DRILLING CAMPAIGN WILL NOT START UNTIL RAIN FALLS

LACK OF WATER HANDICAPPING OPERATIONS THROUGHOUT THE DISTRICT.

TWO GOOD COMPLETIONS IN WICHITA COUNTY

South Electric and Old Texhoma Pools Each Furnish Good Producers.

Lack of water continues to hamper drilling operations throughout the Wichita Falls district and the starting of the big drilling campaign that was expected to result from the increase in the price of crude will not be made until there have been rains to fill tanks and creeks.

Most of the Young county drilling is along the Clear Fork in which there is still some water, but in some places in Young county salt water is being used in the boilers for trouble ahead.

Probably the most important completion of the week in Wichita county was the Gulf Production company's No. 5 Collett, south of Electric.

In the Old Texhoma district, south of Burkburnett, the Staley Oil company's No. 4 Dodson is swabbing around 200 barrels.

In the Northwest pool production has been increased by cleaning out the old wells but there is little drilling in progress.

Due to the great amount of cleaning out, the older wells in Northwest and Townsite pools in this district enjoyed a gain in production of over 400 barrels a day from the week previous.

The Ryan Petroleum company tested out a well at 1225 feet in their No. 7 on the Nance farm that showed little oil and considerable water and decided to drill deeper; they are now down near 1300 feet. On the Ward-Todd tract the Scott Oil company has set 6-1 on top of the sand at 890 feet and is testing it out.

As soon as the water supply is found sufficient to begin work, at least 25 tests will resume drilling operations throughout this field.

Early this week the Staley Oil company, No. 4 on the Dodson tract, in the Old Texhoma shallow field, was completed in the usual sand and is reported to be flowing and swabbing around 200 barrels.

On the same tract, Lanning & Monnong's No. 4 is reported on the sand at 1025 feet, and is rigging up to drill in; No. 5 has spudded in and is down around 300 feet.

On the Beach land, the Camp Oil and Gas company is drilling around 1200 feet in their No. 3 test, and on the Dodson tract the Camp Oil company's No. 5 is drilling at 590 feet.

The M. K. A. district is in the K. M. A. field the usual amount of cleaning out old wells and general oil field work is going on, with the Gulf Production company and the Brown company doing a little drilling.

Archer county, as far as the oil industry is concerned, is practically doing nothing of any interest at the present time.

One of the interesting tests at present is that of the Ava Development company's test on the J. W. Culbertson ranch, about 1 1/2 miles northeast of the old Panther pool.

The latest development of importance in the Bunker field is the Burton well, located at the northeast corner of the Whittenburg land which went into the pay sand unexpectably at 1255 feet while a bit was being dressed. The well is now making 600 barrels of oil with the prospect of being a bigger well when drilled deeper at the sand was only touched.

There is no better proposition known in the oil game than 600 barrels of oil that produce from a well in nominal and development may be quickly done.

The Harpes Production company has sold 40 acres in the southeast part of the J. W. Howard survey 43 to J. B. Hedrick for a valuable consideration and the terms provide for the drilling of a well on this 40

The Rosewell company is drilling several wells and is 1250 feet deep in the 2-B on the Owen lease. They are also 100 feet deep in the test going down to the east of the field located on the Orrill survey.

The two narrow bends of the Clear Ford above Ellaville continue to get the bulk of the play in this section.

Many locations have been made in the Bunker field this week as the territory has commanded much interest since a pay sand was found at 2600 feet.

company is also drilling an offset in its Brown No. 1 and is down around 400 feet.

The New Domain Oil company No. 1 on the Davis farm is drilling around 700 feet.

Interest in the Panhandle section has been revived to a great extent since the recent advances in the price of crude, and oil men from eastern and California points are arriving daily and the belief is growing that this part of the state is destined to become one of the great oil pools yet uncovered in the country.

desirable land. The Humble Oil Refining company has made their No. 3 location and is hauling out machinery to start at once.

Twenty miles north of the Canadian river in Hutchinson county, the Panhandle company and Walter Cline of the Cline Oil company have made a location on the Whittenburg farm and will erect a derrick as soon for a deep test. The Gulf company has made a location two miles north of this test, which is located four and one-half miles northeast of the Gulf No. 2, on the Burnett ranch in Carson county.

Many companies have a scout securing all parts of the country hereabout, and several men connected with the large companies are making preparations to remove to the same location as the Burnett No. 2, on the Burnett ranch in Carson county.

STREET COMMISSIONER HOPES TO SEE ELEVENTH PAVED EARLY IN 1922.

NEARING COMPLETION ON OHIO AND INDIANA

Practically All of Legal Obstacles to Improvement Now Overcome.

The city's paving program will not necessarily come to a halt with the completion of the present projects on Indiana and Ohio, Street Commissioner Curlee said Saturday.

The task of paving Ohio and Indiana north and south from the wood block paving has been beset with unusual difficulties, practically all of which have now been encompassed.

Property owners between Tenth and Thirteenth on Indiana are now asking for paving, and the necessary formalities have been started.

The paving of Eleventh street has been desired for some time, as it will furnish a new thoroughfare between the business district and Southland addition and part of Floral Heights.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

A COMMUNICATION FROM FATHER BONIFACE

Editor of Daily Times.

The expressions from people high in the estimation of the public of Wichita Falls, disapproving the anti-racial and anti-religious propaganda of certain organizations must have filled every one who is imbued with the American idea of personal liberty with genuine satisfaction.

The great dominant doctrine of the fathers of independence, the great outstanding American doctrine is that all are born free and equal before the law, and in order that the awful violations of conscience of old might be banished forever from the new world, the framers of the American constitution were specific in guaranteeing everyone the right to worship God according to his individual conviction.

While the disapproving declarations of leading men against religious intolerance are gratifying, it is distressing to note the occasional flaring up of religious bias in our own community, which our leading men may brush aside as idle gossip but which nevertheless works as baneful poison if not publicly exposed.

Not many Sundays ago it happened that a certain member of this church, who had extended a very insistent invitation to a Catholic lady friend to attend their church came home and declared to her that they were glad she had not accepted the invitation because she would have heard something which would have humiliated her.

If the reverend pastor would have taken the pains requisite to verify a serious charge against a fellowman before making this charge public he would have found that either a priest of the Catholic church had acted against all Catholic principles, or that the reporter in question was not a person of truthful mind.

Before appearing in public I assured myself that I was not fighting against something imaginary or something based on a misunderstanding. I sent a committee of men to the reverend gentleman to ask him whether or not he had made this statement. He declared that he had substantially made this statement.

In his charge he mentioned no specific person but his vague charge was a specific charge against the Catholic church. Now I admit that it is his duty as a pastor to warn his flock against danger and to denounce sin.

Now assuming for the sake of argument that this charge made by the reverend pastor against an unnamed priest be true in every particular, still he proven anything against the Catholic church as was his sole purpose?

What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. Has he proven that the assumed action of the priest is in harmony with the teachings of the Catholic church? Has he not heard of any attempt by the reverend gentleman in this line, but if he should have attempted such it would be easy to prove that he is wrong.

THE WOMAN'S PAGE

MUSICIAN'S FIRST Open Program to Be Given Dec. 7

The Musicians' first open program of this year will be given Wednesday evening, Dec. 7, at the Wichita club under the direction of Mrs. F. R. Collard and Mrs. Fred C. Barron.

The numbers will comprise selections by the women's papers, vocal and instrumental solos, and other musical offerings. It is expected to be one of the best ever arranged, and a general invitation is extended to all local music lovers to attend.

MRS. LANGFORD ENTERTAINS FIRST M. E. MISSION CIRCLE Mrs. P. P. Langford was hostess to the members of circle one of the First M. E. Mission Monday afternoon, the lesson subject for the afternoon being the Orientals.

Members of the circle answered roll call with short talks on what to be thankful for, which were followed by the sociological lesson and sentence prayers. Mrs. C. D. Haney read a paper on "Japan," Mrs. O. E. Womack on "Korea," and Mrs. L. A. Fox told an interesting story of Korea.

During the business session $25 was reported collected on dues, and 49 visits to the sick and strangers, while each member reported sending a Thanksgiving card to a member of the circle who is ill away from home.

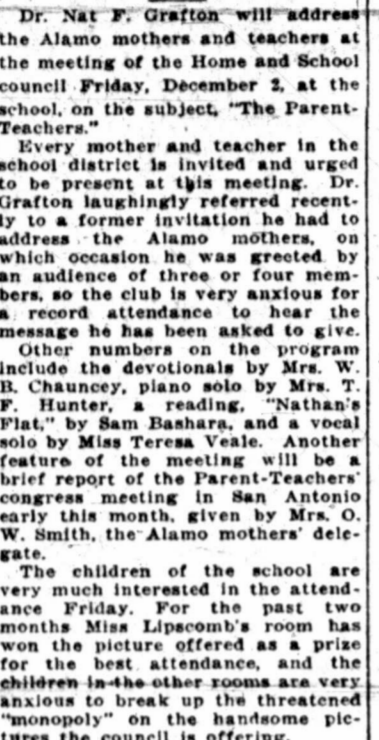

At the dinner the guests included Misses Ruth Nolen, Cecelia Adickes and Marlin Maer, and Messrs. Weldon, Charles and Robert Nolen, and Raymond Meyers. The same party enjoyed the bridge game at the Weldon home.

A new social club organized this past week held its first meeting Friday evening with Mrs. J. C. Walker, 1602 Tenth street, tables were arranged for "forty-two" in the prettily decorated living room, and a most pleasant couple of hours spent at the game.

CULTURE CLUB STUDIES "SECOND MRS. TANQUERAY" The culture club met Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Ira Craig, 1516 Eleventh street, with Mrs. J. W. Stone as the study leader.

DR. GRAFTON TO ADDRESS ALAMO MOTHERS FRIDAY Dr. Nat F. Grafton will address the Alamo mothers and teachers at the meeting of the Home and School council Friday, December 2, at the school, on the subject, "The Parent-Teachers."

FIRST DISTRICT PRESIDENT

FASHIONS

Age cannot wither nor custom stale the innate variety of fashion. Here are two dance frocks of the vintage of 1921. Now who dare complain of the tyranny of fashion.

At the dinner the guests included Misses Ruth Nolen, Cecelia Adickes and Marlin Maer, and Messrs. Weldon, Charles and Robert Nolen, and Raymond Meyers.

PLENTY OF COMEDY IN "THE MISLEADING LADY" AT THE WICHITA THEATRE THIS WEEK

Palace Closes.
Announcement was made last week by managers of the theatre that the Palace would be closed for the rest of the winter. All special attractions booked for showing here will in the future be presented at the Olympic.

EMPRESS FILMS OFFERING SHOWS THAT "MOONSHINE SOCIETY HAS AWFUL KICK"
A drama of youth and romance, "When We Were Twenty-One," featuring H. B. Warner, will be the Monday and Tuesday offering at the Empress theatre this week, according to announcements by Manager Will Page. The picture, which is a Pathé release directed by Henry King, has been adapted from the hit Goodwin stage success of the same name.

It tells of that period when a young man sows his wild oats and the trouble which he has in getting rid of the results. Claire Anderson, Minna Grey and Claud Peyton appear in the cast in support of Mr. Warner.

Alice Brady in "Dawn of the East," a Realart production, comes Wednesday and Thursday. Kenneth Harlan, the popular leading man, who has appeared in support of Constance Talmadge in all of her recent offerings, is cast opposite the star and is given opportunity to display his physical prowess in a Chinese opium den which is the chief locale of the picture.

"Dawn of the East" is distinctly an Oriental picture, with all the lavish settings and scenes characteristic of such plays.

A Jack London story, "The Little Fool," with an all-star Metro cast comes for the final two days of the week, bringing a touch of accidental pug strategy in contrast with the preceding films. Milton Sills, Oro Carew, Nigel Barrie and Marie Prevost are included in the list of stars appearing in the picture. The discovery by a flighty young girl that moonshine society has an awful kick forms the basis of the production.

BOB McLEAN AND HAROLD LLOYD SHARE HONORS ON NEW OLYMPIC MOVIE BILL

"Passing Thru," the latest Thomas H. Ince-Paramount comedy starring Douglas MacLean, which comes to the Olympic theatre Monday and Tuesday is the humorous tale of a young man whose willingness to assume the troubles of others involves him in serious difficulties.

Billy Barton, the leading character portrayed by Mr. MacLean, first draws a sentence to the penitentiary through having assumed the blame for a bank theft of which he was entirely innocent. Before he is placed behind the bars, however, he makes his escape in a spectacular train wreck and seeks refuge in the village of Culverton. Here, befriended a lazy mule being beaten by his master gets him into more difficulties, and his misfortunes continue to pile up until the final scenes of the story when a deluge of good luck more than evens the score.

A big double bill, the United Artists production "Carnival" and the latest Harold Lloyd comedy, "Never Weaken," furnish the attraction at the Olympic for the last four days of the week. The big feature is a story of Venice during her famous carnival time, and the scenes of the picture were actually taken in the historic city of canals. The story takes place during the annual carnival period and the events portrayed on the screen are set in the least exaggerated.

"Never Weaken" is Lloyd's first comedy offering in some months and is said to be the best he has ever given to the screen. It is a hilarious three reeler, with most of the events taking place on the roof of sky scrapers and other precarious perches.

CIRCUS PERFORMANCES HOLD CONTRACTS TO DELIGHT PUBLIC

Little dogs and big elephants, cute ponies and beautiful white ring horses, petite girl riders in spangles and pink silk and "Poodles" liameford, grotesque in voluminous evening clothes dancing, somersaulting, tumbling, sprawling on the back, the neck, the tail and underneath the barrel of his racing station. Surely the circus is filled with contrasts. And the Sells-Floto circus seeks always more contrasts, more variety. That is why its management this year has secured the Hanneforders from the New York Hippodrome; the Odonos, from PUBLILOS Spanish circus; the Nelsons, the Ottavagas Japane, the Hamido Madri Arabs and scores of other features.

All these acts and many more, of course, will come to Wichita Falls Monday, and they will be seen in three rings and on the two stages of the Sells-Floto big top.

The performances open this year with a spectacular extravaganza of bewildering beauty. "The Birth of the Rainbow," in which 1,000 people and 400 animals appear in costly garb and trappings. The groupings and effects in this kaleidoscopic spectacle are as unusual as they are beautiful. Scores of ballet girls take part. And Sells-Floto has spared no effort to present pretty girls. Their costumes for this pageant were all made by a great New York modiste.

NEW RESIDENCES TO VALUE OF $400,000 BEING BUILT HERE

LIST INCLUDES SEVERAL FINE HOMES AND MANY LESSEB ONES.

STILL GREATER ACTIVITY IN SIGHT FOR 1922

Numerous Bungalows Under Construction—Several Suburban Home Buildings.

New residences valued at more than $400,000 are now under construction in and near Wichita Falls and others which are being planned will add $160,000 more to the total, according to figures compiled Saturday from local architects and contractors.

Architects reported that a number of other Wichitans are tentatively planning handsome new homes, but that work will not start until 1922.

The new home of E. B. Cox, on the Seymour road, is almost finished, and will be ready for occupancy early in December. It is in a section where there are already several handsome homes, and where more than one Wichita expects to build in 1922.

In the 1706 block on Tenth street the new home of T. W. Roberts is also nearing completion. This will be, when finished, one of the finest smaller residences in Texas, modern and elaborate in all its appointments.

On Archer street near the Valley tracks, the suburban home of W. P. Weeks has progressed to a stage where an idea of its size and appearance may be obtained. There will be few homes in North Texas that can be classed as finer, and with the ample yard space available, Mr. Weeks expects to have a home of unusual attractiveness both as to the house itself and as to its surroundings.

Among the pretty new homes in Rural Heights is that of T. F. Duncan, on Ninth street, in a section so replete with handsome residences that it is one of the show spots of the city. Mr. Duncan is building a two-story brick residence there.

Work is just getting under way on the new home of Judge J. T. Montgomery on Buchanan street, description of which appeared recently in The Times.

In the 1803 block on Tenth, J. J. Simon is completing a pretty two-story brick residence that is expected to enhance the attractiveness of the city's chief residence thoroughfare.

D. W. Wiley, local cotton man, is building a substantial two-story home six miles southeast of the city, on the Henrietta road, and is setting an example that probably many other Wichitans will follow when the county's paving program is completed.

In addition to the residences mentioned above, there are scores of bungalows costing $2,000 to $10,000, in all parts of the city, and increasing activity in residence building is noted. With the total cost of the homes listed above estimated at around $250,000, it is thought that fully as much more is being expended at present on less pretentious homes.

ONLY ONE TELEPHONE GIRL IN WICHITA FALLS 24 YEARS AGO, AND SOON THERE'LL BE NONE

Along with the old year and knee length dresses, Wichita Falls is going to have to discard its "telephone girls." Before the first of January, metallic clickings will replace high pitched voices forever seeking numerical knowledge and forever unassuming with the responses. For 24 years that gentle interrogation has been at the end of every telephone line in Wichita Falls, the voice that never ceased, or tired, or slept. There are many mighty machines arranged in close files in the telephone building waiting to silence that voice and put an end to its incessant questioning.

Already demonstrators are on the streets with their explanations of "mechanic switching" and by December 30, it'll be your finger in the dial and no one to blame for the wrong number. Ninety-five local operators will be transferred to other work at that time and the mechanism for automatic operation set in motion. There'll be only the "E. B. X" girl to talk to you when you need her, or the operator at the service phone who tells you that shaking the receiver and causing only one more impossible for the wrong number you've dialed to reach the party you're looking for.

Telephone operators in Wichita Falls filled an interval of 24 years between the old-fashioned womanly and the new machine switching mechanism now being completed. The first telephone instruments known in Wichita Falls included a miniature switch board of their own, equipment for ringing, and wire cables that carried individual wires for every instrument enrolled in the system. The subscriber did his own plugging, his own ringing, and took his chances at finding his party line busy for hours. Attached to the switchboard of each instrument was a card containing the name, number and ring of each of the subscribers, together with the key to the board and the "coffee mill" ringing apparatus. The system could accommodate only 50 separate phones so that extensions and auxiliaries made party lines numerous. In those days the two banks of the city were numbered 1 and 2, the Heath-Mears Coal and Grain company No. 1 and so on in succession.

Files at the telephone office show 1897 as the first year of operation under the present company. Local phones were very few, and there was only one long distance line, extending to Henrietta, then the business center of several surrounding counties. Coffin-rill ringing and wall telephones were still in order, with one operator during the day and another at night. Headquarters were on the second floor of a building on Ohio.

The original operators are reminiscent of those first days when the manual phones were strung to the town. Subscribers were apt to speak into the receiver, then move it rapidly back to the ear, fearing to lose the answer to their questions. Negroes, especially, were slow in understanding. Enjoying the novelty of the telephone they had a habit of calling friends on the one long distance line, usually enquiring anxiously, "Didda, get mah letter, Bill!" and letting it go at that. Many of them are still worried about telephone conversations and are faced now with the ordeal of mastering still another process.

The lone girl operator who used to manage the exchange had a merry time of it, according to her own story, enjoying the envy and admiration of other girls in her position as pioneer in the center of an uncivilized civilization. Christmas and holidays brought flowers and candy, and there were always compliments and attentions and adventures in hearing other people's conversations.

But she had to use the coffee mill herself to ring her neighbors and friends at an interval of 24 years, and heard of motors which did the ringing themselves by mere pushing of a button.

"So I teased the Dallas office for a motor," she said, "and when it came the ice factory agreed to let us leave it down there and borrow it for our own use. And there it stayed until the company had its own power house several years later. It was a stirring position, the business of managing a one-man telephone exchange in those days. Without any telegraphic news service, and, indeed, with scarcely any other connection with the outside, the town read bulletins of the Spanish-American war received at the telephone office and posted in the window of T. B. Noble's confectionery across the street. Thus came the news of the sinking of the Maine, and at another time, of the assassination of McKinley. The news was relayed out of the Dallas office and distributed here often in advance of newspaper bulletins and occasionally before the rival Western Union had announcements to make.

There's an old law suit on record in the county court that removes all doubt of the efficient development of the exchange during the past score of years. R. E. Taylor vs. the Southwestern T. B. Telephone company, is the title of the action and there was a $2,500 judgment in favor of the plaintiff. R. E. Taylor

DECLARES EUROPE IN SYMPATHY WITH ARMS CONFERENCE

AMARILLO, TEXAS, Nov. 26.—"People in Scotland and Europe are extraordinarily sympathetic about the disarmament conference and the policy put forward by Secretary Hughes will receive very near unanimous support in our country," declared Alexander Mackay, president of the Matador Land and Cattle company. Mr. Mackay's home is in Dundee, Scotland, and he left with a party for America about six weeks ago to make a tour of inspection of holdings in this country.

Mr. Mackay declared that he believed few persons in his country would dissent from the disarmament proposals made by Mr. Hughes. "Range conditions are generally very good, although some rain would be beneficial for watering purposes," said Mr. Mackay. "As to the cattle industry, prices of stock are not very satisfactory, but we are hopeful that the market will become higher."

Included in the party are W. L. Patullo of Dundee, Scotland, secretary of the Matador Land and Cattle company; Mrs. H. F. Mackay, daughter-in-law of Mr. Mackay; J. C. Johnson of Edinburgh, Scotland, stockholder and director of the Matador Land and Cattle company, and Mr. Mackay.

During the weeks that the party has been in America, holdings have been inspected in Montana and the Dakotas. The Matador ranch has been visited, and the party is now breaking up. Mr. Johnston left last night for Spokane, Wash., while the others will continue their inspection of holdings.

"Am I My Brother's Keeper"

We have condemned Cain for this selfish remark throughout the history of the world, and yet many of us draw our skirts about us and pass by on the other side when we see the unfortunate, the hungry, the poor, the afflicted, the fatherless and motherless.

Do you know the enormous amount of work that charitable workers are doing every day in Wichita Falls?

RED CROSS: "The greatest mother in the world." Maintains three nurses answering calls wherever there is sickness and suffering. Looks after disabled soldiers, assists them in obtaining compensation and pensions, assists the widows, dependent mothers and children in obtaining war risk insurance.

SALVATION ARMY: During the past year the Salvation Army distributed $9,700 worth of charity in form of free meals, beds, medicine, Christmas baskets, groceries and Christmas gifts. Brightened the homes of many people on Christmas morning with their baskets of groceries and Christmas chicken, and gladdened the hearts of 600 kiddies with Christmas presents. "Even as they preach, they practice Christianity. They apply faith to deeds and present Christ in things that can be done."

BOY SCOUTS: Not only the future citizens, the leaders of tomorrow, but the junior citizens of today engaged in civic improvement and welfare work for the community. Self development of the highest type and doing "a good turn daily" are the aims of the Boy Scout organization. They have their own band and at present are working on plans for establishing a permanent camp here.

Y. W. C. A.: Aim, to give every young girl and woman opportunities for four-fold development, mental, spiritual, social and physical. Offers free employment service to girls and aids them in finding quarters in comfortable home surroundings. The organization maintains the residence, Charlotte Kemp Hall, for girls and caters to every taste and pocketbook in their cafeteria. The Travelers' Aid at the station helps girls and women traveling alone to find their relatives and friends, assists the sick and needy and helps women with children. The various clubs of the Y. W. C. A. offer a field for development and social service to the young girl in her teens, to the industrial girl and to the business woman.

DAY NURSERY: During the past year over 500 children have been cared for, with an average daily attendance of 20 children. As many as 35 have been cared for in one day. Mothers who have to work leave their children here, where they are bathed and fed, taught songs and games, given medical care and an afternoon nap every day. Wholesome food and plenty of milk are given the children. Many mothers who would otherwise be obliged to give up their family, by means of this institution, are enabled to keep their little family together.

WELFARE COUNCIL: Helps the unfortunate to help themselves. This organization seeks to rehabilitate the family, to find the underlying causes of distress and failure and then sets out to remove the causes. It is not merely a dispenser of money, but a reinstater of citizenship. Helps to find employment for the unemployed, gives medical aid, gives out loans and groceries to relieve immediate distress, keeps families together, looks after neglected children and discourages the habitual beggar from becoming a parasite upon society. An organization for investigation and relief.

TEXAS CHILDREN'S HOME SOCIETY: A state-wide movement with a local office in this city for the placing of orphan children in good homes. Also aids the needy mother in keeping her family together by finding employment for her and providing for temporary care for the children while she is working. Believing the wealth of the community is its children, the future citizens, this organization aims to place all children in surroundings that will make possible wholesome development mentally, morally and physically.

The "Letters of W. H. Page," former ambassador to Great Britain, now appearing in The World's Work, make an interesting reading as any of the commentaries of the great war which have yet appeared in print.

He makes it clear in his accounts of conversations with Sir Edward Grey, the head of the British foreign service, that England was drawn into the war because Germany had violated the neutrality of Belgium.

WOOD-SHED DAYS.
We're done with wood-shed days, it seems. And yet they linger in my dreams.

Then cheeks were red and hunger grew
As drifts of snow I struggled through
And built a bank on either side
To make a pathway two-feet wide.

At night before I went to bed,
"Get in the coal," my father said,
And through the biting winter air
I tread that slippery thoroughfare.

I'd place the scuttle by the wood,
Then try to guess just where it stood.
And when at last my face was turned
To where the kitchen gauntlet burned,

Those tasks are gone, the shed's no more,
The time of cheerful stoves is o'er;
The father, too, has passed away,
And yet with every winter day,

REPUBLICAN LEADERS ENTERTAIN FEELING OF DEEP CONCERN OVER ELECTIONS OF THE COMING YEAR

By MARK SULLIVAN
National Political Correspondent of The N. Y. Evening Post and the Wichita Daily Times.
(Copyright, 1921 N. Y. Evening Post)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—As the republican leaders reflect upon the end of the special session congress and look forward to the elections of the coming year, they are a feeling of deep concern. They are good reason to be apprehensive; these elections are important to them, and the record of the present congress is universally looked upon by the country as disappointing. A good many of the republican war horses are among the senators, and the congressmen as well, who must seek re-election next year, and who will be judged by the record of the present republican congress.

In New York, Senator Calder comes up for re-election, and the democrats are looking forward with confidence to putting up a strong man like ex-Governor Alfred Smith to run against him. In Minnesota, Senator Kellogg comes up for re-election. In Massachusetts, Senator Lodge must submit himself to the electorate. In North Dakota, Senator McCumber must solicit the votes of that very volatile state. In Connecticut the veteran Senator McLean comes up for re-election; in New Jersey, Senator Freylinghousen; in Maine, Senator Hale; in California, Senator Johnson; in Washington, Senator Polk; in West Virginia, Senator Sutherland; in Indiana, Senator New has two difficult hurdles ahead of him. In the republican primaries it is anticipated that he may be opposed by ex-Senator Beveridge; and whatever republican wins that senatorial nomination, of his party will be met with aggressive opposition by the democrats, many of whom talk of putting up ex-Vice President Thomas R. Marshall. It can be taken as a certainty that some republican senators now securely in office will meet defeat next year.

Record Will Look Bad. When the democrats analyze the record of the present republican congress, and present it to the country in the way best adapted to partisan advantage, the record is going to look pretty bad for the republicans. The two principal things which the republican leaders promised again and again, and which they fully expected to perform, have not yet been done. The republicans promised a new tariff bill, and have not written it. They promised to revise the taxes; and while they have written a new bill, they have not yet given it the kind of tax revision that the country expected. The republican leaders themselves regard the record as a failure.

For failing to write a new tariff bill the republicans have an alibi that has much to commend it to reasonable persons. The republican leaders say when they began to write a new tariff bill, they found the conditions such that it was impossible to write a tariff bill of the kind for several years. They found the conditions of international exchange so utterly unstable, and they found the dislocations of trade throughout the world so chaotic, that it was impossible to find data of a kind suitable to be made the foundations of a permanent tariff measure. The republicans have the hope that during the coming few months several things may happen which will enable them to go ahead with the new tariff bill with greater confidence. In a vague way, the republicans hope that there may be a new international conference, which will stabilize international finance and end the chaotic fluctuations of exchange. Either through this agency, or through other agencies, or through the mere passage of time, it is hoped that conditions will arrive sufficiently stable to be made the basis of calculation for a tariff measure.

Political Discontent. How the country will view all this remains to be seen. It would be difficult to exaggerate the state of political discontent throughout the country, as well as the conditions of industrial stagnation, especially in the farming communities of the middle west and west. One thing that can be taken as certain in connection with the making of a new tariff bill next year is that the administration will urge that the new tariff be made flexible, and that the tariff commission be given sufficient power to function and to adjust the tariff rates from time to time, in accordance with such conditions or emergencies as may arise. For the failure to make a thoroughly revised and reasonably permanent tax bill during the present year, the republicans also have an alibi. They say that financially speaking we are still at war. They say the government's need of money was so imperative that there was no time to turn around. They quote Secretary Mellon as saying that it would take five months for the treasury to readjust itself to a new schedule of taxation even in the comparatively minor matters of getting out new forms and making the other necessary administrative changes. On this point the republicans may also say that by next year several things will have happened which will make it possible to reduce the taxes materially. They say that the results of the present conference will show themselves in greatly reduced appropriations for the army and navy.

Look to Foreign Debts. In addition to that, the republicans hope that the republican obligations owed to us by Europe may be put in such shape that we can expect to begin to receive at least some portion of the interest on them. The receipt of this interest will also operate to reduce taxes. The republicans also hope, with somewhat less certainty, that the interest rates on money may next year reach a point where it will be possible to begin refunding Liberty loans. Whenever conditions permit, it is the purpose of the republicans to spread these loans out over a period of 50 or 60 years. They now run for periods less than half that. As Will Hay expressed it in a speech recently, the republicans take the view that the cost of war should not be borne wholly by the present generation, but should be spread out over several generations of the future. Such a refunding of the national debt would reduce the sinking fund and interest charges materially. This, too, would result in a reduction of taxes.

Out of these things, accomplished or in the way of accomplishment, the republican leaders claim it will be possible, intelligently and effectively, to introduce a materially different schedule of taxes. It will undoubtedly be a part of the administration's program next year to have a sales tax, absorb some of the taxes now raised on incomes. But it is also likely to be a part of the republican program next year to pass the bonus bill for ex-service men. This bonus bill will probably absorb almost all of the new revenue that may be raised through a sales tax.

What is going to happen is that during the very months when the republican congressmen and senators are up for re-election, they will be in process of writing a new tariff bill and a new tax bill. Whether the voters will accept an unimpaired performance in 1922 as a satisfactory answer to promises made in 1920, remains to be seen. The outlook is undoubtedly menacing for the republicans. The democrats, on the other hand, are rapidly becoming well organized to take effective advantage of the republican embarrassment. The new national chairman of the democratic party, ex-Congressman Cordell Hull of Tennessee, is a strong and able man. He comes into his new responsibility with a very favorable momentum of good will and support from all sections of the party. There can hardly be a doubt that the democrats next year will make marked gains in both house and the senate.

CIRCUS, FREE VAUDEVILLE AND OTHER ATTRACTIONS FEATURE TWO DAYS OF TRADE EVENTS

A judicious mixture of pleasure and business has been arranged by the Retail Merchants association for the next three days, in connection with the performance here, and dis-selected this city as the place for disbanding for the season. This announcement of the circus personnel will be in Wichita Falls for most of the week, and local merchants are taking advantage of the extra attraction thus afforded. With special bargain events planned in practically every line of merchandise the two days promise to be exceptional ones for this season, in their offerings to holiday buyers, and it is expected that the double attraction of circus and bargain offerings will be taken advantage of generally.

The first attraction will be a band concert in Bellevue park from 2 to 4 Sunday afternoon, by the circus band. On Monday morning there will be the circus parade at 11 a. m., and afternoon and night performances, the last of the long season for the circus folk.

A free street carnival will be staged Tuesday afternoon on a platform in front of the Kemp hotel corner, with the Nine Famous Arabes troupe performing for the downtown crowd.

THE MOTORISTS' PROBLEMS

By WILLIAM H. STEWART, JR.

Motor Department: I have a 1918 Ford without a starter, which starts very hard when cold. After it is warmed up it runs good and has lots of power. Had valves ground and carbon removed recently. I had no trouble last year starting very easy in any weather. Can you give me your opinion on the transformer that are on the market? Will they help starting? I have been told there is a way of starting on dry cell batteries. Can you tell me how to connect them—Reader.

A weak spark will cause difficult starting. Quite often this is due to weak magnets especially at slow engine speed when starting. Have the magnets tested and be sure that your spark plugs are good. We are not in a position to recommend any kind of transformers. However, you can connect a set of dry cells very easily. On the back of the coil you will find a battery terminal as well as a magnet terminal. Connect one side of battery to this terminal and ground the other side. In starting throw switch over to battery and then back to magnet after starting.

Motor Department: I have a new battery used two months. The negative plates have turned white. The car is used from 200 to 400 miles per week. The lights are on very nearly. On the back of the coil you will find a battery terminal as well as a magnet terminal. Connect one side of battery to this terminal and ground the other side. In starting throw switch over to battery and then back to magnet after starting.

Motor Department: I have a 1912 Ford car which I have run over 50,000 miles. I installed new overhauled bevel head pistons in place of flat head. The engine runs fine, but I only get 12 miles on a gallon of gas. It runs hot and water boils. Previously got 25 miles on a gallon with old pistons. I have made no other change in engine. Do you think the beveled head pistons with more air space make the difference and use more gas? I have to open throttle three or four notches now to get the same speed as before.—A. H.

It is very doubtful whether the new style pistons cause the difference you mention. More than likely the loss is due to improper fitting. When an engine such as the Ford has run 50,000 miles, it is reasonable to believe that the cylinders are worn out or that the pistons have the cylinders reground and new pistons with rings fitted accurately.

Motor Department: I have a 4-cylinder five-passenger car with a magneto. I also run all my lights from storage battery. I have no generator. Could I run an electric horn from magneto instead of from battery? If so, how shall I wire it? Also tell me how many dry batteries will I need to give me the same service a fully charged 6-volt battery will.—Owner.

Your horn would not work well on magneto, as the current is intermittent. Also, when you pushed the button the ignition would fail. Use five cells of dry battery. As each cell has 1 1/2 volts, this will give 7 1/2 volts in theory, which will be reduced to six volts by resistance.

Motor Department: My car has a multiple disk clutch which gives me considerable trouble, as it seems to stick; that is, when I start the engine and try to throw into first speed, the gears do not mesh, although I have clutch out. I find by working the clutch pedal in and out a few times it will allow me to throw into speed. After I get started on the road I do not have any trouble. On examining transmission and clutch I found that clutch pedal needs taking up and also that a collar inside of housing is loose and noisy when clutch is released. Can you tell me how I can remedy this trouble?—F. C.

Try adding kerosene to the oil in the clutch housing or change to thinner oil. If collar is loose and noisy it may need tightening or replacing a job for a competent repair man.

Motor Department: The other day I overrode the ball bearings from my front wheels for inspection. I found the balls apparently all right, but the tracks they run in have some small holes in them. Please let me know if this is anything serious.—W. O.

Evidently the cup and cone are worn out and should be replaced. The balls you have are good and the thin coating of steel has begun to wear through causing loss of power on account of increased friction. The balls will have worn a great deal also, so that the best thing will be a new set of bearings.

Motor Department: Recently I saw two men pushing a stalled Ford off the car tracks. Suddenly it started the car start up like this. I have been other cars pushed without anything similar happening.—H. K.

When he stalled his engine he may have left his transmission in high gear or the adjustment may have been too tight. Pushing the car cranked the engine and it started up. The emergency brake lever on the Ford sets the brake and the gears in neutral at the same time. Sometimes the driver, thinks the gears are in neutral when they are not and the car starts forward when the engine starts.

one and ever since there has been a distinct buzz, especially in the differential. There is plenty of grease in it. Please tell me what the trouble is, and how I fix it. In dry weather my foot doesn't hold very well. What shall I do to fix it?—N. C.

The gears are not lined up properly. The driving pinion and ring gear on differential should be readjusted. Temporary relief may be obtained by using a heavier grease. Probably your brakes need readjusting. Jack up both wheels and set brake part way. Try resistance by turning each wheel and tighten up loose side. Then make sure that brake bands are free when brake is removed by spinning each wheel.

Motor Department: Have just bought a second-hand Ford. When I ran the car about twenty minutes the radiator gets boiling hot and I had to get started, the crank handle went into high gear and will stop if you don't put your foot on the clutch and give her a lot of gas. I had the radiator off and you can hear through it with the needle valve shut tight. Please help me out.—C. O.

Probably cooling system needs cleaning. Dissolve one pound of washing soda in hot water and pour into radiator. Run car as usual all day and then drain it all out. Fill with clean water. Keep spark advanced when running and throttle not so far open. Needle valve is not intended to shut off the radiator entirely, so that is no defect.

Helpful Hints.
If the contact points of the vibrator of an induction coil are too close the current is likely to arc at the contact points, thus preventing the breaking of the primary circuit, and no induced secondary current will result.

When a spring of an exhaust valve breaks and it is necessary to run the car to a repair shop, it may be well to go about it in this way: Remove the spring from the intake valve of the same cylinder and put it on the exhaust valve, because it is possible to run the motor without a spring on the intake valve, as it then may be operated as a suction valve.

In case the spring squeaks it will not be necessary to remove it in order to oil. Jack up frame to take weight of car off spring, remove the clips that hold spring leaves together and pry leaves apart with screwdriver or cold chisel. Graphite grease should then be spread over each leaf, using a tallow knife or thin piece of metal. There is a tool on the market which spreads the grease without requiring that the car be jacked up.

Sometimes a squeak defies detection. Fill an oil gun with transmission oil and squirt it everywhere a squeak may develop; around mud guards, hood, running board, etc.

But squeaks do not always come from the springs. After spending enough time on them, take an oil gun and squirt oil wherever two metal surfaces come together. Hood and radiator, or dash, fenders, running board, brackets, or anywhere else. Squirt it in with plenty of force, and you will probably stop it.

Automobile Hints.
Drain the vacuum tank regularly. Do not run too long on low gear. Motor taxicabs may finally operate in Rome. Connecticut registered 162,526 passenger automobiles on October 1. Taxicabs are barred from several principal streets of Reno, Nev. General Motors is said to be building a $400 air-cooled car. Foreign matter in the fuel system may cause carburetion trouble.

Wash the car frequently with clean, cold water. Do not allow caked mud to remain on the car. Use light grade grease or non-fluid oil for the speedometer shaft. World's record for an automobile traveling one mile in 44 seconds. Test pressure of the tire frequently.

Slow leaks in tires are usually caused from defective valves. Grass wheel at the top and shake sideways to discover loose bearings. Wheel base of English automobiles varies from 80 to 130 inches. Motor vehicles are used extensively in Italy as feeders to the railroads. Engine may overheat if spark is retarded and throttle is too wide open. McKinley was the first president to use an automobile and Roosevelt was the first to drive one. Of the total of 852,900 motor vehicles registered in the United Kingdom, 370,800 are motorcycles. Great Britain collected $10,000,000 in motor taxes for the first four months of 1921.

The New Hudson Super-Six A Greater Value Than Ever

It is a Better Car by Hundreds of Dollars
Yet Costs You Hundreds of Dollars Less

In the new Hudson Super-Six, not only is the beauty of past Hudson coach-work surpassed, but it brings also the most valuable mechanical advancements since the advent of the patented Super-Six motor.

That famous invention is rivaled in interest by the new Hudson. Its advantages are hardly less sensational.

For today's Hudson, too, is the product of new invention. Every phase of motor car operation is affected. Smoother control and riding ease are attained. Starting is easier. And lubrication is quickly, cleanly done with an oil can.

Past Hudsons have won too great a place in the esteem of motorists for us to abandon all that made them famous. Though different in both action and appearance the New Hudson still retains the great qualities of its forerunner, as well as the family resemblance in looks.

Their value, and our pride in them are vouched by the fact that for six years, including last year when the price averaged $750 higher, Hudson has been a consistent sales leader.

Come see the New Hudson. Owners of old Hudsons as well as non-owners will be delightfully surprised in this new motoring luxury.

DU PONT HAS A BULLISH VIEW OF BUSINESS

President of General Motors Corporation Thinks Auto Future Assured.

LANSING, MICH., Nov. 25.—Pierre S. du Pont, president of the General Motors corporation during his inspection of the Olds Motor Works today expressed confidence in the trend of business.

"I am rather bullish in my views," stated Mr. du Pont.

At a dinner to Mr. du Pont, A. J. Sloan Jr., operating vice-president of the General Motors, J. J. Raskob, chairman of the finance committee; William G. Coyne of New York, and C. S. Mott, executive vice-president, and Norval S. Hawkins, sales promoter, of Detroit, given by A. B. C. Hardy, general manager of the Olds Motor Works in his offices today, president of the corporation declared that quality is the big thing in success of the automobile making.

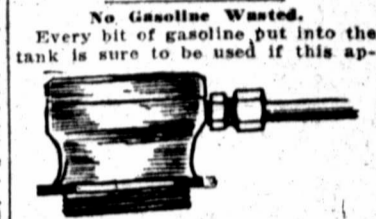

Successful car makers of the future, he said, must make a car that will have real use car value at the end of five years. He told the Olds Motor Works executive officers that the great corporation is hunting for men to fill the bigger jobs.

There are not enough men qualified for the openings today, he stated.

Mr. du Pont expressed confidence in the future of the Olds and showed pleasure at Mr. Hardy's declaration that the Olds Motor Works, now a smaller unit of the General Motors corporation, would in a not far distant future be classed among the larger units.

Regarding business conditions, Mr. du Pont pointed out that the money market is easier and that the business trend is upward. In this belief the surplus of commodities has been about exhausted and that with prices at the present level buying will increase, resulting in the increase of production among many industries.

An upward price trend in some products, including possibly automobiles, is seen by Mr. du Pont. He believes that in some instances the swing toward lower prices has gone too far.

NEW SIX CYLINDER SERIES IS ANNOUNCED BY NASH

Announcement is made by the Nash Motors company of a new series of six-cylinder cars which in appearance, riding comfort and mechanical excellence eclipses anything that heretofore has borne the Nash nameplate. The announcement comes as a distinct and sensational surprise to the automobile industry. Introduction of this series at this time means that Nash is the first in its price-field with a new model for the 1922 season.

The new Nash series includes five-passenger touring, seven-passenger touring, roadster, coupe, sport model and sedan; it is known officially as Nash 691 series.

Twelve years ago when C. W. Nash became identified with automobile manufacturing a new force came into the industry. The public is familiar with the record he has made and in the industry he is an outstanding figure. With the announcement of the greater Nash Six comes the crowning achievement of his career.

"Introduction of the new Nash series at this time means that a man can buy now, enjoy the use of his car all winter and insure against delayed delivery in the spring," said C. R. Voorhis, vice-president and general sales manager of the Nash Motors company. The new and greater Nash Six beyond question meets the demand for increased value with a new standard of riding comfort, a vast development in performance and striking distinction in appearance.

Interesting and Important Facts That Every Motorist Should Know.

A secondary wire from the coil to the plug should never be in contact with any metal.

If the carburetor leaks, the engine will be flooded and may be hard to start.

When grinding valves be careful not to allow any grinding compound to enter the cylinder.

Changes in the specific gravity of the gasoline results in distinct differences as to the ease of starting.

If, after priming, the engine explodes two or three times and then stops, the fuel pipe or the spray nozzle is clogged up.

Dry cells should be wired together from the sine of one coil to the carbon of the next in the series.

The intake valve should never be open before the exhaust valve is closed, because it will take in some of the burned charge along with the mixture.

A good engine oil is one of high gravity, that is light weight, with a maximum high evaporates test and a fluid oil at low temperature.

A continuous clicking, wheezing or sucking noise in a cylinder is generally a sign of loose or worn piston rings.

On high speeds a good cool mixture is obtained because cold air comes in at the auxiliary valve and the air through the hot air pipe has no time to get more than warm.

Water or loose dirt in the carburetor through unstrained gasoline will cause trouble, in which case flush the carburetor and let out the dirt and water through the petcock in the base.

A slight play or lost motion in the timer may be caused by a poor ground connection between the revolving parts of the timer and the engine proper, owing to the lost motion between the worn parts, namely the bushings and gears.

Unless the piping is tight there is danger of excessive vibration which will strain the connections of the intake pipe and cause them to leak.

WHEN ORVILLE BULLINGTON PLAYED PREACHER, AS TOLD BY ONE HIS OF OLD CLASSMATES

ORVILLE BULLINGTON

An intimate and diverting sketch of some of the earlier days of Orville Bullington, local attorney, who is now president of the University of Texas Ex-Students' association, is contained in the current number of the "Alcaldes," the official publication of that organization.

The sketch does not deal with the days when, according to tradition, its subject was a horse-baiting salesman, but it tells of some other early stunts of his.

The author of the sketch ventures the prediction that Mr. Bullington's defection from the democratic ranks is but a temporary one.

The article follows:

"His father was a Presbyterian minister living in Pockville, Park county, where his mother still has her home. Orville, the proverbial modest shrinking violet type of youth, who runs riot in small country towns, despite prophecies of the town cynic, imbued a desire for a sound education. Perhaps he was only coolly seeking to evade hard labor, but the desire got planted and grew and flourished. The first real lift came from an uncle who gave Orville a year at a school in Nashville, whether he travelled on a day coach and with his head out of the coach the greater part of the way. Authorities are yet alive who affirm it a fact that this was the first time Orville ever rode on the cars and that the first night out he did not sleep a wink because his head was out of the window where he could look at Mineola, Marshall, Texarkana and other metropolises he rode through.

"The story may be true. It is also true that the same gentleman has kept up the habit of keeping his head out of the window, at times

EVERYBODY WORKED BUT FATHER

"Father's stomach trouble seemed to be getting worse all the time and finally he had to quit work altogether. Two brothers and myself gave up school and went to work to support the family. Father had lost sixty pounds in weight and was yellow as saffron and no medicine helped him. Telling a friend about it six months ago, she advised taking Murr's Wonderful Remedy. I got a bottle and it helped father at once. He was able to go back to work a month later, has regained his weight and strength and acts like a wood chopper. It is a simple, harmless preparation that removes the catarrhal mucus from the intestinal tract and allays the inflammation which causes practically all stomach, liver and intestinal ailments, including appendicitis. One dose will convince or money refunded. Mack Taylor and druggetts everywhere.—Adv.

learning out so far that he can see around a corner.

"Next, Orville went to Huntsville where he graduated at the Sam Houston normal and where he was invited back last June to deliver the alumni address. Then came two or three years of country school-teaching. Following this necessary step in the progress of many good and near great men, Orville entered the law department of the university in 1902, graduating in 1905, just escaping, with his customary good fortune, the application of the three-year rule.

"For a while thereafter he was county attorney of Knox county, though he didn't get really busy until he moved to Wichita Falls. There he is at present the senior member of the firm of Bullington, Boone, Humphreys and Hoffman, all Texas exes; he belongs to all the orders, societies, clubs, associations, fraternities, which have not blackballed him. His firm represents many of the prominent interests of Wichita Falls and vicinity. For some months recently he served as president of a local bank. He didn't resign and the directors sold the bank. Thus ended Orville's career as a banker. It is said that a few of Orville's wells are yet on the pump and that he let the other fellows suck up all the oil stock, even in the boom days. At any rate he has saved enough to build him a comfortable home, around which he has planted Texas shrubs and trees. In the back yard he keeps in a tank about a million gorgeous gold fish and his first morning's duty is to feed the fishes. There used to be an alligator, but he ate the chickens which Orville couldn't spare.

"At Wichita Falls Orville also found Miss Sadie Kell, '08. Although Orville makes many claims about his house it was Mrs. Bullington who saved the architect's fee by planning it herself, who watched every detail of its building, who saw every brick properly placed, and then made it into a beautiful home.

"Politics Orville's friends were somewhat excited because he took a prominent part in the last state republican campaign and supported its nominee. He is a democrat, however, and his temporary separation from the fold of the faithful was due to his antipathy to the league of nations and the man who was its sponsor. Orville will come back, if he has not already done so, and vote as a regular for the rest of his life. He may have, however, injured his chances for public office should he ever become anxious to speak for the hot policy.

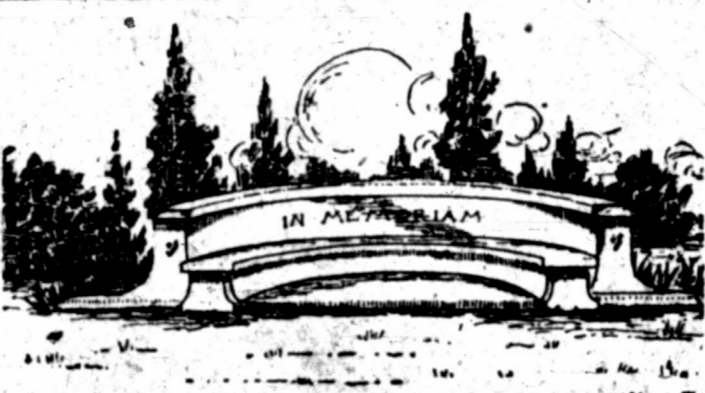

"The subject of this sketch could have accomplished all and much more than has been hinted at and does not have been allotted to the office of president of the ex-students' association. Since he graduated from the university, however, he has always manifested an active interest in its affairs. For several years past he has served on the executive committee. When Dexter Hamilton called a meeting in Dallas in January, 1919, for the purpose of organizing an independent association, Orville was among those present and helped make the scheme possible with his moral support and with his money. Some years before that time he had been active in raising money for a students' loan fund which has now been merged into the students' memorial loan fund, and by his own efforts secured cash subscriptions amounting to $2,000. This money has already assisted under his own name, and which, when realized, will be of substantial benefit to the university.

"As an addenda to this sketch, we here print a story contributed by his friend, Charles Pettit, '04, of Dallas, which probably gives a more accurate interpretation of the real Orville Bullington than has been done in the foregoing paragraphs:

"We were country school teachers together when he was assistant superintendent of a school of two teachers and I was superintendent of a school of twelve pupils. Neither of us was married and neither of us took life very seriously. His salary was fifty dollars per month and mine was forty-five, and everybody, including ourselves, thought we were well paid. Both of us were called 'Pesser,' but it always seemed to me that he got an extra accent on his.

"Each of us formed a habit of trying to get the other into trouble to see him wiggle and try to get out. In the spring one year, after our schools were out, we got into a buggy, with an old gray horse pulling it, to go to Pockville where his parents lived, from where I was going on to Weatherford. We left

By Mme. Frances

The Famous Creator of Fashions.

THIS season the fabrics that I am using for some of my most interesting creations are so lovely that comparatively little trimming is needed to enrich them. In some cases by utilizing both the right and the wrong side of the material marvellous effects are attained. This is particularly true in the case of charmeuse and certain of the crepes which are finished with a shiny surface on one side that contrasts well with the dull crepe finish.

A dinner gown that I am sure will delight the woman who revels in simple, graceful lines, combined with material of great charm, is pictured on this page. It is made of black charmeuse and cleverly interprets the panel vogue. The slip shows the use of the lustrous side of the silk, while the panels reveal the opposite surface.

Beautifully Draping Sleeves.

An interesting feature of the latter is that they are decidedly longer on the sides, for this is one of the delicate ways in which the longer skirt is being welcomed. The neckline is extremely attractive, for the charmeuse is drawn straight across the figure from shoulder to shoulder. At the waistline appears a crush belt which is developed into a handsome sash that is tied at the side, where its ends ripple towards the hem of the skirt.

As sleeves this season are characteristic of many of the most sumptuous as well as the simplest dinner gowns, those in this dress are worthy of note. They are very long and as they approach the hand they grow in width, which permits of the most beautiful draping when the arms are raised.

These sleeves are cut from a piece of exquisite black silk crochet lace, which lends great richness to this appealing creation. The use of color is sometimes preferred, but personally in a model of this nature I admire the all-black effect. Should color be imperative, you might substitute a metallic lace for the sleeves, as this would, of course, give a little sparkle to the gown. Then, were you to do this, you might also add a touch of decoration to the ends of the sash, using either a metallic fringe or a tassel to match the shimmering threads in the lace.

One delightful characteristic of the sleeves this season is their variety. A great many are modelled along the lines of the cape, and novel interpretations of this mode make their appeal to the woman in quest of a distinctive touch in her dinner gown.

This type of sleeve is pleasingly illustrated in the gown of black salome velvet. The fabric is draped gracefully about the figure and falls over the shoulders and arms in picturesque cape-like style. The lower points are finished with great tassels of gold that weight the cape and help hold it in the position desired.

A cascade drapery enriches the side and also reveals the black charmeuse lining which is used in this model. Another novel note appears on this gown, for about the waistline is a snake belt. A great many odd belts are in vogue this season, so that if you possess any old cameos linked together by metal chains or other strange, oriental looking treasures you will readily find a purpose for them when you adorn your winter gowns or suits. Such belts are also used on fur coats, but in this position I do not consider them so suitable, as they are apt to rub the fur and spoil the appearance of the coat. They are, I consider, admirably suited to the gown of velvet or other exquisite fabric, while even on the daytime dress of serge or twill they are appropriate.

Sleeves need not always be of unusual length on the dinner gown, for of course individual tastes differ in regard to this matter. Very short sleeves are shown on the creation of black and orange. This gown is developed in decidedly interesting style. The skirt is made of four square pieces of black charmeuse that are attached so that the points flare from waistline to the hem.

On the sides the orange-colored crepe extends a bit below the waistline, and this is one of the methods that I endorse when creating a gown from two different fabrics.

The narrow girdle of charmeuse is outlined with bugles of jet, and the four long straps that away from the waistline are finished with handsome tassels lavishly elaborated with trimmings of jet.

Grecian Effect in Crepe.

These decorations also add to the interest of the orange-colored top, which is outlined with the bugles and opens down the back. A double row of the beads defines this opening.

The fourth model that is illustrated upon this page affects the Grecian lines that are now so much favored. It is developed in beige-colored crepe of much beauty. The manner of making this charming gown is extremely simple, but should you care to copy it you must be careful to see that the lines you attain are just right.

Over a foundation of the crepe a panel of the material is set down the front. This is just a straight piece of the crepe, and the full width is required. It is slashed a short distance down the front and the points are drawn to the shoulders; where they are caught by beautiful amber beads. From these points the crepe falls gracefully towards the waistline, where two openings are slashed towards the sides, so that a lacy belt may be slipped through and thus accentuate the cascade draperies that reach to the hem. At these points the crepe is caught, and here, too, they are met by the back panels.

In the back there is a long V-shaped opening, for two narrow strips of crepe form the draperies that extend to the hem. Where they meet at the point of the V they are enlivened with a quaint-looking ornament of amber beads. Smaller amber beads are also chosen to border the tops of the panels and form decorative loops that swing free below the arms.

It is also worth while remarking that the shoulder decorations are different. On one I have used a large oval piece of amber and flanked it with three other pieces of amber on each side. The other shoulder is adorned in simple style, for I have only used four of the handsome beads.

This type of dress could of course be developed in any other color you would care to have, and instead of the rather filmy crepe you might substitute a rich satin.

Among the favored decorations this season one finds that antique jewels are having a wonderful popularity. Then jet is used not only to embroider some of the most interesting creations for evening, but also for the daylight hours. Jet bracelets, which recall those worn by our grandmothers, are again seen on the arms of the fashionable woman.

Some of these are made of rectangular pieces and are rather heavy looking, while others are strung together on elastic so that they may be festooned about the arm, for they are made to represent serpents. Jet ear-rings are shown in various styles. Sometimes the long ear-drop is favored or several circles of jet may be set one within the other and caught together by a small metal leaf or other decorative motif.

Coque fans which are a riot of gay color, and which have the feathers stiffened instead of drooping, are very smart. Then there are delectable lace fans, enormous in size. Often the black lace is embroidered with metallic threads, while sometimes rich colored silk embroidery is also introduced, so that the fan may reflect the color of the gown.

Many of the newest handbags made from colored beads are fastened by drawstrings. Some of these in steel beads are particularly good-looking. When fabrics, such as velvet or duvetyne, are used, one often finds that they are enriched with bands of bead embroidery. An attractive novelty is the bag of spangles and wool designed primarily to be carried with the spangled evening gown, which it matches. This makes a really glittering accessory and seems certain to become very popular this winter because the idea is new and appealing.

ARE WE RAISING A SUPER-RACE OF GIANTS AND GODDESSES?

Anthropologist at National Museum of Science Declares the American Type Records the Most Beautiful and Highest Physical Development the World Has Ever Known

Copyright, 1921, by Public Ledger Company

By Charles W. Duke

Fashion permits her to dress in a way suitable to the fullest and freest expression of her physical self—the short skirt, the bobbed hair, the absence of tight-fitting garments and hampering influences.

"In the home, at work, out in the world at large woman is virtually unrestrained. Science has eliminated much of the drudgery that held her mother and grandmother literally with her nose to the grindstone. That what electricity alone has done to lighten the load in the average home."

"There is less of poverty and grudging in the United States than in any other nation of the earth. Under such circumstances it is but inevitable the human body should touch the highest peak of physical development."

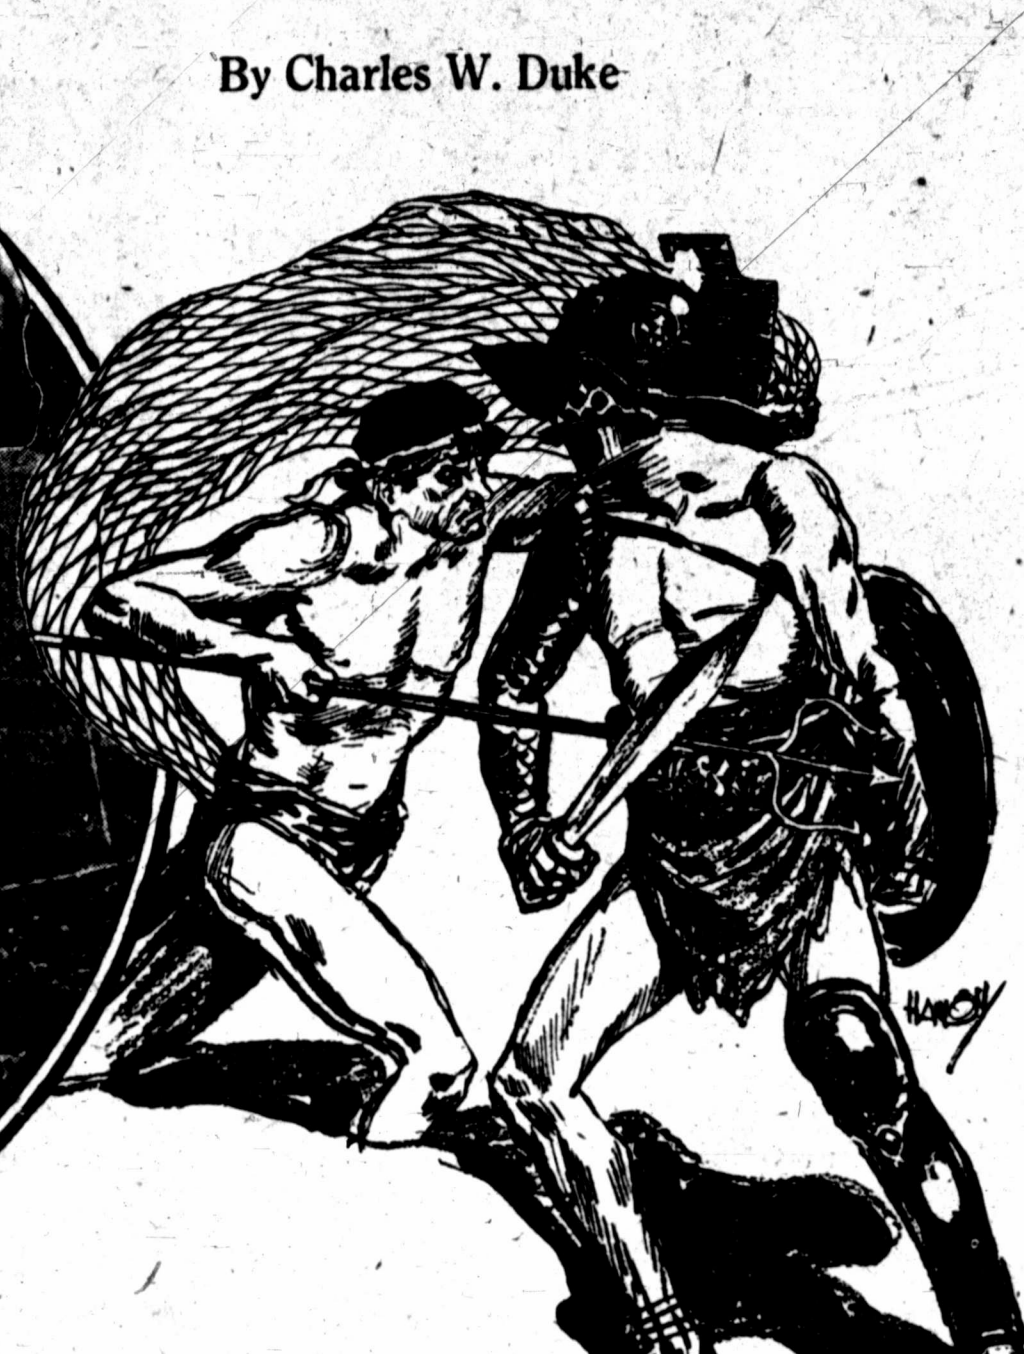

"IT IS true we are a hybrid race, as Dr. Starr asserts; but virtually every race is a hybrid one. There are few almost-pure races. The only pure races the world ever knew were the primitive races. The Indian was our own American native pure race. But now it is fast being blended with the blood of the white man. In Africa there are some tribes well to the interior that may be regarded as pure types, but the Libyans already are an admixture of African and Mediterranean bloods. The same holds for other tribes along the African shore."

"Any one who has studied the origin and development of the human family knows that every strong race the world has ever known was a hybrid race. Take our own Anglo-Saxon origin as an example. The Germans, the French, the Italians, the Portuguese or the Spanish—each is a blend of other races of other days. Each succeeding nation of stalwarts has been evolved out of kindred bloods. Our own melting pot has produced America."

"Nothing superior to this race has ever been known. Venus de Milo was no more wonderful creature than so many of our own American women. Who knows but that she may have been the exception of her time, an artist's model, a choice maiden selected from all the rest? There are very many

A gladiator of today preparing for the game on the gridiron as his brother of antiquity steeled himself for the more deadly but less strenuous contests in the amphitheatre.

CLOSE to a quarter of a million persons attended the four football classics of the East held during the last few weeks. The annual gridiron contests between Harvard-Princeton, Yale-Princeton, Yale-Harvard and Army-Navy are pretty much considered the premier contests of the great college sport along the Atlantic seaboard. Every year they attract thousands. This year it would appear all previous attendance records had been broken judging from the reports of packed stadiums and thousands turned away for lack of seating facilities. The same goes for every other football center in the country. In the Middle West, in the South, all along the Pacific Coast, in every hamlet and town throughout the country, from the smallest high school game up to the big State university annual, football has enjoyed one of the greatest years in all its history.

How strongly entrenched in public favor is the national sport, the game of baseball, was demonstrated during the World Series last month when the Giants and the Yankees played to a record-breaking crowd in New York. Close to a quarter of a million people paid approximately $1,000,000 to watch the two nines engage in the series of eight games. In the games closing out the seasons of the National and American Leagues, when the Giants and the Pittsburgh Pirates and the Yankees and the Cleveland Indians were fighting for the championship flags, record-breaking crowds filled the grandstands and the pavilions. Baseball ever enjoyed a more popular reign. Daylight saving, promoting twilight games, brought thousands to the playing field who formerly had been only newspaper "fans," many of them actually to play and still many more to witness the small-town diamond tournaments.

INTEREST in the game of golf grows with every passing day. Experts are predicting the time when every town of 5000 inhabitants in every section of these United States will have a golf course of its own to accommodate that vast army of athletically inclined who would cry "fore!" and who "follow through" with the sweeping drive. Never had golf so many devotees. The national championships, the exhibition matches all up and down the country, the appearance of Cecil Leitch, the famous English-French-Canadian champion, and other stars, have attracted immense galleries. Nor are people content merely with watching the stars; many thousand must swing their own clubs and negotiate their own hazards. Baseball, long monarch of American sports, is in danger of losing its crown to this fascinating game imported from Scotland; a sport long catalogued as recreation for the idle rich alone, but now recognized as the universal sport, fit for men and women of all ages, classes and conditions. Ideal in that it is less strenuous than many other lines of sport and altogether wholesome with its outdoor environment. In a few years more—watch golf.

Take tennis, too. Was ever so much interest manifested in the national championships as was exhibited this year when master wielders of the racket from all corners of the globe vied for honors? Was there ever a time when so many Americans of youth and middle age, careworn before the nets on grass or clay courts? And how about the international polo games, or the college field and track relay races, or the various aquatic carnivals of the summer with their swimming and boating championships? Was there ever a year in the history of the United States of America when athletics held higher favor or were more universally participated in by persons of all shades and distinctions, all sizes, shapes and dimensions, without discrimination as to age, color, sex or previous condition of servitude?

By all the shades of the classic Greeks and their famous games or the ancient Romans and their magnificent amphitheatres, was there ever anything to surpass the spectacle of the Yale bowl filled to overflowing with the exulting humanity of a November football match? Was ever Greek gladiator or Roman athlete more erect of figure, supple of limb, fleet of foot, quicker of eye, than yonder gridiron warrior as he smashes through the Harvard line, skips around the end or gracefully pirouettes to and fro for a moment before his long, lean arm shoots out and spins the pigskin unerringly down the field into the arms of a fellow player standing under the shadow of the goal posts, eager to score another touchdown?

By all the faith of the ancients, was ever a more wonderful spectacle spread within the arena of sport than this gala football throng? Did Hercules, he of the remarkable strength, or Adonis, he of the marvelous figure, live only in those golden days of Rome and Athens? Is not the modern gladiator of this twentieth century the equal—yes, the superior in every way—of him who earned the thumbs up of ancient kings and queens? Will not the future historians award the palm for athletic supremacy and physical perfection to this twentieth-century era?

So it seems. It is the athletic age. The physical is stressed even more than the mental or the spiritual. It is an age in which it is a crime to be unhealthy. He who is stoop-shouldered and old before his time is in poor repute. He who dies young is guilty of gross negligence and hardly to be pitied. "Keep physically fit" is the cry heard on every hand; the first prerequisite laid down by that modern savior who points the way to success. The boisterousness of youth, the wild dance and even jazz itself are but symptoms of the national tendency to universal good health. Pep, punch and perseverance are the watchwords of the hour.

"We know now why you won the war—now you smashed the Hindenburg line and dealt the final blow that turned turtle our massive military machine," said a noted German war lord to an American tourist. "It is because you are all so athletic. From infancy your people engage in sports; you never stop; your old people are playing golf. We shall imitate you. Already Germany engages more extensively in sports."

Mark you that throng of pretty football followers you saw at the Army-Navy game or the Chicago-Wisconsin tilt or the Georgia

Are we then building a super-race of giants and goddesses? Is this the physical age, the age of physical perfection, or is near perfection as the world has ever known?

SCIENCE inclines to the view. "Old age is a pose," is the popular acclaim. Statistical tables are brought forward to prove that men and women are living longer than their fathers and grandfathers; that the span of years extends now further than the Biblical three score and ten; that a man or woman is only as old as he or she feels; that disease is being conquered and longevity achieved by the simple process of living in the great outdoors next to nature.

"Our American race is constantly improving so that it is not only the most beautiful but the race typifying the highest physical development the world has ever known," says Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, noted anthropologist, curator of the American National Museum of Science in Washington, and celebrated as a world authority in the study of the human race.

Dr. Hrdlicka's pronouncement was made following the reading of a statement accredited to Dr. Frederick Starr, professor of anthropology at Chicago University, in which the latter said, "There are no beautiful women in the United States, and it is only our American good nature that makes us call a girl who is not phenomenally ugly a pretty girl."

Continuing the Chicagoan said: "A handsome man or woman is the rarest of all creatures. There is no real beauty in the United States. Only among Libyans and Amazonians is real beauty to be found. Our Americans are too hybrid to be beautiful. Our standards of beauty would be denied by any European nation. The Korean yellow race quite frequently surpasses us in specimens of beauty. The Igorrotes at the world's fair were everywhere marveled at for their physical attributes."

DR. HRDLICKA has traveled the world over, penetrating to its every corner, meeting every race of its people. At close range he has studied them. A Bohemian by birth he has the perspective of heredity to combine with the viewpoint of his American environment. Since youth he has lived in the New World.

Dr. Starr asserts; but virtually every race is a hybrid one. There are few almost-pure races. The only pure races the world ever knew were the primitive races. The Indian was our own American native pure race. But now it is fast being blended with the blood of the white man. In Africa there are some tribes well to the interior that may be regarded as pure types, but the Libyans already are an admixture of African and Mediterranean bloods. The same holds for other tribes along the African shore.

Any one who has studied the origin and development of the human family knows that every strong race the world has ever known was a hybrid race. Take our own Anglo-Saxon origin as an example. The Germans, the French, the Italians, the Portuguese or the Spanish—each is a blend of other races of other days. Each succeeding nation of stalwarts has been evolved out of kindred bloods. Our own melting pot has produced America.

Nothing superior to this race has ever been known. Venus de Milo was no more wonderful creature than so many of our own American women. Who knows but that she may have been the exception of her time, an artist's model, a choice maiden selected from all the rest? There are very many

The world has never known a race of people superior in physical attributes to the modern Americans. There are so many reasons for it. Our civilization here touches the highest point yet attained by any race. Not only have we the beauty of body that the ancients glorified, but the beauty of intellect as well. It is when intelligence is blended with physical development that we arrive at the highest plane; and we have that combination today.

Our people are athletic. Witness only the games and pastimes that begin in childhood and continue on into old age. In the cities the whole trend is toward playgrounds, gymnasiums, recreation centers, etc. No school is now considered modern unless it has its gym, its swimming pool, its every facility for athletic enjoyment. Churches now are being built with social, recreational and athletic features.

No race of people have been more universally athletic than the modern Americans of this western hemisphere.

The sculptor's idealization of the human figure and the medieval artist's conception of beauty of face, compared with the athletic girl of the present and her sister who charms you on the film or stage.

"Our people eat better food than any other race. We have here usually abundant food crops and ample facilities for feeding our people. Diet is a matter of national concern. If a man, woman or child is not properly nourished in these days it is pretty generally his own fault, for upon every side about many signposts to good health.

"The trend in social legislation within recent years has all been in the direction of upbuilding the race. No longer is child labor tolerated in this democracy. There are laws that regulate the part played by women in industry, the hours of their work, the kind of labor and the conditions affecting it."

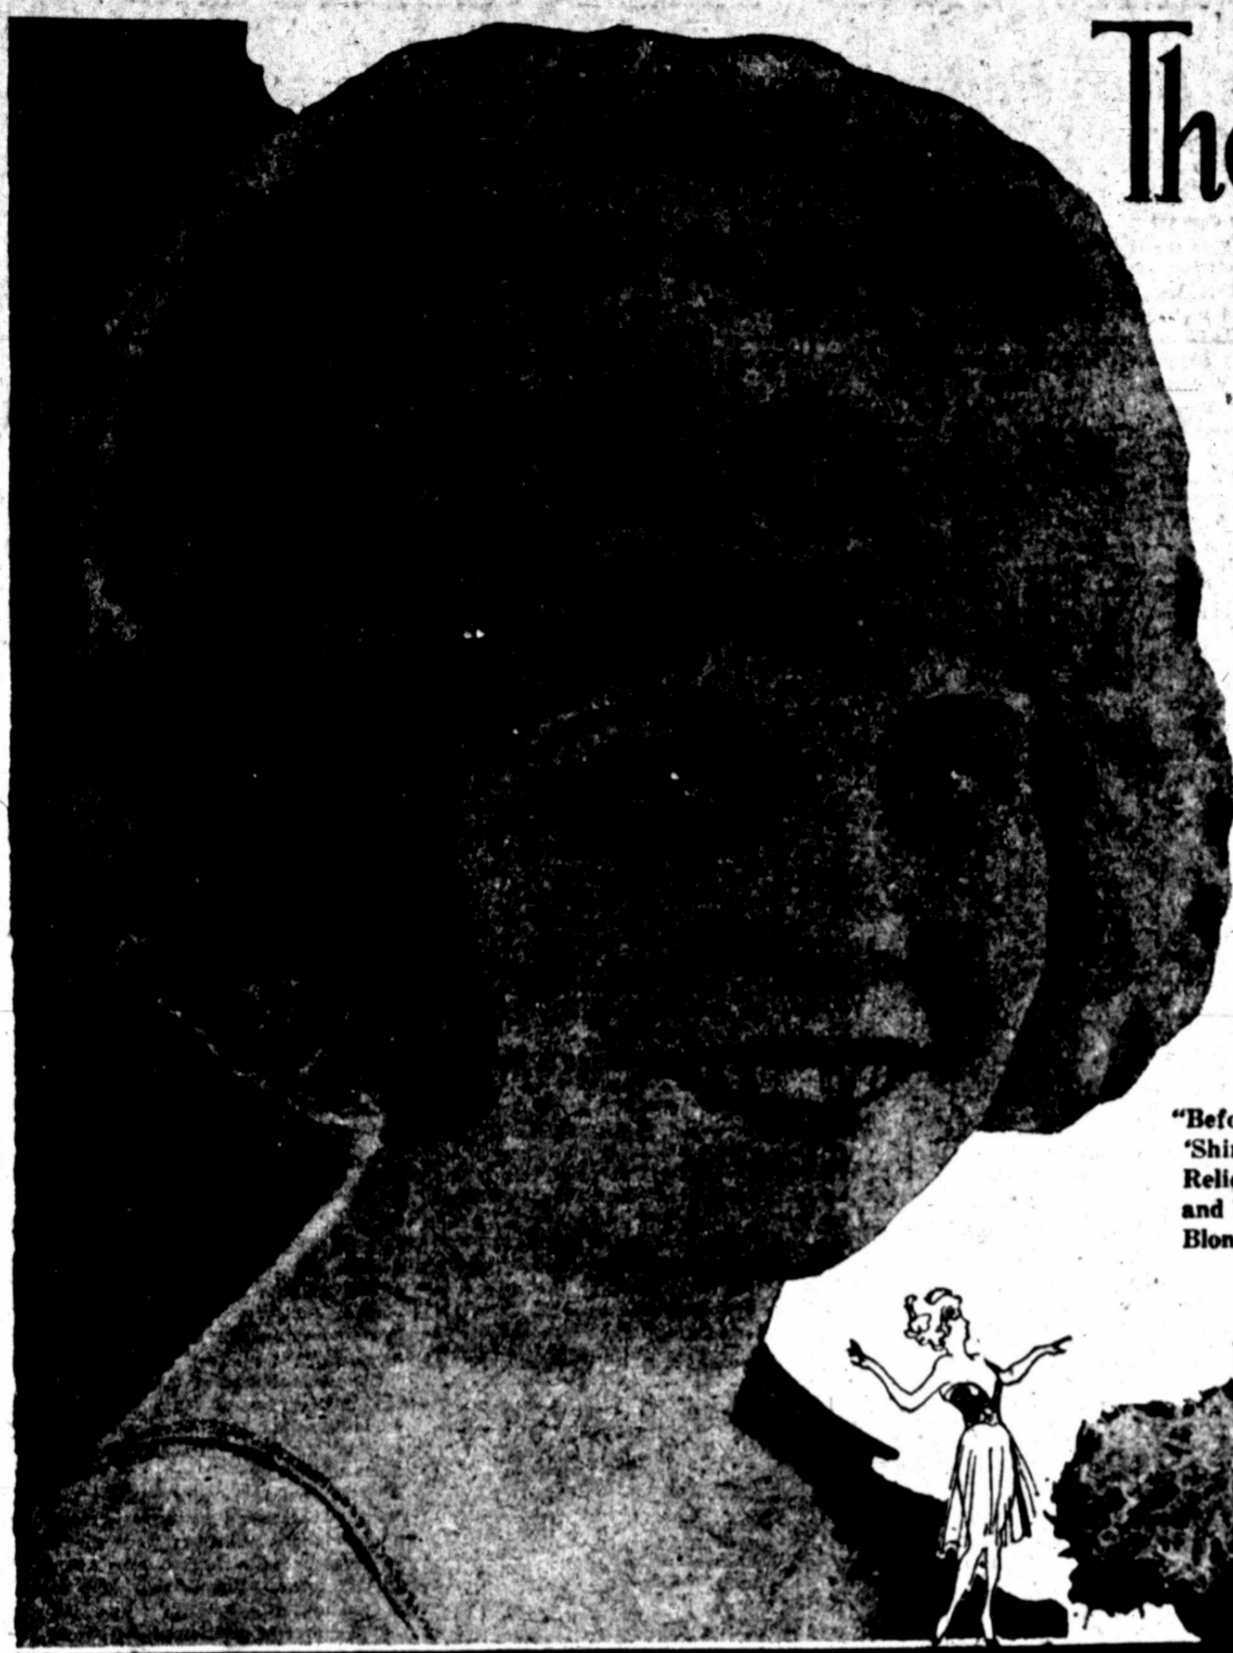

"Woman could not help but be more beautiful considering the freedom she enjoys."

The Shocking Shoulder Suit of Jack Dempsey and the Shimmy Queen

His Shoulders Brought the World's Championship; Hers Brought Electric Lights on Broadway; and It Was a Shrug That Brought an Action for a Quarter of a Million Dollars.

The Shoulders of Jack Dempsey, Which by Their Crushing Power Have Won Acknowledgment as the Most Powerful in the World.

"Before the Days of the 'Shimmy,' Bee Palmer Relied Upon Her Voice and Her Bright Blonde Beauty."

A PRICELESS pair of shoulders brought fame and fortune to Jack Dempsey. Without them he might still be riding the roads in the dusty reaches of New Mexico. . . . And Bee Palmer, without her quivering shoulders, would still, no doubt, be charming. But she would hardly be America's foremost exponent of the shimmy. Shoulders made these two. Now shoulders are seriously threatening their peace of mind.

While Jack Dempsey, the world's unconquered prize fighter, and Bee Palmer, the shimmy queen, are leading a vaudeville act through the West, Miss Palmer's husband, Al Siegel, is doing everything possible to separate Jack from $250,000 of his earnings. Siegel's medium is an alienation suit. He has asked the New York courts to award him this amount of money as consolation for the loss of his wife's affections, and a separation decree from her. For, according to Siegel's charges, the world's champion has maliciously stolen Bee's heart away.

"I knew for some time," Siegel further declares, "that my wife was on friendly terms with Dempsey, but I was led to believe that their association was a matter of business. Dempsey claimed to be negotiating for my wife's services in his new show. But there were many night conferences and they made me suspicious. I decided to have my wife and Dempsey trailed and the results of my investigations convinced me that I would be justified in suing her and Dempsey."

Talking informally, Siegel lamented his ill-luck. Bee was a good girl and charming, he protested, in her early, unspoiled days. When the calcium lights begin to play on her lovely form she grew a little less unspoiled, but she was still a loyal wife until the champion crossed her path.

Now Mr. Siegel would give anything—he would even forswear his chance at that $250,000—if he could restore to his wife her early satisfaction in what he considers sound and homely pleasures. He would gladly see her back in that obscure, little Chicago cabaret where Florenz Ziegfeld found her. Free from the sieges of such a man as Jack Dempsey, for instance—the phrase is Mr. Siegel's—she might be brought to see life differently.

Before Bee Discovered Her Shoulders

In those early days that Mr. Siegel talks about, Miss Palmer hadn't discovered the possibilities of her fluctuant shoulders. She relied upon her voice, her hands, her bright blonde beauty and her vitality. She was a "coon shouter." That is to say, she had a repertoire of ballads descriptive of what happened at the Darktown Strutters' Ball, or some similar function south of the Mason and Dixon line.

But even though there was nothing distinguished about her voice, Bee knew how to put a song over and it wasn't long before she had a clientele. It wasn't an exclusive clientele. Her friends of those days weren't drawn from the upper crust. But they were strong for Bee. They talked about her wherever they went.

Miss Palmer has never had a lot to say about what her aspirations were in those days. But if she was human she must have shared the dream of every other obscure cabaret singer. And every one of them believes firmly that if some great impresario could only see her once—just once—she'll be fixed for life. It is not unlikely, therefore, that Bee had a weather eye out for a little dark man with a malacca cane whenever she heard that Flo Ziegfeld was in Chicago. But whether she was expecting him or not, he did stroll in one night.

By this time Bee had begun to add a song of twisting motion of torso as an accompaniment to her song. She had also acquired a lot of fancy clothes that she wore in queenly style.

As Mr. Ziegfeld is especially gifted in assaying a substance which may have a vein of pure gold running through it, Miss Palmer didn't have to do an awful lot with her shoulders for him to see their possibilities. In any event, following Mr. Ziegfeld's visit, Bee Palmer was obscure no longer.

Birth of the "Shimmy"

She went to New York. About that time the public was trying to ring a new change on the fox-trot. The pigeon walk—that slow, weird step done in time with an exaggerated motion of the back—was settling into a dance that consisted almost entirely of back motion. Bee Palmer took the idea and developed a shoulder-twisting dance whose vibrations were shortly felt from coast to coast. Thus it was that the shimmy burst upon the United States.

Those who saw Miss Palmer at the Midnight Frolic and in her later engagements in vaudeville, immediately realized that here was no mere vulgar muscle dancer; here was an artist. Upon the surface of her sheer, white back the syncopated rhythms of her jazz orchestra were playing as a breeze will sometimes play upon the surface of a mountain lake. Into those undulations that rippled from her shoulders were every conceivable nuance of expression. There were subtle pianos and billowing fortissimos. There were arpeggios, cadenzas and minor chords. It was a rhapsody of the flesh; a symphony of sinew and cuticle.

It was not long, therefore, until Bee Palmer's shoulders were as celebrated as Paderewski's piano or Babe Ruth's bat.

Meanwhile, another pair of shoulders were being projected into the public imagination. This pair of shoulders were worn by a man who had literally worked himself up from the depths. For Jack Dempsey started life as a mucker in a coal mine. He says of himself that he did work no one else wanted to do. It was dirty, grimy and unpleasant. Furthermore, he was rather much the butt of all his co-workers' jokes. And, being a good-natured boy who had no conception of the driving power that was bound up in his body, he took it all.

One day, however, the periodical joke was a little rougher than usual and Jack sailed into his tormentor. He cut him down like a reed. Another man leaped at Jack and Jack cut him down. In the course of the next three or four weeks Jack had whipped every mine husky in that company. His fame as a fighter spread. The seed of ambition was planted in him. He still had a hard row ahead of him, but that was Jack Dempsey's start upon the career that is now familiar to every follower of the fight game the world over.

It was a case of superior shoulders. "Shoulders are the driving force for the blows that carry men on to the heights of pugilistic greatness," Jack declares. Shoulders were his shock battalions and were quite as well organized. Jack started out ignorantly developing his biceps for all they were worth. But when Jack

Kearns got hold of him he began to develop the champion's triceps. Kearns built these muscles up until they were thick and corded, but at the same time he kept them as delicately responsive as an eyelash.

Just how and when the shoulders of Jack Dempsey and the shoulders of Bee Palmer became a part of the same story has never been disclosed. According to Albert Siegel, the complaining husband, the primitive quality in Dempsey's shoulders is what fascinated his wife, though Dempsey was the one who sought the acquaintance.

A newspaper man is said to have introduced the shimmy queen to the world's champion boxer. After that, so Siegel says, they were virtually inseparable. They sought each other's society with a persistence hardly justified by their joint theatrical ambitions, the husband declares.

Siegel saw them together one night in a Broadway cabaret. Jack, he declares, was gazing at her fondly and fumbling his hands in a foolish, lover-like way. Bee was the final word in poise and elegance—but Siegel had a friend, who had a friend who overheard the tow-headed shoulder-shaker murmur across her fruit salad: "I like 'em when they treat me rough."

Siegel cites occasions when, he says, Jack and Bee were together in Bee's apartment with nobody else around. On the whole, he is convinced that his wife hasn't been faithful to him. Hence his suit against Dempsey for the $250,000 and his suit for separation against his wife.

The document which his lawyers filed goes on as follows:

"The defendant (Dempsey), well knowing the said Bee Palmer to be the plaintiff's wife, and maliciously and wilfully intending to injure the plaintiff and deprive him of the comfort, society, aid and service of his said wife, and to alienate and destroy her affection for him, at divers times from the 15th day of September, 1921, until the commencement of this action, at No. 58 West Seventieth street, in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, and elsewhere, was guilty of misconduct."

Handkerchiefs Made Square by a King's Decree

The Shoulders of Bee Palmer, Which by Their Undulations Have Won for Her the Title of the Shimmy Queen.

HANDKERCHIEFS, whether tiny and costly bits of lace fit only to dry a tear from beauty's eye, or bright bandannas knotted loosely about cowboy throats, have one characteristic in common—they are invariably square, and this because of a distinction that can be claimed for no other article of use or apparel. The shape of a handkerchief was fixed by royal decree, and usage has perpetuated the form designated.

Handkerchiefs were, of course, in use from the earliest days of civilization, but they were of any shape that individual fancy dictated—oblong, round or triangular or square—until one day at Trianon Marie Antoinette chanced to remark to Louis XVI. that it would be more convenient and neater if the square form only were used. On Jan. 2, 1785, the King of France therefore issued an edict decreeing that "the length of handkerchiefs shall equal their width throughout the kingdom," thereby standardizing the Siegel supplements this by declaring: "I have all the evidence necessary to win both suits. . . . My wife is now on the road with Jack Dempsey. . . . When she was at the Folies Bergere in New York, Dempsey came around every night and at the end of the show would take her out. In each instance the excuse was the same—business."

"Finally, Miss Palmer went to live with Miss Deveraux at No. 58 West Seventieth street. Jack Dempsey was a nightly visitor there."

"Do I Look a Heart-Breaker?"

"Just before I brought my suit I was at the Belmont Hotel when Jack Kearns tried to induce me to drop my case against Dempsey. Kearns admitted that he had heard gossip connecting Dempsey with my wife. He suggested that I have a conference with his lawyer. That I refused to do."

"Miss Palmer only recently received an offer of $2000 a week for 20 weeks. This she refused to accept to go into the Dempsey show for $500 a week. That shows what influence he has been exerting over her."

Dempsey refuses to take the suit seriously. "My acquaintance with Miss Palmer began when she was engaged by my manager, Jack Kearns, to accompany this show we are carrying over a western circuit," he says. "My relations with her have been innocent and for the most part confined to business affairs. I'm no love burglar"—this with a plaintive, humorous twist of the mouth. "Women don't fall in love with me. After they satisfy their curiosity with one look at me, as the heavy-weight champion, they seem thereafter to remain quite calm and unmoved. And I might add that I'm not much of a hand for falling in love myself. . . . Take a look at me. Do I look like a heart-breaker?"

A sporting editor to whom this question was put, begged the question on the grounds of extreme inappetence. Whereupon the gentleman of the massive shoulders took a critical look at his new patent leather shoes, fumbled his hands together, heaved a sigh, and walked away.

shape of handkerchiefs apparently for all time. In the 16th and 17th centuries handkerchiefs were usually very costly, being edged with rarest lace and covered with embroidered initials, armorial bearings and love mottoes. The Duchess of Chevreuse was particularly noted for the elegance of her handkerchiefs, whereon were embroidered Cupids chasing one another among garlands of roses, while the Countess of Castillon's handkerchiefs changed in color with her passing moods and passions.

Thus, when she fancied herself in love her handkerchiefs were of a delicate blue, to be exchanged for others of a yellow hue when the object of her affections proved untrue. When in good health and spirits green was the color she affected, but mauve was brought into requisition when she felt herself depressed or in bad health. It is mentioned, incidentally, that the color of the countess' gowns always corresponded to that of her handkerchiefs.

THE WORLD'S RICHEST INDIAN AND HIS GUARDIAN

Uncle Sam, Through Charles H. Burke, Stands in Loco Parentis to His Red Wards, and He Even Interposed Objections When One, an Aged Chief, Became Central Figure in a Romance

By William Atherton Du Puy

Charles H. Burke, United States Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who has more wards than any other guardian

SAT the other day in the office of Charles H. Burke, Uncle Sam's Commissioner of Indian Affairs and guardian of the 300,000 Indian wards of the Government, when the door swung quietly open and in walked an interesting couple as one is likely to meet in the space of a decade; in fact, none other than Jackson Barnett, the richest Indian in the world, and the slim little white woman, his wife.

Jackson Barnett was, two years ago, a crude brush Indian, living in a hut away out in the solitudes of that part of the world in which Muskogee, Oklahoma, is located. Today he is a well-barbered, well-tailored, quiet, dignified, distinguished-looking member of an American civilization, living quite correctly in the best hotels of our Eastern cities and riding about their streets in high-powered limousines.

With Jackson Barnett and the cause of it all was his wife, Mrs. Barnett, who is a slim, frail little woman, well educated and intelligent, in whom evidently burns the fire of ambition and determination. She was tastefully, rather expensively, gowned, looking out from beneath the brim of a rich lace hat, snuggled in her furs, wearing a dress trimmed in large and outstanding designs of the Indian swastika.

Mrs. Barnett sank into the corner of a huge leather divan in the Commissioner's office, but her Indian husband refused to sit and stood sentinel like and immovable as a statue while he waited. I marveled at the racial dignity of this Indian but recently out of the brush and in my imagination compared him with the appearance that would have been made by the average white man who had lived, as he had lived, unlettered in the wilds to the age of seventy.

So when I talked to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs I asked him particularly about these Indians under his care to whom wealth had come and whose wealth he was called upon to administer.

"The property of the Indians of the United States," said Mr. Burke, "is valued at about a billion dollars. The lands of these Indians allotted to them by the Government covers an area as big as all New England and the State of New York combined. Much of this land is almost without value, but some of it is as productive as any land in the United States. There is the 160 acres belonging to Jackson Barnett, for instance, and located up in the Tulsa county where the big oil wells have been developed in the last few years. This 160 acres yields Jackson Barnett $100,000 a year, and that is but his royalties of one-eighth of the oil that come from it.

"There are many rich Indians who are the wards of the Government and whose affairs are administered through this bureau. Most outstanding among these as a tribe are the Osage Indians, likewise living in Oklahoma. In this tribe there are 2200 persons. The lands of the tribe are still held in common, so the money that is derived from those lands is divided equally among the Indians of the tribe. The Osage lands are in the oil country also and have been leased under Government control to the producers of oil. They have drilled wells and tapped seemingly inexhaustible sources of this fluid fuel. Seven-eighths belong to the developers and one-eighth to the Indians. The revenue from that one-eighth, however, is so great that every man, woman and child among the Osages received last year an income from oil amounting to $10,000. Where such individual gets an income of this size, the sum total of the money that comes to large families is quite considerable. It is because of this income that the Osage Indians become the richest per capita race of people in all the world, obtaining their wealth from a tract of land which was bought by the Government from the Cherokee Indians nearly 100 years ago at $1.25 per acre and bestowed on the Osages as a reservation. By recent legislation, however, provision has been given the Government of withholding some of this money to prevent its being wasted."

"The man with whom I was talking, it began to seem to me, had something of a record-breaking job as a guardian. I found out also that his guardianship was just about identical with that which would be exercised by one appointed to take care of the affairs of a child which was left with property. It was an actual legal guardianship which carried with it the responsibility for the proper handling of the property of each of these many individuals. There is probably no other man in the world who exercises the authority of legal guardian over so many people as does Charles H. Burke.

And a benevolent and fatherly-looking man is this Government guardian of the red man. Some sixty years ago on a farm in Genesee County, New York, he came into this world, and since that time he has been gathering worldly experience and crow's-feet about his eyes, until today owls look silly beside him. Smallish, blondish, thin, wide-awake, with the humor of an Irish father and the austerity of a New England mother breaking through, he sits like Solomon in judgment on the problems of the Indian.

Mr. Burke went to South Dakota forty years ago and has been active in that formative State's affairs ever since. He served two years in its Legislature. For fourteen of those years he represented it in Congress and there wrestled with the problems of national legislation and took his courses in Indian affairs in the committee of the House of Representatives which handles those matters. So active was the part he played in Congress that, back in 1914, he was the Republican whip, that party then being in the minority. Then he ran for the Senate and was defeated. Now he is back on a Government job of great responsibility and happy with his tasks.

"Jackson Barnett, the richest Indian of them all," he was saying, "is not an Osage. He is a Creek, and Creek Indians are members of what are known as the Five Civilized Tribes, those being the Cherokees, the Creeks, the Seminoles, the Chickasaws and the Choctaws. "In its administration of the affairs of the Indians the Government, in its attempt to lead those aborigines into the ways of civilization, some fifteen years ago broke up the ancient plan of tribal ownership of lands of the Five Civilized Tribes and distributed those lands to individuals. It wanted the individual Indian to own his individual tract of land and build himself a home on it. So it allotted each Indian 160 acres and tried to attach him to that piece of land and to induce him to make for himself a home somewhat as does the white man.

"Many of these Indians settled up on the tracts and farmed them or grazed them, tending toward the condition aimed at by the Government. There were those, however, who were largely unaffected by the example of the white man, who still favored the old Indian scheme of tribal ownership and who resisted the plan for dividing up these lands. This is the class of Indian who is referred to as a 'Snake Indian.' Among those who refused to accept his allotment was Jackson Barnett, then a solitary, middle-aged Indian living out in the brush according to old tribal customs. Barnett refused to come into the consultations with representatives of the Great White Father, remained in the brush, lived as of old, became a 'Snake Indian.' He refused to have anything to do with the selection of a tract of land or even to accept when it was selected for him. Eventually, however, the Government picked out 160 acres, allotted it to Jackson Barnett, wrote it down as belonging to him whether he wanted it or not.

"It is this quarter section of land, secured by this aboriginal Indian, which turned out to be in the very heart of the oil region and which has made this man the richest of all Indians. Today he is possessed of some $2,000,000, all of which has come from this land. Much of the revenue that came to him during the years when the United States was at war he invested in the securities of his Government. Jackson Barnett, pure blood Indian, is the owner of more than $1,000,000 in Liberty Loan Bonds.

"In the Five Civilized Tribes there are some fifty Indians who have annual incomes of between $25,000 and $100,000 a year. There are 200 of them whose incomes are above $10,000 a year. This bureau has in hand for such Indians sums of money amounting to more than $30,000,000,

There is in the United States Treasury more than $40,000,000 of tribal funds belonging to such Indians as the Osages who have not received individual allotments but still own their lands in common. All these moneys are out at interest and are earning additional amounts for the Indians to whom they belong.

"One of the delicate tasks of the Indian Bureau is to so administer the funds of these Indians as to most benefit them and at the same time protect them from spoliation. There is constant pressure being brought upon the bureau to release the property belonging to these Indians. It is argued that the money or the property is theirs and that they should be allowed to enjoy it. These arguments, however, often come from interested people who have in mind plans for getting possession of this Indian wealth.

"The great mass of these Indians are classed as 'restricted' and their affairs are administered by the Government. Expenditures of their money cannot be made without the approval of the Indian Office. There are, however, many Indians who have been declared 'competent,' which means that they have convinced the representatives of the Government that they are able to handle their own affairs, and their property has consequently been turned over to them. The experience of the bureau with leases and lands are now yielding him. The problem of Jackson Barnett was not, however, a very trying one until the time of his marriage. He lived quietly in his shack out at Okmulgee, accepted the small stipend allowed him by the Government and was little affected by the wealth which was being amassed to his credit. Jackson Barnett, rather strangely, was a lone Indian, a man of seventy, who had never married and was without children. He does not even seem to have brothers and sisters, nieces or nephews. He occupied a position of peculiar attractiveness in the matrimonial market.

"As the wealth of Jackson Barnett accumulated it came to pass that he grew to be a subject of general interest, and newspapers wrote articles about this lone aborigine living in his simple way, yet the possessor of all this money.

"OVER in Kansas, not far away, dwelt this slim little woman, Mrs. T. J. Lowe, who has since become Mrs. Barnett. She read the story of the lone Indian and his great wealth. She says that she was inspired to visit him because of her interest in securing from him certain oil leases. It worked out that she developed an acquaintance with Barnett and as a result of that acquaintance this aborigine of three score years and ten, who had escaped the arrows of Cupid all through these decades, married her.

"Being a restricted Indian in Oklahoma with property to his credit, he had an official guardian appointed by the court and his freedom of action without the consent of that guardian is to be questioned. It, therefore, happened that when this couple let it be known that they had matrimonial intentions, there was much opposition on the part of the guardian and a doubt arose as to whether this marriage could be legally consummated in Oklahoma. But this slim little white woman with her hold upon this wealthy Indian firmly established refused to be daunted. She issued a single-handed ried under the Kansas law. To make assurance doubly sure the bride carried her aboriginal lover over into Missouri and there married him again."

I had known that strong influences had been at work to have this marriage annulled. I had known that the Department of Justice had long studied the case and had weighed the advisability of proceeding against this woman for kidnapping, for Barnett was, in the eyes of the law, an infant. It had been admitted that had the marriage taken place in Oklahoma it would undoubtedly have been annulled, but since it was consummated in Kansas and again in Missouri it must be viewed from the standpoint of the laws of those States, and this put it in a very different light. So it looked as though this little woman had about finished the job and won.

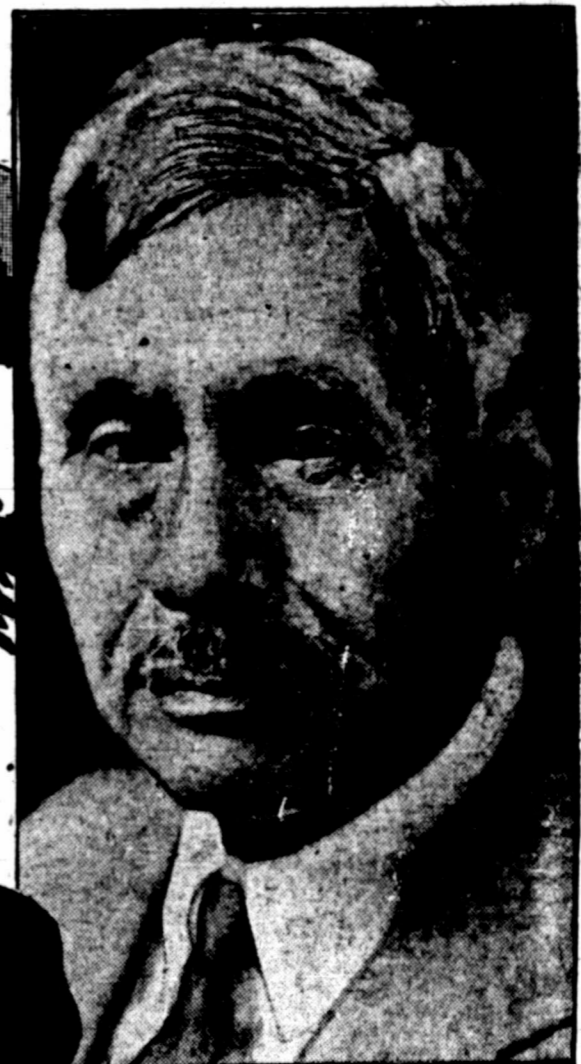

I asked her how she regarded her position as wife of the "richest Indian." She said that she thought that "the chief" (she always called him that) had as much right to get married as anybody else. She said that before his marriage he was getting little of his money; was securing almost no benefit from it. She had brought to him numberless comforts that he had never known before. He enjoyed going about. He liked to have his picture taken. They would be delighted to have it taken for the newspaper.

SHE said that at the time of their marriage she found that "the chief" had promised gifts to different people aggregating $1,402,500. The bureau confirmed this statement and these figures. These gifts masqueraded in the guise of churches, hospitals, what not. Many men who did not inspire confidence appeared at the bureau in attempts to get these gifts allowed. He had been besieged by people who begged donations and he usually promised to give. Fortunately his gifts had to be approved by the bureau, but there seemed danger that they might be approved. Strong influences were at work.

She stopped most of these gifts. I inquired as to the share in this old Indian's estate that would come to her in case of his death. Under the laws of the State of Oklahoma it seems that she is sure of half even if he dies without making a will. That would be three-quarters of a million dollars. She may get it all. She has a daughter of a former marriage, a girl in her teens. She is very ambitious for that daughter.

"The present position of the bureau," the Commissioner was saying, "is that the marriage was in every way legal.

"The bureau has observed the conduct of Mrs. Jackson Barnett toward the husband to whom she has plighted troth

Two years ago Jackson Barnett was a brush Indian, but now he rides about in his limousine, the richest of all aborigines

Mrs. Barnett, who twice married her Indian chief, insuring the bonds against even Federal Government attack regard to these Indians that it has declared competent has been rather disappointing. "Barnett is still a restricted Indian, is not regarded as being competent to administer the $2,000,000 of which he is possessed and the $100,000 a year which he defy to the authorities. She appeared in the neighborhood in a big high-powered limousine and was joined by her Indian lover. The two made a run for the Kansas border and succeeded in getting over into that State. There they were securely mar-and confesses that it has no criticism to offer of the life that she is leading with him. To be sure, that life is quite different from all that had gone before for Jackson Barnett. She has taken him out into the world and has brought to him all those elements of civilization which are possible to the twentieth century. She has made for him in Oklahoma a home that is incomparably better than any he had ever known before. She is now applying to the bureau for permission to spend yet greater amounts of this rich Indian's reserves for a home that is many times better than that which they now possess, a home which would do credit to any American millionaire, yet a home down in Oklahoma where the Creek Indians find their native habitat.

"Mrs. Jackson Barnett has just asked permission of the bureau to purchase a limousine costing $3000. The bureau is inclined to take the position that the expenditure of such an amount for such a car is not an extravagance on the part of a man who is in possession of $2,000,000 and whose income is $8000 a month. The bureau is inclined to accept the marriage of its richest ward as an accomplished fact and to make no effort to go beyond that fact. It accepts Mrs. Jackson Barnett as its ward by marriage and will do the best it can toward making this union a success.
