sorts; one, which is mere flattery and disgraceful declamation; the other, which is noble and aims at the training and improvement of the souls of the citizens, and strives to say what is best, whether welcome or unwelcome to the audience. But have you ever known such a rhetoric? If you have can you point out any rhetorician who is of this stamp... who may be said to have improved the Athenians... who found them worse and made them better, from the day that he began to make speeches? For, indeed, I do not know of such a man. — Plato, who quoted his tutor, Socrates, in his "Dialogues."

The Glory and the Faith

"The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handywork." Psalm 19:1

WHAT would David, the greatest poet of them all, say today if he looked up into the heavens and saw the vehicles that science has thrown out into space?

Would he be frightened as we are?

No one, of course, will ever know. But the poet in him would ever proclaim the wondrous beauty and majesty and peace that one feels when he stands alone in the night and gazes out into infinite space.

This is indeed the work of God. This realization alone should be enough to renew our faith and calm our fears.

When you enter God's house on Sunday morning there, too, you will feel that everlasting peace and security that comes to one only in a Holy place.

By Donald J. Sobol
In pouring Dr. Haledjian's 20-year-old brandy, Inspector Winters inadvertently spilled a liberal quantity on the carpet. He apologized and chuckled reminiscently. "Last year I arrested a man after he'd spilled some brandy -- and not nearly such way, a young man burst out of the house. "Do you live here?" he shouted excitedly. "I told him I didn't. Nonetheless he seemed awfully glad to have somebody else around. He said he was a stranger who'd stopped to ask directions a minute before I arrived.

good stuff as this, either." "So?" said Haledjian infuiringly. "I was driving uvstate for the the weekend," recalled the inspector. "Somehow, I took a wrong turn. I pulled up to a big farm house to ask directions. "As I stopped my car behind a block convertible in the drive-

"The house is empty -- except for a woman lying on the sofa. I think she's dead!" he exclaimed. "The woman wasn't dead, but she wasn't very alive. Not with her head bloody and bruises on her throat. I told the excited young man to find some brandy, and he disappeared into the kitchen while I telephoned the police.

"When the young man came back I tried to tell him the brandy was to steady his nerves. But he acted too swiftly. He put hte bottle to the unconscious woman's lips. He'd spilled most of it over her chin and throat before I yanked the bottle away. "Leave her alone!" I ordered. And just to make it emphatic, I held my gun on him till the local police could place him under arrest. Luckily, the girl survived. But if I hadn't driven up unexpectedly, he'd have finished choking her to death."

HOW DID THE INSPECTOR KNOW THE YOUNG MAN HAD ATTEMPTED MURDER, in the kitchen. Yet he knew the brandy was kept in the big farmhouse. The young man claimed to be
