COLDEST WAVE OF SEASON MOVES IN WITH ICY STING

TEMPERATURE REACHES 28 DEGREES EARLY SATURDAY MORNING.

COLD WAVE FEATURED BY A HEAVY FROST

Light Snow is Reported to Have Fallen at Texline and Dalhart.

With snow reported from two points and with extremely low temperatures recorded at points throughout the district, the coldest wave of the season moved in Friday night and Saturday morning was responsible for sheets of ice and heavy deposits of frost.

Texline with 17, Dalhart with 17 and Forgan with 22 degrees, reports the lowest temperatures and the first named places further reported light snow.

The lowest point reached by the mercury in Wichita Falls was 23 degrees just before sunrise Saturday morning. Other points on the railroad leading into the city reported the following temperatures: Woodward, 22; Altus, 23; Graham, 23; Amarillo, 22; Childress, 23; Altus, 27; Holliday, 25.

Clear skies are in evidence throughout the district with the exception at the extreme north and west portions. Light north winds prevailed.

For the first time since June, the statement said, farm products showed a net decrease, due to the drop in prices of wheat and other grains. LAUNCH BIG SHIP W. VIRGINIA THAT MAY BE SCRAPPED GREATEST BATTLESHIP EVER DESIGNED BY THE AMERICAN NAVY.

SAME CLASS AND POWER AS THE SHIP MARYLAND

Secretary Denby is Unable to Be Present and Rear Admiral Andrews Officiates.

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., Nov. 19.—The superdreadnaught West Virginia, newest addition to the American navy and scheduled to grace the ocean fleets in a few days, was successfully launched today at a plant of the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock company. Miss Alice Mann of Bramwell, W. Va., christened the ship as she slid from the ways.

GREATEST BATTLESHIP EVER DESIGNED BY U. S. NAVY

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—Launched as one of the proudest and greatest battleships ever designed by the American navy, only to be scrapped within a few months appeared to be the fate of the superdreadnaught West Virginia today when she slipped from the ways of the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock company. The American naval reduction plan as presented to the arms conference provides for the scrapping of the West Virginia. If the American plan is adopted, the dreadnaught, today about 65 per cent complete, will never be finished or plow the seas bearing the Stars and Stripes.

The West Virginia is one of the same class and power as the Maryland, soon to be commissioned. Some of the features of the new ship are eight 14-inch rifles made especially to fit her four gun turrets. She would be able when completed to sink a destroyer in 23 seconds, she is built so as to be almost invulnerable to torpedo attacks; she carries a hull of the hardest armor rolled, and this armor is carried up on its upper edge where it protrudes beyond the skin of the ship well above the water line. She has a gun which is a 21-inch gun or war experience has combined to produce a hull which is omitted from the ship's fighting equipment. The spectacle of this giant fighting machine—the product of years of effort of mind and body by thousands of men—being scrapped is a pathetic and pathetic to naval officers. They have a love for and a pride in such a great ship that endows the mass of machinery with a human quality. They have watched the West Virginia grow day by day on the ways at Newport News where they have seen her together plate by plate and heard the riveting machines that hammered the steel together. She has attached to her hull a machine that can make a hole in a ship's hull with never a chance to know the open road of the deep sea and the barbed wire that she might have gone will be for them a saddest sight.

The West Virginia's keel was laid in April, 1915. As launched she measures 624 feet from stem to stern and is 97 feet wide in beam. Although her hull is practically complete and her main deck laid, she lacks equipment, much of her armor and all her guns. In addition to six of the 14-inch rifles, she would have had when completed, a secondary battery of 14 five-inch rifles which would be carried with four three-inch anti-aircraft guns, and two 21-inch submerged torpedo tubes. Drains call for an electric drive of 3000 horsepower furnished by oil burners and turbines.

SUSPENSION OF ALL NAVY CONSTRUCTION IS TOPIC IN LONDON

MAJORITY OF PRESS HEARTILY ENDORSE GOVERNMENT'S ACTION.

TELEGRAPH SAYS MOVE IS A GREAT SACRIFICE

All Papers Refer at Length to the Question of Unemployment.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—Suspension of all naval construction by Great Britain, including work on the four capital ships of the superdreadnaught type, and the questions arising as a result of this action, were the chief topics for today's newspapers. Two or three of the principal newspapers refrain from comment, but the majority of the others heartily endorse their government's decision.

The Daily Telegraph says that the suspension of work involves great sacrifice and a grievous blow to the firms holding the contracts and to their thousands of workmen as well as a disappointment to many naval men.

"But the navy is in wholehearted accord with the American proposal for limitation of naval armaments which we have accepted in principle," the newspaper says, "and as a proof of our sincerity it is surely to be expected as convincing evidence that this country is not governed by the armament ring."

The Daily Chronicle thinks the decision wise, both from national and international viewpoints. "It speaks louder than words," it says, "and is a strong and convincing evidence that the United States will continue building warships, said: 'America's choice is not our country's choice. It is not our country's choice to be directed against America.'"

The Daily News and Daily Express describes the suspension of naval building as very wise. The Morning Post is strongly hostile and charges that Premier Lloyd George issued the order on his own initiative, contemptuously flouting the authority of parliament and going behind the backs of Lord Lee of Fareham, first lord of the admiralty, and Admiral Early, first sea lord, who believe that if Admiral Beatty had been in England he would have refused rather than agree to the suspension of naval building.

The Washington conference and the suspension of the arms race between them. All the newspapers refer at length to the question of unemployment which has been the chief topic of the day. The suspension of work will not add greatly to the unemployment problem, as the majority of the workmen in the industry are engaged in the building of the new ships.

THIS CITY TO LEAD IN CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT MOVE

Business Council Favors That Method of Remedy. NAME COMMITTEE TO WORK FOR "MORRIS BANK"

Wichita Falls will undertake to lead a movement, as recently suggested editorially in The Times, for adoption of constitutional amendments that will make zoning laws possible. It is the intention of the city council to hold a public hearing on the subject Friday night at the business council meeting.

No steps will be taken in the matter until the pending motion for a restraining order is overruled, as there is to be some hope of action that will permit enforcement of ordinances keeping business establishments open in the city. The city council has a committee of five members, including Mayor C. E. King, to study the matter.

A plea of hearty support of the United States campaign was made by Mr. Harrison. The need of more sidewalk construction in the factory district, so that children will not walk on the county's paved highway was stressed by several speakers as one of the chief reasons in connection with auto traffic dangers.

Earlier this week the governor established a similar quarantine in a portion of Killebrew county, one of the largest cotton raising counties in the state. State and federal department of agriculture officials will meet at Dallas December 2 to discuss the situation.

DELEGATES OF ALL THE POWERS PREPARED TO PRESENT VIEWS IN EXECUTIVE SESSION TODAY

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—A statement on behalf of Japan on several questions relating to the far eastern situation was made at a session of the conference committee on Pacific and far eastern affairs. It was arranged that a complete public statement should be issued later through the state department.

The delegates were in session two hours and it was announced would hold another meeting at 10 o'clock Monday afternoon.

Another meeting of the American delegates to the armament limitation conference was called for 3 o'clock today by Secretary Hughes. This meeting was to be held in the technical committee on the naval limitation program was expected. The proposals submitted by the Japanese view point were expected to be discussed at today's meeting and all the delegates to the conference were expected to have expressed agreement at least in principle with the Chinese views.

Baron Shidehara, who presented the Japanese view point, was said to have shown a friendly attitude toward the Chinese proposals and to have indicated no material objection to the Japanese proposals, but making them a part of the proposed agreement on far eastern and Pacific problems.

By Associated Press. WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—Delegates to the armament limitation conference were fully prepared to present their views on the plan presented by China for settlements of questions involving her status when they met today in executive session to resume the far eastern discussions. While all may not desire to conclude the negotiations in detail on specific points at this stage of negotiations, it was expected that progress would be made in considering the Japanese proposals as a basis for committee discussions.

Particularly the Japanese delegation, whose views will be presented today, are expected to be more liberal than those of the American delegation. Shidehara had indicated a preference to have their policies developed step by step as the negotiations continued, rather than to have them presented at once in their entirety. The Japanese delegation is expected to ask for an interpretation of some of the Chinese "ten points."

Whether the Chinese proposal for a re-examination of the status of all commitments affecting China meant a desire on her part to reopen what she considered a closed incident, to which she has previously expressed opposition, was believed to be the special point of interest for Japan.

On the armament side of the negotiations, Japan's desire for an increase in the proportionate strength of her navy, considered as far as known not yet formally presented to the special naval committee of the five powers, had become the dominant point of information in the discussion in conference circles. With the American delegation adhering firmly to the principle upon which the naval ratio for Japan has been arrived at in its proposal, this promised to become the most highly drawn issue of the conference.

The question of the armament negotiations was broached today as a result of the disclosure of the administration's purpose not to limit the armament ratio for Japan, in agreement to the national representatives at the conference, but to ask the participation of any other interested nations in the matter. The Japanese delegation expressed the belief that unless it could bring about a treaty rather than a "status quo" arrangement, the entire program for this nation, including the scrapping of warships, had been abandoned. The world-wide general action, they would not condone, however, which of these forms it would take, if consummated.

The senate was into the fourth day of its consideration of the Michigan senatorial election contest.

BRECKENRIDGE WELL SPRINGS A SURPRISE; MAKING ABOVE 4000

The Prairie Oil company's Ackers B-2, located about two and one-half miles northwest of Breckenridge, started to flow late Thursday night with a production estimated at 4,000 barrels. The well was numbered among last week's completions for Stephens county with 150 barrels production. The increased production from the well came as a surprise to the owners, who had crews busy during the night putting in additional connections and building earthen storage.

to save the oil which was flowing a steady stream through a six-inch line. The outstanding feature of this well is that it is located in a section where gas is not the only product. The well is from 100 to 200 barrels. This is the second well put down on this tract by the Prairie Oil company. The well owns 440 acres. Very little drilling has been done on the territory to the north and west, and a campaign can be looked for in the near future.

FROM NOW ON ~ By Frank L. Packard

THE STORY

Dave Henderson steals and hides $100,000 and serves five years in prison, stubbornly keeping his mouth shut, both to the police and the old gang who are after the loot. Finally he discloses the hiding place to Millman, a prison mate, but is really surprised when Millman keeps an appointment in New York and returns to him the unopened package of bank notes. Then Millman surprises him still more by demanding, as his share of the deal, either the entire amount to return it to the estate from which it was stolen or none of it—saying that he feels himself guilty with Henderson and will pay it back out of his own private fortune if Henderson decides to keep it. He tells Millman to pay it back if he must, but he means to keep the money for which he has schemed so long and craftily. He goes to hunt up one Dago George, to whom he has a letter from Nicolo Capriano, an old San Francisco bomb-gang leader. This letter contains a secret code which is intended to double-cross Henderson when he gets his money in New York, and when old Capriano's daughter, Teresa, finds this out she remonstrates, arousing her father to a fit of anger, which causes his sudden death. Teresa follows Henderson to New York and finds him engaged to sleep in Dago George's hotel. Bookie Skarvan, gangster and former pal, believing Henderson dead, has followed Teresa, guessing that her trail will lead to the $100,000 which he wants. He also is put up at Dago George's. Henderson wakes up at 3 in the morning and finds the bank notes missing from his suitcase. Then he discovers Teresa, came to warn him because she wants to be on the square, and he realizes her unquestionable motive and in the same instant discovers surely his own love for the courageous girl. He realizes the impossibility for himself to turn about and give up the money unless he can again get it into his possession and then, as a free agent, make the decision, so he goes after the money once more, now in Dago George's safe, as the girl tells him. There he discovers a clever and dramatic little counter-plot, Bookie Skarvan having robbed the Dago and cleverly trying to cast suspicion on Cunny Skeets, another rival gangster. He confronts Skarvan, and in the melee Dago George kills Skarvan and then weakened he falls dead in trying to shoot Henderson also.

XVIII

MECHANICALLY, Dave Henderson rose to his feet, and for an instant stood as though his mental faculties numbed, he were striving to grasp a concrete thing some stark and horribly naked truth that his eyes told him was real, but which his brain denied and refused to accept. This layers of smoke, suspended, sinuous, floated in hideous little gray clouds about the room like palls that sought to hide what lay upon the floor from sight, and, falling in their object, but added another grim and significant detail to the scene.

And then his brain cleared, and he jumped forward to bend first over Bookie Skarvan and then over Dago George; and, where his mind had been unresponsive, numbed, by an instant, there was keen, swift and incisive now—the police who had been summoned—the Scorpion and his parasite yegg who were on the way back—there was no time to lose! There was no one in the house to have heard the shots—Bookie Skarvan had settled that point—no one except Teresa upstairs. But the shots might have been heard outside.

His ears throbbled with strange noises; those shots seemed still to be reverberating and beating at his eardrums. Yes, the shots might have been heard outside on the street, or by some one in the next house. What that some one at the front door now? He held his breath, as he rose from Dago George's side.

No, just the ringing in his ears; there wasn't any other sound. But there wasn't an instant to lose; both Bookie Skarvan and Dago George were dead. There wasn't an instant to lose—only the instant he must take to make sure he made no false move here before he snatched up that package on the desk there and ran upstairs and, with Teresa, made his way out by the fire-escape.

He stooped and stretched out his hand to exchange his own empty revolver for the one that lay on the floor where it had fallen from Dago George's lifeless fingers—and, instead, drew his hand sharply back again. Fool! The police would investigate this, wouldn't they? Bookie Skarvan couldn't have been shot by an empty revolver! Well, what was moving toward the desk and back toward where Bookie Skarvan lay—suppose he took Bookie's revolver then? He shook his head. He did not need one had enough for that. It was better to let things remain as they were and let the police draw their own conclusions, conclusions which, if nothing was interfered with, and he got away with the package of banknotes, would point no inference that, by hook or crook, would afford a clue which might lead to him. Was he so sure of that? Suppose the Scorpion had been let into Bookie's confidence and that the Scorpion when he got here should happen to be caught by the police—and talked to save himself?

A grim smile settled on Dave Henderson's lips as he thrust his useless revolver into his pocket and, reaching out to the desk, picked up the package of banknotes. Well, if anything came of the Scorpion, it couldn't be helped! And, after all, did it matter very much? It wasn't only Dago George and Bookie Skarvan who were dead—Dave Henderson was dead, too!

It had been scarcely a minute since he had first risen to his feet; it was his mind, sifting, weighing, arguing with itself, that had seemed to use up priceless time, whereas, in reality, in its swift working, it had kept pace with and had even prodded him into speed in his physical movements. He was running now, the package of banknotes in his hand, for the door. Dago George was dead. Bookie Skarvan was dead. And if— He staggered suddenly back, and reeled from the impact, as a man from just outside in the hallway launched himself ferociously forward across the threshold. The package spun from his hand to the floor. Half slung to his knees, Dave Henderson's arms shot out instinctively and wrapped themselves around his assailant's body.

Came a snarl and an oath, and Dave Henderson's head rocked back on his shoulders from a vicious short-arm jab that caught him on the point of the jaw. It dazed him; he was conscious only that he had not let go his hold; that his hands, like feeling tentacles, were creeping further up the man's body toward throat and shoulders, drawing his own body up after them into a more upright position. His head sang with the blow. A voice seemed to float from somewhere out of the air:

"That's the stuff, Maggot! Soak him!" Dave Henderson's arms had locked now like steel bands around his assailant and were tightening, as the other's were tightening around him in turn. The dizziness was leaving him. They swung, rocking, to the strain. The man was strong! A face, a repellent, unshaved face, leered into his. Twice they swirled around, and then seemed to hang for an instant motionless, as though the strength of one exerted to its utmost was exactly counterbalanced by the strength of the other; and over the other's shoulder Dave Henderson could see another man, a man who laughed with ugly coolness and who had flaming red hair and eyes of a blue so faded that they looked repulsive because they looked as though they were white.

Maggot and Cunny the Scorpion! There had been some one there in the front of the house—it had been Maggot and Cunny the Scorpion. And at any moment now there would be some one else—the police!

That nicety of balance was gone. They were struggling, lurching, staggering in each other's embrace again—he and this Maggot, who snarled and cursed with panting breath. Their heads were almost on each other's shoulders. He could see the straining muscles in the other's neck standing out like great purple, swollen cords. And as he whirled now this way and that, he caught glimpses of the red-headed man. The red-headed man seemed to be quite unconcerned for the moment with his companion's struggle. He picked up the package of banknotes from the floor, examined it, dropped it again and ran to Bookie Skarvan's side.

A queer, hard smile came to Dave Henderson's lips. This panting thing with arms locked like a gorilla's around him seemed to be weakening a little—or was it a trick? He tightened his own hold and edged his own hands a little higher up—and still a little higher. If he could only tear himself loose for the fraction of a second, and get his fingers on that panting throat! No, the man wasn't weakening so much after all! The man seemed to sense his intention; and with a sudden twist, each endeavoring to outmaneuver the other, they spun in a wider circle, like drunken dancers in some mad revel, and crashed against the wall and rebounded from it, and hung again, swaying like crazy pendulums in the middle of the floor.

The red-headed man's voice came suddenly from across the room:

"Soak him, Maggot!"

That was the Scorpion. The Scorpion seemed to be taking some interest at last in something besides Bookie Skarvan and the package of money.

A grunted oath from Dave Henderson's antagonist answered.

"Damn it, I can't! Curse you, why don't you lend a hand!"

WITH a quick, sudden wrench Dave Henderson tried to free himself. It resulted only in a wild swirl in a half circle that almost pitched him, and with him the other, to the floor. If it be saw the Scorpion now. The Scorpion had risen to his feet from Bookie Skarvan's side and was balancing a revolver in his hand; and now the Scorpion's voice seemed to hold a sort of purring note, velvet in its softness.

"All right, then, Maggot! We might as well have a clean-up here, since he's started it. I guess we came just about in time or he'd have had the money as well as our fat friend there—that he got. It looks as though we ought to even up the score." The revolver lifted in the Scorpion's hand. "Jump away, Maggot—I'm going to lead the ace of trumps!"

The eyes were white—not blue; there was no blue in them; they were white—two little white spots across the room. They held a devil's menace in them—like the voice—like the purring voice that was hideous because it was so soft. God could he hold this Maggot now—not wrench himself free, but hold the man here in his arms—keep Maggot between him and those white eyes, that looked like wicked little plague spots which had eaten into that grotesque red-thatched face.

Maggot was fighting like a demon now to tear himself free. A sweat bead sprouted out on Dave Henderson's forehead and rolled down his face. The white eyes came dancing nearer—nearer. They circled and circled,

And then the Scorpion fired—but the revolver was pointed now across the room, and the slight, feeble figure swayed and recovered herself, and went on as he circled—Maggot was the shield. He whirled this way and that. The muscles of his arms cracked as they swung and whipped Maggot around in furious gyrations.

A soft rang out. Something sang with an angry hum and hot breath past Dave Henderson's cheek. The velvet voice laughed. Maggot screamed in a mixture of rage and fear.

"Curse you, you fool! Youse hit me!"

"I'll get him next time, Maggot," purred the velvet voice.

The white eyes kept too far away—that was what was the matter—too far away. If they would only come near—near enough so that of a sudden he could get his grip and launch this squirming human shield full, like a battering ram, into those white eyes. That was the only chance there was. Only the Scorpion was too cunning for that—he kept too far away.

Dave Henderson swung madly around again, intercepting Maggot's body as the Scorpion darted to one side; and then suddenly, and for the first time, there came a sound from Dave Henderson's lips—a low cry of pain. Teresa!

Then reason came again. The police! At any moment now—the police. In an instant he had caught Teresa up in his arms. She wasn't dead—he could hear her breathing—only it was weak—pitifully weak. There should be an exit to the fire escape from this floor—but it was dark and he had no time to search—it was quicker to go up the stairs—where he knew the way—and out through his own room.

Stumbling, staggering in the darkness, holding Teresa in his arms, he made his way upstairs. The police—his mind centered on that again. If she and he were caught here, his identification as Dave Henderson, which would ultimately ensue, would damn her; this money, wrapped so tenaciously in her arms, would damn her; and, on top of that, old score of the police in San Francisco, there had been ugly work here in this house tonight. If it were not for the money, the criminal box played upon the police in the disappearance of Dave Henderson would not be so serious—but the money was here, and in that box she had had a part, and the shadow of Nicolo Capriano still lay across her shoulders.

The night air came gratefully cool upon his face. He drew it in in great, gasping breaths, greedily, hungrily. He had gained the fire escape through the window now, and now he passed for the first time to listen. There was no sound. Back there inside the house it was as still as death. Death! Well, why shouldn't it be, there was death there, and—

His arms tightened suddenly in a great, overwhelming paroxysm of fear around Teresa, and he bent his head, bent it lower, lower still, until his face was close to that white face he held, and through the darkness his eyes searched it in an agony of apprehension.

And then he started forward again and began to descend the fire-escape; and now he groped unasily for foothold as he went. It seemed rickety and unstable, this spidery thing that sprawled against the side of the wall, and it was dark, and without care the foot would slip through the openings between the treads. It had not seemed that way when he had gone up and down when disposing of the values. Only now it was a priceless burden that he carried—this form that lay close-pressed against his breast, whose touch, alternately now, brought him a sickening sense of dread and a surging hope that sent the blood leaping like a millrace through his veins.

He went down, step after step, his mind and brain shrieking at him to hurry because there was not a single second to lose—but it was slow, maddeningly slow. He could not see the treads, not only because it was dark, but because Teresa's form was in his arms. He could only feel with his feet—and now and then his body swayed to preserve his balance.

Was there no end to the thing! It seemed like some bottomless pit of blackness into which he was descending. And it seemed as though this pit held an abominable significance in its blackness and its depth, as though it beckoned him on to engulf them; it seemed—it seemed—God, if she would only move, if she would not lie so still, so terribly still in his arms!

Another step—another—and then his foot, searching out, found only space beneath it. He must free one arm now, so that he could cling to the bottom tread and lower himself to the ground. It was only a short drop, he knew, for the lower section of the fire-escape was one of those that swung on hinges, and when, previously, coming up, Teresa had held it down for him, he had been able to reach it readily with a spring from the ground. But he dared not jump even that short distance now with Teresa, wounded, in his arms.

He changed her position now to throw her weight into the hollow of his left arm, lifting her head so that it lay high upon his shoulder—and with the movement her hair brushed his lips. It brought a sudden, shoking sob from Dave Henderson, and in a great yearning impulse he let his head sink down until his cheek for an instant laid against hers—and then, the muscles of his right arm straining until they cracked, he lowered himself down and dropped to the ground.

He ran now, lurching, across the yard and out into the lane, and here he paused again to listen. But he heard nothing. He was clear of that cursed trampoline now—if he could only keep clear! He ran on again, stumbling again, with his burden. And now, though he did not pause to listen any more, it seemed as though his throbbing eardrums caught the sounds at last that they had been striving to hear. Wasn't that the police behind there now—on the street in front of the Iron Tavern? It sounded like it—like the arrival of a police patrol.

He reached the shed where he had hidden the values, entered, and laid Teresa tenderly on the floor. He used his flashlight then—and a low moan came from his lips. The bullet had cut across the side of her neck just above the shoulder; the wound was bleeding profusely, and over the package of banknotes, around which her arms were still tightly clasped, there had spread a crimson stain. He drew her arms gently apart, laid the package on the floor, and then, wrenching one of the valves open, snatched at the first article of linen that came to hand.

HIS lips trembled, as he did his best to staunch the flow of blood and bind the wound.

"Teresa! Teresa!" Dave Henderson whispered. Her eyes opened—and smiled. She made an effort to speak. He bent his head to catch the word.

"Dave—where—where are we? Still in the house?"

"No!" he told her feverishly. "No! We're clear of that. We're in the shed here in the lane where I took the values." She made a slight affirmative movement of her head.

"Then go—go at once—Dave—for help!"

Her eyes had closed again. "Yes!" he said. His voice was choking. He called her name. "Teresa!" There was no answer. She had lapsed back into unconsciousness. And then the soul of him spoke its agony. "Oh, my God, Teresa!" he cried brokenly, and swayed to his feet.

An instant he stood there, then stooped, picked up the package of banknotes, thrust it into the open valve, closed the valve, carried it into a darker corner of the shed, and went to the door.

He looked out. There was, no one in sight in the darkness. But then, what interest would the police have in this section of the lane? There was nothing to connect it with the Iron Tavern! He stepped outside and broke into a run down the lane, heading for the intersecting street in the opposite direction from the Iron Tavern. He must get help! A queer, mirthless laugh on his lips. A wounded woman in the lane was the connecting link with the Iron Tavern. And yet he must get help.

A wounded woman in the lane was the connecting link with the Iron Tavern. And yet he must get help.

Well, there was only one source from which he dared ask help—only one—Millman. He ran on. Millman! Something within him rebelled at that. But Teresa was perhaps—perhaps—No, he would not let his mind even frame the word. Only one thing was paramount now—she must have help at once. Well, God knew, he could trust Millman! Only there seemed some strange irony here that chastened him. And yet—Yes, this was strange, too! Suddenly he became strangely content that it should be Millman.

He reached the street, and looked up and down. It was 4 o'clock in the morning, and the street was dark and deserted except for a single lighted window that shone out half-way down the block. He ran toward it. It proved to be an all-night restaurant, and he entered it, and asked for the telephone, and shut himself up in the booth.

A MOMENT more and he had the St. Lucian Hotel on the wire. "Give me Mr. Millman—Mr. Charles Millman," he requested hurriedly. The hotel operator answered him. It was impossible. A guest could not be disturbed at that hour. It was against the rules, and—

Dave Henderson was pleading hoarsely into the phone.

"Give me Millman! Let me speak to him! It's life and death!"

"I—I can't!" The operator's voice, a girl's, was hesitant, less assured.

"For God's sake, give me Millman—there's a life at stake!" Dave Henderson cried frantically. "Quick! For God's sake, quick!"

"Wait!" she said.

It seemed a time interminable, and then a drowsy voice called:

"Hello! What's wanted?"

"Is that you, Millman?" Dave Henderson asked wildly. "Millman, is that you?"

"Yes," the voice answered.

"It's Dave speaking. Dave—do you understand? I—there's some one badly hurt. I can't tell you any more over the phone; but, in Heaven's name, get a doctor that you can trust, and come!"

"I'll come, Dave," said Millman quietly. To Be Concluded Next Week

Realism Indeed

THE advance agent was in the office of the local dramatic critic of a paper in an Iowa town telling of the wonderful powers of the leading lady of the attraction that was booked for that town the following Tuesday night.

"This woman," said the advance man, "is simply check-full of temperament and realism. Why, sir, her realism is simply astounding! Do you know that in the New York run of our play, when she appeared as the dying mother in the fourth act an insurance man in the audience who had written her a policy for $20,000 actually fainted right in the theatre!"

Bound to Stop Them

IN a suit in a Virginia court the plaintiff testified that his financial position had always been a good one. Opposing counsel took him in hand for cross-examination and undertook to break down his testimony upon this point.

"Have you ever been bankrupt?" asked the counsel.

"I have not."

"Now, be careful. Did you ever stop payment?"

"Yes."

"Ah, I thought we should get at the truth," observed the cross-examiner with an unpleasant smile.

"When did this suspension of payment occur?"

"When I had paid all I owed," was the naive reply of the plaintiff.

New Methods

THE first morning the new teacher had charge of the village school he taught a class in mental arithmetic, and gave the following example:

"If I had seven oranges, and eleven more are given me, and I then give five of them to a friend, how many oranges have I left?"

He could not understand the puzzled expression of the children's faces, or why he received no answer; but thinking that they must be rather dull, he repeated the question. After a little silence a small hand was raised.

"Well, little boy, how many are left?"

"Please, sir," timidly replied the boy. "We always do our sums with apples."

His Little Pile

MR. RUST, the owner of the sawmill, had his eye on every stick of timber in the county, and the owner of every poor little clump and grove had his eye on Mr. Rust and the rising prices of lumber.

Bill Moore cut his thin squad of pines, trimmed the logs, and piled them in his front lot by the road. Then he waited for the time when he should accidentally be visible on the place and Mr. Rust should drive by.

The encounter took place in due time. Mr. Rust rattled past in his car, took a side-long look at the pile of logs, and called, "Say, Bill, don't you know it ain't polite to throw your toothpicks round the front yard?"

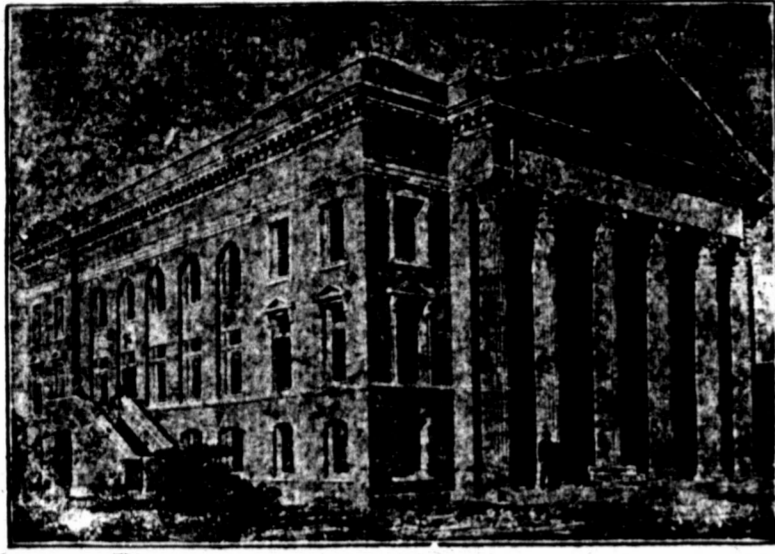

Incredible

"IT HAPPENED," said a railway man, "on one of our trains, which, as I was getting up steam to leave a station, suddenly passed in the middle. The communication cord broke, of course, and one end of the cord struck an old lady in the face."

"Merciful heaven!" she exclaimed, "what was that?"

"The train has broken in two, madam," explained a brakeman.

"And I should think so," continued the old lady, indignantly, as she eyed the broken cord. "Did you really think that a piece of string like that could hold a train together?"

KNOWLEDGE

By RICHARD LLOYD JONES

Education like gold, is valued by everybody. There is no one without it who does not wish he possessed it. There is no one who possesses it that does not wish he had more of it.

Those who are best educated are ignorant of many subjects. No one can know everything. You may speak ten languages and be unable to tell what the weather will be tomorrow.

You may know the laws of navigation but unless you can use these laws to pilot your ship clear of icebergs, that knowledge will be of little worth.

Abstract knowledge is of little value. Pure culture is not an achievement of which to boast. It is the applied knowledge that is worth while. Learn that you may achieve. Acquire wisdom that you may serve.

Knowledge put to use is power.

It is applied knowledge that lifts one man above another.

Genius is the capacity to use knowledge, to weave it into a fabric or mould it into a structure, to give it order and beauty.

There is no culture that is antagonistic to the knowledge to which you hitch your reputation. The wise man will know as much as he can about as many things as he can.

The more knowledge a man has the better will he do his work and the more surely will he understand his limitations and guard against them.

No knowledge is harmful; all knowledge is helpful. And to be able to know that you do not know is in itself knowledge.

The "know-it-all" is distrusted by all. The world respects the intelligence of the man who frankly admits his ignorance.

The most helpful knowledge is that of knowing where we can go to learn, and from whom we can learn.

Knowledge always demands a companion virtue before it becomes effective. You must put it to an honest use if you would apply it. You must put it to an honest use if you would have it serve you.

Knowledge without integrity is dangerous. Integrity without knowledge is weak.

An ancient adage tells us that whosoever acquires knowledge does not practice it, resembles him who ploughed but did not sow.

To possess knowledge and lack purpose is to furnish your house and not occupy it.

The purpose of education is to improve the tools with which you carve out your life work and destiny.

Knowledge is the only wealth you cannot lose; it is the only jewel that will not dim. Like the sun, it lights our pathway and lures us to noble deeds.

REAL TAX REVISION.

The general popular enthusiasm for the official proposals of naval reduction ought to be noticed and warning to congressmen. The people all over the country hope to be relieved largely of the crushing continuous burden of federal taxation.

The strength of the popular desire for the cutting of naval expenses, the national perception of the necessity of economy, ought to stir congress, and prominently the republicans in congress, to do something to redress the republican promises of 1920, to pass a genuine tax revision bill, to relieve and encourage business, to give it a chance to be revived with new capital.

It is heartening to see that Senator Smoot is going to keep up his fight for the enactment of the sales tax, the simplest, most equitable and just of taxes, and a sure producer of revenue. Mr. Smoot recalls the fact that seven or eight years ago he was the only member of the senate in favor of the sales tax.

DECIDE ON TEST CASE AT TRIAL OF INJUNCTION SUIT

With an agreement from the city with reference to several minor points and an agreement between both the city and F. H. Clisbee as to a test suit in the city court with reference to the soliciting of business on railroad property, the injunction suit of F. H. Clisbee against J. B. Pitts, police commissioner, came to an abrupt ending in the 20th district court before Judge H. F. Weiden, Saturday morning.

The suit filed by Clisbee attacked Ordinance No. 331 of the city with reference to regulations governing access to business on Eighth street and in the vicinity of the union depot and on the railroad property.

It was agreed upon by both litigants to have a test case through the city court with reference to the claimed right of Mr. Clisbee to solicit business on the railroad property in the face of his contract with the railroad and over and against a city ordinance prohibiting this practice.

7 Special Trains Chartered for Game At College Station

COLLEGE STATION, TEXAS, Nov. 19.—Seven special trains have already been chartered at different points in the state for handling the crowds to College Station on Nov. 20 for the annual Southwestern conference championship football game between the A. & M. College of Texas and the University of Texas.

Three of the specials will come from Austin, one from Waco one from Fort Worth and Dallas and two from Houston.

Extensive plans are being made by the college to entertain all who come. The Y. M. C. A. building, which includes a well furnished ball and lounge room, parlors, rest rooms, lavatories and furnished bedrooms and which is centrally located on the campus will be used as headquarters, and numerous employees will be on hand to give any kind of assistance.

With Captain Aubrey Devine, one of the leading conference point winners, and fullback Locke in first class trim the Hawkeyes seem certain of victory over Northwestern today, as the latter team has lost every conference game this season.

Ohio State was expected to have a harder battle for Illinois, the opponent of the Buckeyes today, has shown such consistent improvement since the beginning of the season to make the team a dangerous opponent.

Smith of the Giants was fined $200 by Judge Landis for his actions in the second game of the series. It was in the second game that Smith got into trouble with umpire Moriarity and player Bob Meusel of the Yankees.

Since the National Commission no longer censors, and the players no longer can ease their feelings by announcing how much wine their fine would buy the commission, it became necessary for Smith to unlearn a new way to get rid of his pent-up wrath.

After winning the third game of the series, the Giants were making merry in the club house. Smith was being kidded for drawing a $200 fine.

"If Judge Landis just buys a new hat with part of it, I won't feel so bad."

Clarendon used short end runs, line bucks and passes to good advantage, while Abilene depended solely on old-fashioned line plunging.
