RIFF BILL IS PASSED BY SENATE

Independent Oil Man Doesn't Want War, Say Operators

MEASURE IS APPROVED BY ONLY 2 VOTES

Support of the Senate Farm Group Lost on Roll Call

By PAUL R. MALLON
United Press Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON, June 13.—The Smoot-Hawley bill raising the tariff on imports $107,000,000 a year or more was passed in final form by the senate today, a year and a half after it began its legislative career. The vote was 44 to 42.

Containing increased duties on sugar, shoes, butter, cement, lumber and bricks among many others, the measure now goes to the house where passage is scheduled tomorrow.

The prospects are it will become a law next week by President Hoover's signature.

Designed originally to equalize the tariff disadvantages of agriculture with those of industry, the measure lost the almost unanimous support of the senate farm group on the final roll call. The rejected coalition of farm republicans and democrats turned overwhelmingly against the measure now that the debenture system of farm relief is omitted. They took the position the increased duties on agriculture will be ineffective while the upward adjustment of many industrial rates will only add further to the burdens of the farmers.

The votes of the administration republican group and a few democrats furnished the small majority for the measure which was one of the most controversial in history.

With Misgivings
Some of the bill's supporters, notably Senators Reed and Grundy, republican protectionists from Pennsylvania, cast their votes with public misgivings about the benefits of the measure. Taking exactly the opposite position of the farm groups they say the food stuffs tariffs are too high and the industrial rates insufficiently adjusted to protect American manufacturers fully against foreign competition.

Like others who voted for the bill, they made clear they were supporting it largely for expediency, feeling business would be better with the question definitely settled.
The final vote came upon the technical parliamentary question of adopting the conference report which contains the latest changes made by house and senate conferees in adjusting the differences in the measure originally passed by both houses. Rejection of this report would have sent the bill again to conference for further adjustments to make it acceptable to a majority of the senate. There is no doubt but that a more substantial majority will be piled up in favor of the measure when a similar vote is taken in the house tomorrow. There is likewise every reason to expect Mr. Hoover will sign the measure. His friends have indicated he feels substantially the same way about the measure as Reed and Grundy.

Is Disputed
What the bill will do economically is disputed. During the 16 months since the measure first

CANNON SAYS HE WILL STAY IN POLITICS

WASHINGTON, June 13.—The possibility of contempt action against Bishop James Cannon, Jr., for his refusal to answer questions propounded by the senate lobby committee rested today with Vice President Curtis. Member of the committee indicated they would institute no further action.

Senator Blaine, W. S., reinstated his belief that the law is mandatory upon the vice president to certify the record in the case to the district attorney for prosecution. However, he said he probably would take no action himself.

NEW YORK, June 13.—Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of Virginia declared in an article in the Christian Herald today that he intended to remain in politics in spite of every effort within and without his church to dissuade him.

The article, although written prior to his last appearance before the senate lobby committee, throws an interesting light on his attitude toward that body and contains an aggressive answer to critics who have censured him for his participation in the anti-Smith campaign of 1928.

"I have declined to recognize the right of the lobby committee to investigate the political activities of independent citizens," the bishop writes. "Indeed, I am of the opinion that is an intolerable infringement upon the rights of independent citizens for congress, whose business it is to enact legislation, to attempt to investigate or to control the political activities of such independent citizens."

The bishop said in the article that he had been warned more than a year ago that unless he stopped fighting what he termed the "Smith-Raskob-wet-Tammany Roman Catholic domination of the democratic party," his influence and reputation would be attacked and destroyed.

Trying to "Frame" Him
Private detectives, he charged, have been following him for two years hoping to get evidence to "frame" him.

"They will literally stop at nothing to destroy me," he added. "And this same group would deal in the same way with any other man who might stand in the way of their accomplishment of their purpose to elect a wet president, repeal the 18th amendment, and bring back the legalized liquor traffic. I simply happen to be the target today."

As chairman of the board of temperance and social service of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, the bishop considers he has duties which "will inevitably call for political activity to a greater or less degree."

"It is my present purpose," he said, "to render such service as strength and opportunity may permit."

Bishop Cannon pointed out that his church, at its recent general conference in Dallas, exonerated him of charges of undue political activity, although mentioning that some churchmen had "vigorously opposed" the conference's action.

FAMOUS RACER DIES SETTING NEW RECORD

Major Seagrave Is Fatally Injured as Boat Capsizes

WINDERMERE, Eng., June 13.—Major Sir Henry Seagrave's speed boat, Miss England hurtling over the water of Lake Windermere at more than 100 miles an hour for a new world speed record, suddenly dived like a bullet today, hurling her crew of three into the water, injuring Seagrave fatally.

Sir Henry and his mechanic, E. Willocks, were taken out of the water in a daring rescue by a man and a woman spectator, the other mechanic, E. Halliwell never appeared above the surface again.

At the hospital here Seagrave was found to have both arms and a rib broken and died from his injuries. Willocks had a broken thigh.

Seagrave died shortly after 5 p. m. He was one of the most famous automobile and motorboat speed drivers in the world, noted for his skill and daring. He already held the world automobile speed record of 231 miles an hour, made in Florida and shortly before the accident had set a new world motorboat record with an average of 98.76 miles an hour.

3 Runs
The record was made on two runs which preceded the third and fatal one. The official time for the first was 96.4 miles an hour, and for the second 101.1. The previous record was held by the American, Gar Wood, at 93.4 miles an hour.

Seagrave was estimated to have been going well above 100 miles an hour on the third run when the boat, roaring over the water with a deafening noise suddenly disappeared in a great shower of water. Hundreds of spectators saw the accident and all manner of craft hurried to the scene. But it remained for a spectator named King to make the first g a i l a n t attempt to rescue. King dived into the water fully clothed and brought up Seagrave. A woman helped them both into a boat and then fainted.

The cause of the accident was not determined. Miss England II had a gaping hole in the bottom. It was believed either she had struck a piece of driftwood or one of the whirling propellers broke and crashed through the hull.

27,871 People Due Bad Luck Expected Accident Toll for Friday 13th Computed

CHICAGO, June 13.—Today is Friday the 13th, hoodoo day, and before midnight rolls around again bad luck will come to at least 27,871 persons.

The calamity in most cases could be averted, the National Safety Council says, but experienced in tabulating bad luck over the nation has taught the body the accident toll today will be about the average number even if it is the 13th.

Here's how the bad luck will be distributed, according to the council's figures:

27,530 will be accidentally injured.
265 will be accidentally killed.
47 will fall and be killed.
35 will be wounded.
21 will be burned to death.

The figures do not take into consideration the accidents that will befall those who walk under ladders, cross the path of black cats or break mirrors.

The council suggests that those who are superstitious stay in bed but Mark Twain is the authority for the statement that more people die in bed than anywhere else.

REJUVENATION SPECIALIST IS DENIED RELIEF

TOPEKA, Kan., June 13.—The Kansas supreme court today handed down a decision in which it denied J. R. Brinkley, alleged rejuvenation specialist, an order restraining the state medical board from taking action next Tuesday to revoke his license.

The decision was in an appeal from the Shawnee county district court where Judge George H. Whitcomb had refused to issue an order restraining the medical board.

It is expected that Dr. Brinkley will attempt to carry the case to the U. S. supreme court as he claims that to allow the board to take action is a violation of his constitutional rights in that the board is attempting to deprive him of his property of a license without giving him adequate means of defending himself. He contends that the law creating the board does not provide a way in which he may compel witnesses to come in and testify for him.

The proceedings were started after the attorney general had filed proceedings before the board serving notice on Dr. Brinkley that a hearing would be held June 17, at which he would be compelled to show cause why his license should not be revoked. In the charges, a long list of allegations were set charging that Brinkley had been guilty of gross immorality, that he had been convicted of selling liquor and other things. The charges grew out of the alleged goat gland operations of Brinkley in which he claimed to rejuvenate old men by implanting goat glands, and out of the charge that he was prescribing over the radio to patients and was engaged in unprofessional conduct in so doing.

The big question involved was whether the State Board of Medical Registration & Examination has power to hear evidence and act upon it under the law creating the board.

Ten Largest Cities of Nation Will Show Census Increase of 3,000,000

The nation's ten largest cities will show a gain of more than 3,000,000 in population during the last ten years, according to figures gathered by the United Press. Census returns are not complete from some of the cities.

Chicago and Los Angeles probably will have the largest increase, the figures show. Los Angeles reported a gain of 656,067 while Chicago showed 672,048 over the 1920 census. New York's official count may reveal a greater numerical gain than either of these, although estimates give New York only 522,000 gain.

The most notable change in the ranking of the first ten cities was made by Los Angeles, which stood tenth in 1920 but passed Cleveland, Baltimore, St. Louis, Boston, and Pittsburgh to take fifth place this year.

The cities are expected to increase, as follows, although revised figures later may affect the standings:
New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Los Angeles, Cleveland, St. Louis, Baltimore, Boston and Pittsburgh.
Baltimore is expected to pass Boston on the basis of preliminary figures, but the official Boston count has not been made.

In the next twenty cities, numerous changes probably will be noted when the final count is in. Minneapolis may be found in 15th place, against 18th in 1920; Newark, N. J., dropped to 18th from 15th; Atlanta advanced to 22nd from 33rd; and Houston to 26th from 45th.

The following table shows the probable standings:

"Dishonest Police" Blamed for Crime

KANSAS CITY, June 13.—An appeal to the city to rid itself of "dishonest policemen" who they said start youngsters on the road to crime in order to collect part of the spoils was voiced here today by two men who will die July 15 for murdering a patrolman of a different calibre.

"We were pretty good boys, once," said Tony "Lollypop" Mangiaracino. He was speaking for himself and Carol Nasello, condemned to die for the slaying of Patrolman James H. "Happy" Smith following the robbery of the Home Trust bank during the height of the Republican National convention in 1928.

"Then we started to go wrong, and dishonest patrolmen encouraged our crimes. They protected us for a 'cut' of the spoils. It's too late for us now, but the city should get rid of that kind of officer."

John Messino, the third of the condemned Home Trust bandits, remained sullen today and would talk to no one.

OLD MAN TEXAS NEEDS A NEW OVERCOAT.

Texas are reminded that Old Man Texas is in need of a new wardrobe as well as an overcoat since the census was taken in 1920.

Old Man Texas has been given a partial coat. His sons and daughters in the partial coat indicate something like $600,000,000, and when all the returns are in from the counties organized and unorganized which had not reported when the story was written, the figure may go far beyond $600,000,000.

In any event, in the new congressional apportionment, Texas will gain two, and perhaps three, congressmen. Texas, California and Florida occupy three large corners of the national picture, with the old Uncle Sam and His Growing Family.

ADDITIONS TO THE RANKS OF ELDERLY STATESMEN.

Last week, elderly statesmen are coming to the surface. Commissioner of Agriculture George B. Terrill has announced for representative in the 31st legislative district. There is one county in the district, Cherokee, and through the years Farmer Terrill has been the political idol of the Texas Cherokee.

He served several terms as representative in bygone years and he has been on the political firing line at all times since he was able to cast a ballot.

Then, another elderly statesman, Major Petch of Gillespie county, has announced for a fourth term. Major Petch is the friend of Governor Moody, the friend of Chairman Ross Sterling, the friend of humanity for that matter.

It was just the other day that he received an exquisite decoration of red roses, bestowed upon him in grateful remembrance by a red-headed governor. Turn em loose and let Texas grow.

Did You Ever Stop to Think?

That advertising is a trade getter and a trade builder. Build your business by advertising!

That the best sellers are always advertised; that is why people read the ads before they buy.

That constant advertising creates an ever-increasing demand.

That forward looking merchants recognize the demand for quality merchandise and keep a standard of quality goods that is the best, and then they advertise!

That they can supply the best on the market at all times.

That the old saying, "the best is none too good" is fully recognized by the up-to-date merchant. It is as true today as it always was, and will remain true forever.

When you find well-advertised merchandise you find merchandise that is already in demand, and the demand is being increased by advertising.

The Husband Hunter

© 1930 BY MRS. SERVICE INC. BY RUTH DEWEY GROVES

BEGIN HERE TODAY Natalie Converse, jealous of her husband's friendship with Bernadine Lamont, leaves him. Alan is consoled by his secretary, Phillipa West, who is seeking to make an advantageous marriage.

Natalie returns, and Alan realizes that he loves her, but his chivalrous feeling for Phillipa keeps her standing between them when she refuses to release Alan. Natalie appeals to him in an emergency and he returns to their home, but he is too honorable to attempt a reconciliation.

Natalie suspects there is another woman. One day she meets Bernadine in Alan's office. Her old jealousy flares up again and she quarrels bitterly with Alan. That night he dines with Phillipa. The next day Natalie comes to the office to plead for forgiveness. Alan is out. Phillipa, fearful lest his anger should not endure, plots to discredit Natalie. In a letter she changes the name of a stock Bernadine wants to one that is worthless. Bernadine comes to the office and discovers the substitution after the order has gone through. In the investigation that follows, Phillipa directs suspicion against Natalie. Alan believes her guilty and goes up to Hillshire to accuse her.

Natalie goes to an aunt in Philadelphia. Alan makes good Bernadine's losses. Not long afterward Bernadine dies and he turns to Phillipa to help him care for Bobby, Bernadine's young son. Natalie reads of Bernadine's death and returns to make a last plea for a reconciliation. Alan misunderstands her motive and tells her he is going to marry Phillipa West when he is free. But Phillipa is not willing for him to adopt Bobby. Alan decides to go ahead with it. Geoffrey Norman, a friend comes to his office and invites Alan to his apartment on a matter of great importance. Alan accepts. Phillipa is preparing to start for New York when the telephone rings. She hopes it is Alan and rushes to answer it. She is greatly surprised to hear the voice that replies to her.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XLVII "Geoffrey Norman?" Phillipa squealed his name in her surprise and unexpected pleasure. "When did you get back?" "Not long ago," Geoffrey told her.

"But how did you know where to find me? Have you seen Alan?" Geoffrey permitted her first question to answer itself when he said: "Yes, I've seen Alan. Just had a minute with him in his office."

"Did he tell you?" Phillipa went on. Then she laughed. "I suppose you've called me up to wish me happiness?" "Why, Alan didn't tell me anything," Geoffrey answered truthfully. "Have you inherited a fortune or something like that?" "Oh," Phillipa was rather taken back, but she instantly became gay again with the thought that Geoffrey had called her, then, simply because he wanted to. Not knowing she was engaged to Alan, he naturally thought it all right.

"I'm coming down town," she cried excitedly. "I'd like to see you."

"Well, I'm awfully sorry," Geoffrey said regretfully, "because I want to see you, too, I called up to see if you wouldn't come to a little party at my place tonight?" Phillipa hesitated, but she was thinking hard and fast. Geoffrey's invitation presented an opportunity to show Alan she wasn't tied hand and foot to the life he was laying out for her. Let him stay away from dinner—and come up just to see Bobby!

"I'd be delighted," she said at last. "But you mean your apartment on Park Avenue?" "Know the address?" "Of course. Haven't I mailed you bushels and bushels of bonds?" "Would you mind coming early? This isn't a fashionable party at all."

"I'll have dinner in town and come up about eight-thirty, O. K.?" "Right. It's awfully kind of you."

Phillipa smiled frequently to herself on the way to the station, to take a train to New York. Geoffrey had been a bit stiff, but that was his way, she thought. "And his tip not to dress—thoughtful lad."

Thoughtful—and oh so rich! As good looking as Alan, too, in his way. If she had the chance to choose between them. . . . "Well, he hasn't forgotten me!" She smiled like a puss in cream.

"Alan, and his orphan kid! Going to adopt him. And she could like it or lump it. But who could say? Perhaps she wouldn't have to lump it."

She shopped with a high heart, buying herself a new and dressier blouse of eggshell crepe to wear with her smart blue suit. Kid gloves, a new hat and bag, even stockings. She could change after dinner—she would go to a hotel—before appearing at Geoffrey's apartment.

She remembered it well—that apartment. She went there once on an errand. She needn't have gone—she could have sent a boy just as well, but she wanted to see the place. And she never forgot it.

Astonishingly vast, and furnished with the magnificence of a Roman palace. Its impressiveness had remained in Phillipa's mind as a background against which she compared all other home interiors. No other that she had seen had measured up to it.

It had been quiet, and filled with subdued light when she first saw it. But tonight, she thought, there would be soft radiance flooding it, many flowers, and the haunting sweetness of waltzes.

Geoffrey was like that—he never gave a jazz party, Phillipa told herself, as she was whirled upward in the bronze elevator to the room where the Normans occupied the pent-house apartment, with a number of rooms on the top floor.

frey invited, and offered Phillipa a chair. She sat down, feeling awkward and disturbed. Alan dropped into a wing chair and reached for a cigaret.

"Alan," Geoffrey said, gazing steadfastly at his friend, "I've asked you to come here so that I might tell you I think you have made a great mistake."

Alan was staring back at him, his expression a decided question mark. Neither looked at Phillipa. "About Natalie, I mean," Geoffrey went on. "Good God, man, how could you have believed she touched that letter?"

Alan started to rise. "Sit down," Geoffrey snapped. "You've got to listen. You judged Natalie without a fair trial. She's told me about it. I ran across her at the Penn Station yesterday, half out of her mind, fit for the hospital. I took care of her, and made her talk. She was in no condition to think—she just talked."

"I suppose she accused Mrs. Lamont?" Alan said bitterly. "She didn't accuse anyone. She seemed stunned. But I gathered that at one time she was very jealous of the woman you mention."

"Very?" It was Phillipa, ending on a taunting laugh. "She told me, however," Geoffrey went on, "that you were going to marry Miss West."

"So you did know when you telephoned?" Phillipa thrust at him. She was beginning to feel at sea—helpless.

"Yes?" Alan said on Geoffrey's pause. "Did it never occur to you to doubt everyone who had a chance at that letter?" Geoffrey asked, abruptly.

"Well, really," Phillipa jumped to her feet, but Geoffrey motioned her to be quiet. "I want Alan to answer that question," he said with a solemnity that stopped Phillipa's protest. "Of course, I did," Alan declared testily.

"Now see here," Alan began impatiently, "this is all very well, coming from a friend of Natalie's, but why did you drag Miss West into it?" Phillipa whirled to him. "Let's get out," she said. "This is contemptible."

Geoffrey ignored the baleful glance she cast at him, and Alan shook his head. "No," he said firmly, "not until I know what Norman's got on his mind."

"All right," Geoffrey said tensely. "I'll tell you." He turned to face Phillipa where she stood stiffly before her chair, gripping her handbag to keep her hands from shaking.

"Miss West," he said bluntly, "do you know anything about that letter that you haven't told Alan?" Phillipa stared back at him for a moment, her eyes blazing defiance, then they wavered, and she turned to Alan.

"I won't stand for this," she cried. "He's only doing it to humiliate me. If you're a man you won't stand for it, either."

She rushed over to Alan and grabbed him by the arm. "Let's go," she wailed. "Let's go."

"Wait a minute," Alan spoke sternly. "How about it, Geoffrey? Are you ready to apologize?" "Apologize?" Geoffrey echoed blankly. "For asking Miss West a question that I believe should have been asked her long before this?"

Alan thrust Phillipa's hands away, and strode toward him. "For what's behind the question," he said levelly. "I think you know

"A libertine with a bad temper," murmured clever Tony Leigh, the erudite caricaturist with the kind heart in the world.

"Good shot, Tony," said the chaplain. "I wonder who the chaplain can be?"

As a matter of fact, Stornaway's companion was Bruce Gideon, a financier, whose portrait the artist was painting as a present from an insurance company with which Gideon was associated.

During the sittings, Gideon had shown much interest in the life of artists, and the two men had become friendly to a certain extent.

Gideon had asked Stornaway to dinner at his apartment on Park avenue, and had expressed a desire to see a real bit of the poorer Greenwich Village.

Stornaway had thought of the Cafe Turc, of his long past struggles, and had brought his host to what he had described as New York's nearest approach to the artist life of Paris.

The rich man looked about him while he smoked his fat cigar. From his little eyes no one would have known what he was thinking—whether he despised these shabby, long-haired, lean-faced youths, these queer-looking women with their eyes full of visions, or whether there stirred in him some vague envy of the ardent minds that can transcend hardship and want, and can work, suffer, and enjoy, on the wings of a great idea.

To the left of Vincent Stornaway and his companion was a young woman sitting at a table all alone. As other men and women came in, nearly all of them greeted her, and some lingered a moment by her side. A man now and then asked her to have some refreshment; but nobody sat down at her table.

She answered all greetings in the same way, without enthusiasm, as a matter of course. She accepted refreshment every now and then. From time to time she smiled a beautiful smile, like that of a child.

Bruce Gideon turned with an interrogation to Stornaway, who, as it happened, could enlighten him.

"That girl has a remarkable story," the artist said in a low voice, turning toward his companion so that his words should not carry. "Do you think her beautiful?"

"Not exactly," Gideon answered. "Too colorless."

His voice, kept low in imitation of the other man's, was surprisingly soft—quite at variance with his appearance, and almost like a woman's.

"She was considered the most beautiful girl in New York some years ago," the artist continued. He pointed behind him to the glazed sketch surmounted by the crumpled wreath. "Chandlery did this head of her. She was like a young Diana then."

Gideon had paid his homage to the dead master's work as he came in.

"Good Lord!" he said. "You don't mean that's the same woman? What happened to her?"

"Love," replied Stornaway. "She fell in love with a boy who used practically to live here—Alan Steyne, an artist. At least, he was trying to be an artist, and starving meanwhile. It was one of those terrific passions. They were inseparable—couldn't breathe apart. She was about 18 at the time, and he was a few years older. She's the daughter of an Englishman. I've forgotten his name—he died in Switzerland."

"I can't remember which mountain. Her mother was dead long before."

Gideon turned, and his small eyes made a quick survey of the young woman's fair face.

"I thought she didn't quite fit in here," he said. "Go on, Stornaway. This is most interesting."

"One day Alan Steyne disappeared—just like that, without a word—just as if he were dead. She wasn't the kind that could stand it. It wasn't an ordinary love affair—not on her part, at any rate. She didn't exist apart from him, and everyone thought he was equally fond of her. I used to come here quite often in those days, and I saw a good deal of them."

"What became of the fellow?" Gideon asked.

"Nobody knows—never heard of since. He was clever, but impractical—didn't care about going through the mill. He's never done anything in the art world, or one would have heard of him. The girl went to pieces—nearly died, you know; and when she struggled back again she was like she is now."

"Do you mean she's mad?" asked the rich man with interest.

"Not exactly. Silly, I should say—quite all there—childish."

"And how does she live?"

"Everybody looks after her, as far as I can make out. She's the pet of this place. At first she must have had a little money. She didn't seem to have any relations. Little by little she became the adopted child of the chaps who come here. She has never painted since. Alan Steyne left her. I think she's quite how it's managed but nobody would let her live with a girl—a girl they call Judy. More or less of a new-made woman; but I've seen often. Someone told me she was looking after a man. I think she's a model herself—a queer, savage-looking sort of a girl."

"How long ago did this happen?" Gideon asked.

"Let me see—about seven years ago, I suppose. Yes; it's five since I used to come here regularly, and then Chummy was quite an institution."

A slip of a girl pushed open the door and came into the Cafe Turc. She shook herself like a dog, and the raindrops fell from her in showers.

Everybody in the front room knew her and greeted her.

"Hallo, Judy! Cheerio, Judy!" Welcome to the ark, Judy!"

The girl answered them all with laughing words in a voice that was husky, partly by nature, and partly owing to a bad cold. She advanced with a series of shakes, and finally divested herself of the finally moistish she was wearing. Underneath, she had a very short skirt of dark tartan, and a bright green jersey with threads of gold showing here and there. On her head was a battered, white-felt hat, very much pulled over her eyes.

Judith Grant's face was gaudy with its cheap paint and powder and lamplack that sullied and disguised the wonder of its youth; but it was charming, for all that, and flower-like. Once a man looked at it, he often had to look again and again.

She had a mop of short, red-gold hair and big eyes the color of dark purple pansies, and a mouth that was always laughing. She was very small. Artists used her as a model for the lines of her neck and shoulders, and for her hands and feet, which were pretty nearly perfect.

Sometimes, when her profession failed her, she got into a chorus. She was a born dancer, but she never stayed long, and had never achieved promotion on the stage. For one thing, she had no voice, and for another, she was so small that she was lost in the crowd.

Her entrance into the inner room was greeted with another chorus. Everybody knew her.

"Hallo, boys!" she cried as she jumped the three steps in a bound. She looked round and saw the fair girl alone at her table. "Ah, there's my family!" she exclaimed, walking over to Chummy, and flinging down her mackintosh on a chair and her hat on the top of it.

She sat down beside her friend, and Dan brought her a steaming tumbler of punch. Two or three of the men at the big table came over and talked to the two girls.

Bruce Gideon's interest was manifestly aroused. He sat silent, watching them. Chummy, the fair girl, smiled at the men and talked. She looked quite vacant except when she smiled. They evidently treated her as a child. One of them patted her hand kindly as he moved away.

Presently the young men had strolled away. Gideon turned to Stornaway.

"Could you introduce me?" he asked. "Do you know them?"

"Oh, yes," the artist replied with a smile. "The two men rose and walked over to the girl's table, and Stornaway told them who he was in his charming way."

"I don't expect you remember me, Miss Judy," he added; "but I have had the pleasure of meeting you. I don't come here often now—don't get time, worse luck!"

"Oh, but, of course, you're a great hit, Mr. Stornaway," the girl answered, with mischief in her eyes that lighted them and made them sparkle like amethysts.

Stornaway introduced Gideon. Judy nodded to him and presented him to her friend, whose name she gave as Miss Morley.

Chummy looked at him with her straight, soulless gaze. He saw that her eyes were golden brown, and that her beauty was really faultless, and must have been startling when illumined by intelligence.

"Oh!" she said in her deep, bell-like voice. "Oh, my man! Very ugly man! Man just like Punch!" Gideon wasn't at all touchy about his appearance. He was supposed rather to glory in it. He saw that Judy tried to suppress the gleam of sheer amusement in her eyes.

Stornaway gave an embarrassed smile; but Gideon himself smiled broadly, thus distinctly adding to the resemblance to that typical figure of fun. He turned to the other girl.

"Didn't I hear that your name is Judy, Miss Grant?" he asked. When he smiled, the ill-nature disappeared from his face, but it gained in grossness. "We only want dog Toby to be complete!"

"You mustn't mind what Chummy says," Judy answered.

They talked for a few minutes; then other newcomers came up. Gideon could see that they were all desperately poor. In every stretch of Judy's clothing he saw penurious shabbiness.

The two men took their leave. It was still pouring with rain. Presently they found a cab. Gideon sat silent for a few moments; then he expelled a sudden breath.

"What a monstrous shame it is!" he muttered.

"What is a shame?" asked Stornaway.

"That that girl should live that life!"

missed going to the cafe a single day; she had a splendid appetite. On the whole, she was easily managed, and she accepted everything that was done for her without question.

Judy doubted whether Chummy remembered that she was Clara's daughter, or that she had ever lived in another world and had relations and friends who were not pennilessly impetuous.

Judy shook out her mop of red-gold hair when she had brushed it well. She was perfumery with her cosmetics this morning, and left her flower face very nearly as God made it.

She found that Chummy had a heavy cold. While she dosed her, and lit a fire out of her scanty stock of fuel, she began her unconscious assault on her friend's dormant memory.

"Chummy, dear, would you be glad to see an old friend again?"

"What friend?" asked the other girl, with her innocent smile.

"A real old friend—some one you were very fond of, old girl!"

"I'm fond of you, Judy, and Bastien and Michael and all the boys," said the deep, bell-like voice.

"I know, but this is somebody you know long ago. Don't you remember, Chummy? Some one you loved very much." Suddenly she flung her arms around her friend's neck and hugged her.

"Some one you loved very much!" "A man?" asked Chummy.

"Yes, a man."

"I love men—I love them very much," said Chummy complacently.

"Yes—but one man—a quite particular boy, you know, not like the others. He's coming back. You'll see him tonight."

"Oh!" said Chummy blandly. "What do you mean?"

Judy gave it up.

During the day she went to Bastien Dumont's attic.

"I can't prepare Chummy," she told him. "She won't take it in. And she's got a vile cold. She can't go to the cafe tonight. Anyway, I wouldn't let her meet him there, in front of all the boys. I don't know how she'll take it. You must tell him the best way you can. Of course, as soon as he knows, he'll want to come at once. I'll expect you tonight—about 9. Chummy mustn't be kept up late."

She clasped her hands excitedly.

"Oh, Bastien, what a wonderful thing! When she sees him, it must all come back to her—it must be all right!"

"I'll do my best," he promised obediently; "but it is a nasty job."

Judy went home and passed a day of feverish excitement. She threw out hint after hint to Chummy, who was quite unresponsive. Even the plainest words did not penetrate the darkness of her mind. Judy spoke then once right out.

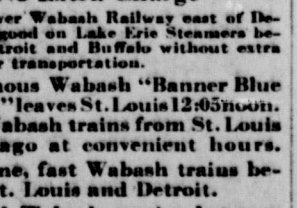

"Chummy, your lover—Alan Steyne—has come back. He is coming to see you tonight."

Severe Case of Kidney Trouble

Grateful Man, 78, Tells of Splendid Relief Modern Medicine Gave in His Case.

MR. H. A. ROWLAND

"I am 78 years of age and up until two years ago I enjoyed very good health," said Mr. H. A. Rowland, R. F. D. No. 2, Benton, Arkansas, near Little Rock. "Then my kidneys began to give me trouble and each month my condition became worse. I finally got so bad that I had to get up from eight to ten times every night. I constantly had a dull ache across my back, and I felt tired and worn-out, all the time. I could not do any work."

"A relative first told me about Konjola and I started using it. At the end of a week I noticed a change in my condition. Now I feel much stronger in every way. Those aches and pains are about gone from my back. This Konjola surely did me a lot of good, and I gladly endorse and recommend it."

Konjola is a medicine that, when given a fair trial—from six to eight bottles—easily and harmlessly eliminates the common ailments of the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels and rheumatism, neuritis and nervousness.

Konjola is sold in Cisco at the Moore Drug Company, and by all the best druggists in all towns throughout this entire section.

NEW JAIL NEEDED
WILLIAMSBURG, Virginia—The Rockefeller Restoration, with its plans for a new court house and jail in Williamsburg, is a timely enterprise so far as the police department is concerned. The present city jail apparently is "safe" for prisoners, the second easy break having just been made by a negro who remained only three hours before he pulled out a window weight, rammed a hole through the wall and took "French leave." Another prisoner escaped from the same cell about a year ago.

Atlanta, Ga.—"I have been a user of Thedford's Black-Draught for about forty-five years," writes Mrs. Sarah L. Thomas, of 449 Bedford Place, this city. "I wouldn't know how to keep house without it."

"I gave it to my children, while they were growing up, for headaches, colds and other childish ailments."

"I was subject to headaches and dizzy spells that caused me to spend a day or so at a time in bed, and made me feel weak and shaky."

"My step-mother advised me to take Black-Draught, and finding it so helpful and quick to relieve me, I have used it, when I needed a laxative, ever since. It is splendid for constipation and indigestion. Whenever I eat anything that disagrees with me, I take a pinch of Black-Draught and get relief. I have never used anything that helped me more."

U.S. APPROVAL OF NEW ROUTE IS EXPECTED

By ELWOOD SQUIRES
United Press Staff Correspondent
SACRAMENTO, Cal., June 13.—Locked and carefully guarded in a huge winery not far from Sacramento are choicest wines for which California is famed.

Port, sherry, claret, muscatel—every kind of vintage made in the state is found there, a total of 133,000 gallons.

Silva Brothers, owners of the place, were arrested six months ago and charged with violating the Volstead act by selling small quantities of the wines to thirsty customers. A bonded winery, the establishment was seized by the government, and placed under lock and seal.

Now, for the first time in history of prohibition, the government must make a declaration of policy on the question of selling liquor which has been seized.

Within the next two weeks the case of the United States vs. Silva Bros. Winery will come up in federal court here. The question is—Should more than $1,000,000 of the finest wines in California be poured down a sewer, or can the government sell these 133,000 gallons for legitimate commercial use?

First, of course, must come conviction of the owners for violating the national prohibition act. There is no legal problem involved here, and should the Silvas be convicted the government will focus attention on the winery and its contents.

Deputy U. S. District Attorney Albert E. Sheets, in charge of the case, has said he will seek a decree of forfeiture and destruction of the wine and the plant.

Here is where the legal battle will begin.

The government has destroyed many gallons of intoxicating beverages since prohibition went into effect. It has confiscated small quantities of choice liquors and turned them over to government hospitals for use.

But never has it been confronted with disposition of such a tremendous quantity of the highest quality liquor.

Creating even more of a legal tangle, Fruit Industries, Inc., a corporation licensed by the government to make by-products from grapes, had the Silva winery under option before the plant was seized.

They are insisting that the government proceed with the sale, contending that their option is still valid. The property is not made illegal through an act of these owners, it is their argument.

Meanwhile, both sides are pouring over law books, endeavoring to discover proper points of law for the case.

Fruit industries assert that there is nothing in the Volstead act to force destruction of the wine under conditions existing. The government, it is understood, is inclined to agree, but is searching for a more careful interpretation of the law.

Had the wine been transported, or manufactured illegally, then it would be liable to forfeiture and destruction. But it lay in a bonded warehouse, in care of men under bond, who are only alleged to have sold part of it.

A conference of prohibition enforcement authorities in Washington is expected soon, to get up a definite policy that will be fought through the courts.

Protests against the increases have been lodged at the state department by nearly every country in the world. The democrats and farm senators claim the tariff will ruin foreign trade. They have pointed repeatedly to threats of reprisals. They say other countries will raise their tariffs on our products so high the United States will lose its high export trade standard.

Aroused. Automobile manufacturers have been particularly aroused over this feature of the measure as automobiles are exported in large quantities. Henry Ford and Alfred P. Sloan, head of General Motors, have made particularly vehement protests against the bill.

For the republicans, Chairman Smead has countered the argument with the statement that 90 per cent of the nations of the world already have tariffs higher than those of the United States and dare not raise their tariffs higher. This group takes the position the foreign nations cannot get automobiles anywhere as cheaply as they can in the United States. They contend such protests always have been made against American tariffs.

Foreign agitation against the bill has been more pronounced in South America than in Europe. The hides duty and the increased agricultural rates are expected to be chiefly effective against Argentine and South American countries.

What the bill will do politically is another source of argument.

Democrats have made no secret of their intention to carry on their coming congressional campaign almost solely on the issue of what they call "Grundysism." They have predicted the bill will work havoc with business, fail to help agriculture and bring down the wrath of the electorate upon the heads of the republicans in power.

Democrats claim the bill will raise the cost of living, some making estimates of an increased cost of a billion dollars.

On the other hand the republicans likewise intend to use the issue at the polls. Party congressional candidates, particularly in the house where the measure is looked upon with more favor, intend to point to the law as the accomplishment of their stewardship in the first two years of the Hoover administration.

German Fans Happy Today

BERLIN, June 13.—Fight fans throughout Germany went wild with enthusiasm early today as they jeered the victory of Max Schmeling over Jack Sharkey in New York last night.

Schmeling's mother joined the American fight fans in their disapproval of the ending of the championship fight.

"Naturally, Max becoming champion makes this the happiest day of my life," Mrs. Schmeling told the United Press. "However, I would much rather that my son had won on his own merits, rather than through his opponent's misfortune."

mands the reasonable security of such investments and of these activities, and

"Whereas, the summary taking up of these pipe lines or the withdrawal of all markets for crude which has been produced in good faith is opposed to public policy and constitutes a violation of fair business practices:

"Be it therefore resolved by the Eastland Petroleum association of Texas at Houston, June 12, 1930, that we condemn as opposed to public policy and unfair to the operators the withdrawing of pipe line facilities or of marketing outlets when investments have been made and production secured upon the reasonable belief that such facilities were of permanent nature."

Tariff Bill

was started on its long and arduous legislative path, various and divergent prophesies have been made by economists and public officials.

The textile industry gets some added protection from the measure.

The agricultural rates have been measurably increased. For the first time in recent years, hides, cement, bricks and soft lumber will bear a tariff. Bricks carry a duty of $1.25 per thousand; cement 6 cents per 100 pounds; shoes 20 per cent; soft lumber $1 per 1,000 feet and hides 10 per cent. All have been on the free list heretofore.

The agricultural schedule is the one which has been increased most. Lemon duties were raised one half a cent to 2 1/2 cents a pound. Dried cherries from 2 to 6 cents per pound; milk from 2 1/2 to 6 1/2 cents a gallon; butter from 8 cents to 14 cents a pound; sheep from $2 to $3 a head; swine from 1-2 cent to 23-3-5 a pound; flax seed from 40 to 65 cents a bushel.

Vegetable rates are generally increased about 50 to 100 per cent; cattle from 11-2 cents and 21-2 and 3 cents a pound; hay from $1 to $3 a ton; straw from $1 to $1.50 a ton.

Rye and wheat remain the same at 15 cents and 42 cents a bushel respectively.

The all important sugar duty has been raised from 1.76 cents a pound to 2 cents against Cuba. Pig iron has been increased from 75 cents to $1.12-1-2 a ton.

Protests against the increases have been lodged at the state department by nearly every country in the world. The democrats and farm senators claim the tariff will ruin foreign trade. They have pointed repeatedly to threats of reprisals. They say other countries will raise their tariffs on our products so high the United States will lose its high export trade standard.

TEXAS WHEAT CROP FORECAST IS RELEASED

AUSTIN, June 13.—The Texas winter wheat crop will average ten and a half bushels to the acre and total 25,200,000 bushels, Carl H. Robinson, senior agricultural statistician for the federal government estimates in a crop report he released here today.

The yield last year averaged 15 bushels to the acre and it has averaged over 12 bushels for a ten year period.

Texas' rye production is estimated at 41,000 bushels, an average of nine bushels to the acre. Oats condition of June 1 was put at 65 per cent of normal compared with 70 per cent for last year, which is also the average percentage for 10 years. Barley was 55 per cent of normal compared with 72 per cent a year ago and 71 per cent for ten years average.

Excessive rains have damaged the Irish potato crop in the eastern part of the state and there is much complaint of rotting in the ground. The potato condition for the whole state was put at 70 per cent, four points lower than a month ago.

Time hay is in generally fair to good condition and rated at 75 per cent. Wild hay is rated at 81 per cent.

The peach crop is estimated at 900,000 bushels and pears at 323,000 bushels. Apples, suffering from a severe winter and heavy frost damage, were put at only 38 per cent of normal compared with 65 per cent a year ago.

Lorenzen Well Makes 10 Millions

MORAN, June 13.—Wm. Lorenzen, who drilled a deep test some time ago south of Pueblo, has drilled in a good gasser just north of the Lone Star gasoline plant on the new Moran-Cisco highway.

The well is on the McClelland property, located in section 466 S. P. R. R. survey, Eastland county.

The well is reported to be making 10,000,000 cubic feet of gas at the present time. The drillers have encountered two sands, the first at 3685 feet, which is making 4,000,000 feet. The first sand was 5 feet thick. It was saved and the hole drilled on down to the 3705 foot sand, where 6,000,000 feet more of gas was found.

These combined sands make a total production of 10,000,000 feet. As the Lone Star wells in that section are producing large amounts of gas from the 3800 foot sand, Mr. Lorenzen has saved the second sand and is now going on down to the deeper pay. He has passed the sand, which proved to be 18 feet thick. He intends to reduce the 8 inch casing at 3750 feet to 6 inches, with which he will drill to the 3800 foot level.

Holt and Pratt, of Fort Worth, have spudded in a well on the W. W. Knight place, and expect to be down to the shallow sand by the end of this week. Mr. Knight's place is located about 7 miles west of town, near other production.
