WAY BACK THEN -- This photo taken of the inside of the Review plant back in the days of the publication's infancy shows Belmont L. Shields, founder and first publisher seated before a type case. The man standing at the job press and wearing the bow tie is L. M. (Lem) Henslee, who later bought out Shields and ran the Cross Plains paper many years. Both are now dead. Although the Review was established in 1909, this picture, believed to have been made about 1912, is the earliest available of local newspaper personnel. It was brought in by John Dillard.

Q. In about 1946 an abnomal number of shooting stars were seen. Do you know the date and cause?

A. For an accurate answer to this question the Review contacted Oscar E. Monning of Fort Worth, one of the nation's best known amateur astronomers. His answer is published hereunder in full.

"On the night of Oct. 9, 1946, the earth passed through or near the orbit of Giacobini's Comet. Comets are named after their original discoverers and this one had been known for some years. at least since 1908 as I now recall. It was a periodic comet. returning to the vicinity of the sun and earth every 61/2 years. "It began to be noticed that when the earth passed near the orbit of this comet we ran into a group of meteors. This occurred only every other return, at 13-year intervals. I believe some meteors were noted in 1920, and I know there was a fair shower. seen especially in Greece, I think, in 1933.

"Computations showed that the orbit of the comet was being slowly changed by perturbations (the pulls of planets) and that in 1946 the earth would pass exceedingly close to its path near the time when the comet was there. I do not recall whether we were a little ahead of the comet or a little behind it. On the basis of the calculations, a meteor shower was predicted for the night of Oct. 9. Except for the interference of a full moon, it was one of the most gorgeous of such showers ever seen.
