Local Pastures Become Lost In Thicket Of Invading Brush

Is range and pasture land in the Callahar area becoming lost in a thicket of trees and brush encroachment upon the land?

The threat is there. Over vast sections of Texas, the silent, ever-expanding growth of brush and undesirable trees today covers 88.5 million acres, of 82 per cent of the state's once luxuriant grassy plains. "Fifty-four million acres, or more than 50 per cent (of the 88.5 million under encroachment), is so densely covered and the grass so suppressed that little improvement can be expected without reduction of the brush competition," soil conservationists of the United States Department of Agriculture report.

Control Possible

In the early 1950s these conservationists were enthusiastic about the eradication of this low-value or worthless woody plant growth. Today, they talk no longer in terms of eradication, but in terms of "can we control this growth?"

In the 20 to 24-inch rainfall areas of the Central Edwards Plateau, the number of cattle grazed has been cut from 30 to 50 to less than 20 head in some areas. The rich bluestem prairies of Central Texas and the Gulf Coast carried as many as 60 to 100 animals and more per section, and much of it is now reduced to 30 and 40 per section. On the other hand, far West Texas, with a much lower rainfall, produced much less forage, and some carried no more than 10 or 15 animals per section. Now, much of this latter part is reduced to as little as five per section, and that on a seasonal basis, when and if it rains.

Use Water

"Worthless brush is slowly and surely suffocating the livestock industry in Texas and the Southwest by robbing ranchers of their soil, water, sunlight and plant resources," H. N. Smith, state conservationist, has declared.

Soil Conservation Service reports estimate that brush, cacti and weeds in Texas use about 146 million acre-feet of water annually, or 40 per cent of the state's total use. Brushy ranges are nearly always in a drought condition because the more vigorous brush is using most of the water that gets into the soil, to the detriment of grasses and other good range plants.

This water loss absorbs supplies affecting not only agriculture but municipalities and industries and ultimately large communities.

When the white man brought his herds and flocks to the great plains and fenced them in, heavy use of the grass, intensified by drought, caused an almost unbelievable change in the natural vegetation. When the grass was removed by grazing and drought, the seed of the hardy woody plants were able to germinate and become established. The result has been a "population explosion" of the undesirable species.

A bare range is ideal for the spread of unpalatable woody and weedy invaders, soil conservationists point out. And there isn't much palatable forage produced on a brush-infested range.

Worst Offenders

Mesquite, cactus, junipers, live oak and post and blackjack oak are among the worst offenders. Mesquite is a prolific seed producer, and livestock and wild animals relish the ripe beans.

The oaks — live, post and blackjack — fit into a savannah vegetation. They have little commercial value and produce little useful forage or timber. Other undesirable growth — such as the huisache, retama, salt-cedar and Macartney rose — were introduced to Texas first as ornamentals and shade trees in pioneer days. They have escaped into grasslands and are spreading in many areas of Texas.

"The basic need in bringing Texas' grassland back into high production is to improve or restore the plants that can produce high quality forage most efficiently under Texas conditions," State Conservationist H. W. Smith maintains.

He sees a four point program as essential to restore range land to a desirable productive condition, as follows:

- (1) Control undesirable brush.
- (2) Re-establish plants which are desirable by natural or artificial means.
- (3) Control sprout and reinfestation.
- (4) Manage the grass to maintain the grasslands in high productivity.

It is estimated that some 30 to 35 million acres has been treated, some of it two or three times. Soil conservation technicians estimate that the treatment is still effective on only 15 million acres. The brush reinfests treated areas after a few years, requiring repeated treatment for control. A comparison of the 1963 survey with a survey made in 1948 shows that brush is gaining in the state.

Complex

Effective treatment of brush is a complex and difficult problem as well as a costly operation. Complete treatment ranges from a low of about $3 an acre to as much as $15 to $35 an acre, or more.

A number of methods of fighting the brush problem has been developed through the years, each having its advantages and disadvantages. Mechanical methods include hand methods, such as grubbing, cutting, girdling and burning; and power methods, such as power saws and girdlers, dozing, chaining, raiing, chopping, disking, mowing, shredding and root-pulling.

Chemical methods include use of oils, aerial and ground spraying of herbicides and the use of pelletized materials. Controlling brush with goats and other livestock is also used under certain conditions.

Not all brush and trees should be removed, however. Their use for shade, bird nesting sites and for cover and food for wildlife is desirable in some areas. Wildlife observers suggest that from 10 to 35 per cent of the land should be untreated for this purpose.

Not Possible

Total eradication is probably not possible. At least, in line with present concepts. For instance, mesquite seeds may lie in the land for 50 to 60 years and then eventually grow. Moisture is a positive limiting factor.

Another concept that must be accepted is that this problem cannot be handled on a piece-meal basis but must be carried out on a long-time planned and coordinated basis. Because of the severity and intensity of the problem, very few ranchmen under their current situation have the finances to carry out a program on their own.

News Of Former Residents

Mr. and Mrs. Charlie A. Stone, former local residents who now make their home at Gruver, where he is employed by an oil company and she is business manager and tax accountant for the public school system, write of having recently attended an open house at Phillips, honoring Mr. and Mrs. Jim Barton, former resident of the Pioneer community. The occasion was the 50th wedding anniversary of the Bartons, who make their home at 325 First Street in Phillips after his retirement Oct. 1, 1955.

"We sure saw a lot of people from the Cross Plains area at the Barton home," Mrs. Stone said. "Present were: Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Joyce and Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Pancake. In fact, over half the people there were acquaintances of ours from old Cross Plains days."

The Rev. and Mrs. H. V. Falkner, who moved from Cross Plains a short while ago, are now making their home at 1168 Eighth Street in Baird. They order the Review continued to their address another year as a means of keeping up with the activities of kinsmen and friends here.

Jimmy Settle, son of J. L. Settle of Cross Plains, has accepted the superintendency of schools at Amherst. He had headed the school system at Spur the past several years.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Oliver presently reside at 215 North Poe in San Angelo. They write to renew their Review subscription and maintain ties with the old home town.

Bright Idea for back-to-school PROPER LIGHTING FOR STUDY

Correct lighting for reading and study doesn't just happen. It's planned. Back-to-school should be backed up by lighted study areas planned to protect the student's eyes. Vision specialists caution: "You have only one pair of eyes.

Take care of them." Ask a WTU representative to advise you about proper lighting for your family's needs. Then visit your local store where lighting equipment is sold and make your selections.

Callahan Museum Gets Instruments

Callahan County residents who knew and loved the pioneer physician, the late Dr. R. L. Griggs, will be glad to know that a case containing instruments, saddle bags and other articles used by the well-known doctor in the early days of his sixty year practice in Callahan County has been presented to the Pioneer Museum at Baird.

The museum, featuring articles actually used by pioneer citizens of this county is housed with the Callahan County Library in the basement of the courthouse. The Wednesday Club of Baird has sponsored both as their permanent project for 25 years.

Gift of the valuable mementoes was courtesy of Dr. R. W. Varner of Abilene who has had them on display at his office, but who decided to present them for permanent display in the county where Dr. Griggs practiced for many years.

Members of the museum committee of the Wednesday Club are Mrs. W. P. Brightwell and Mrs. A. E. Dyer, Sr. The Library committee is composed of Mrs. Lee Ivey and Mrs. Clyde White, Mrs. Rosa Ryan is librarian-curator, and Mrs. L. B. Lewis is president of the club.

PIGSKIN Prognosis

By Jim Gilmore

With only one week gone in the current football season, this department has already lost all chance for a perfect record in district win predictions.

Baird, Comanche, Albany and Cisco were responsible for upsetting the forecast, and if anyone ever had confidence in the writer's judgment, he surely lost some of it last week.

Still, in the face of 527 per cent failure, the Buffalo victory looms large enough to disguise the shame and disgrace brought upon this column by other misses.

But on to bigger and better things — this week. Predicted winners listed in bold faced type.

Baird at Merkel: Look's like a long Winter for the Bears, especially since the decline and fall of their halfback, J. D. Faircloth, sidelined Friday with a broken leg. Take Badgers, 14-6.

Cisco at Albany: Lions have lost their luck and Lobos are looking for a loser, 20-14.

Rising Star at Eastland: Mavericks started strong, can stop class B Cats, 13-6.

Haskell at Clyde: Indians are big but Callahan's Bulldogs are determined, 14-8.

Ranger at Dublin: Lions are prospects for 7-AA championship; Bulldogs can't fight it, 22-6.

Goldthwaite at De Leon: Each squad in line for championship of its own district, but pick on past record, 12-8.

Cross Plains at Santa Anna: Buffalo flatlanders outclass the Mountaineers, 19-0.
