- 13. For brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another.

WEST TEXAS HELPING ITSELF.

Bankers and business men in the drouth stricken section of west Texas will receive today or tomorrow a letter which strongly sets forth conditions in the agricultural sections which have resulted from the recent drouth, together with the need of immediate action to relieve these conditions.

The following extract from the letter tells in plain language just what the situation with respect to need of relief is:

"John Doe is an average farmer residing on an average farm in an average drouth stricken community in West Texas. John has lived in this community practically all his life. He has an industrious wife and four small children. He knows no other craft or trade and is truly a disciple of that age-old creed of making an honest living by 'The sweat of his brow.'"

"It may be true that John's business judgment has not always been infallible and that, like all other classes of people, he has been led into the belief that he was entitled to the luxuries which he was not financially able to have. But John, after all, is one of those patriots who is trying to carry on the basic structure of his country, agriculture."

"On account of crop and price reverses, other unfavorable and depressing conditions during the past few years, and expense incurred through an endeavor to make a crop this year, John now owes his bank $350.00, which he cannot pay because of the extended drouth and the low price of farm products."

"John's four horses, three milk cows, two meat hogs, farm implements, and 1930 crops are mortgaged to his bank to secure and enforce the payment of said $350.00. He has a scant supply of feed, no seed to plant another year, and has sold the most of his chickens and his two calves to enable him to buy the actual necessities of life; he cannot send his children to school on account of not being able to clothe them properly. He is willing and anxious to work for a mere pittance but he can nowhere find employment."

"The future looks dark to John. He knows his banker cannot continue lending him money; he knows his merchant cannot sell him goods on credit; he cannot sell his chattels for enough cash to pay his bank, and he doesn't want to become an object of charity. He wants to respect the laws of his country and he wants an honest chance to pay his just debts. There is no false pride in John, but he is facing a condition that is chaotic and distressing; he doesn't want to beg help of his more fortunate neighbor, but pleads for some chance to make his own way."

"Mr. Banker, what are you going to do about John? 'He is not looking to you exactly as his savior, but you know that he confides in you. He has been your customer and friend during good years and bad ones. He has come to you before in his hours of joy and in times of trouble; he has never misled you. Now he is asking you 'What am I to do?'"

"You may take John's four horses, 3 milk cows, 2 meat hogs, and implements; thereby severing your business relations with him. When you have done so, what gain have you made? You will have converted a more or less undesirable note into chattels that entail an expense account; you have thrown John out with a tainted resolution and broken morale."

"This is not an appeal to your sympathy, but you are facing a question that MUST be answered, a business proposition that cannot be side-stepped! You cannot 'pass the buck.'"

"In the light of good banking practice and as the trusted custodian of your depositor's money, you cannot say, 'John, I will renew your $350.00 note until Oct. 1, 1931, and will loan you $200.00 more with which to make a crop next year.' You cannot say this to John notwithstanding the fact that he is a good moral risk and that you believe in him."

"At the desk and in the lobby of every country bank in the drouth stricken area of West Texas there stands today a long waiting and patient line of John Does, hopeful yet discouraged, expectant though unanswered, anxiously wondering, planning and thinking, trying to determine how they can carry on, maintain their integrity, and be financed in an effort to make another crop."

"Shall the bankers of this unfortunate section, hoping to get some relief from congress, sit idly by and wait for it to convene in December? It is unthinkable that we delay any definite action until the faith of those John Does is entirely gone; until after John has in despair, sold all of his possessions; until, finding no other alternative, he has joined the ever increasing army of thieves and hi-jackers in order that his family may be fed."

"Aside from the financial aspect of the situation, the social structure of our farm life is at stake. This warrants the conclusion that a serious condition exists, demanding the thought and leadership of our most capable citizens. This is no time to discuss what ought to be done, what can or should be done, but a time TO DO WHAT MUST BE DONE."

The bankers and business men who are fostering this move are not asking that the state give relief but that the legislature make it possible for the affected counties to help themselves. Under the plan developed by them each county would determine just what will be needed to take care of their local conditions, would issue warrants for this fund and sell them to the state at a low rate of interest. Loans would then be more to the farmers in the amounts needed and these loans would be secured by superior crop liens.

The only action asked of the state legislature, a special session of which is requested, is that the body validate the county action by appropriating sufficient money to purchase the warrants.

Surely this is a feasible plan and one that should command the interest and sympathy of the state administration and legislative body. West Texas is simply asking that it be allowed to help itself.

OTHER OPINIONS

QUESTIONNAIRE

A questionnaire is being directed to the newspapers of the country relative to the attitude on the prohibition question. The findings will be made public later in the form of a monograph analyzing the replies received. This publication is planned as one of a series, for the issuance of which the bureau will draw upon a $50,000 appropriation which congress made for conducting an educational campaign in favor of the dry laws.

Some of the editors will vote wet, some will suggest repeal or modification, but the majority will continue friendly to prohibition. It has reduced drinking. It has brought about prosperity. It has eased the depression which has come on the country because the dollars that formerly went from the working man for drink have been saved for the channels of legitimate business.

And as for an educational campaign one needs not go farther than Temple, where the Temple Trust company, with money loaned on homes in this city, advertises against liquor in one of the most effective and legal arguments that any one could issue. It says:

There is no deadlier foe to prosperity than liquor. The man, company or corporation knowing the facts and failing to lift voice and vote against this deadly destroying foe is sacrificing principle and prosperity to expediency.

Every bank, life insurance company, hospital, trust company, building and loan association, financial institution, lawyer and doctor in the land knows what liquor drinking does and always has done to men, homes and prosperity.

The drinker is frowned upon by the life insurance companies. They won't insure his life, if they know his habit. He does without life insurance and leaves a home to be sacrificed for debt, a widow to drudge out life and children to become dependents on charity or the state.

The wells of our orphanages are bursting out with their inmates and multitudes of hungry and cold little children are clamoring to get in. THERE IS NO ROOM IN 85 per cent of the cases liquor did it.

Railroad companies will not employ a liquor drinker if they know it.

Banks peremptorily dismise the drinker when his habit is discovered and refuses to carry the paper of a drunkard. Reputable mortgage companies will no longer lend money for any purpose to a liquor drinker, irrespective of his security. They have learned the danger of having a broken family and a piece of property on their hands.

First class manufacturers will hire no skilled labor for its high grade work, if the laborer drinks. No merchant wants a tipsing clerk; no lawyer a boozing assistant; no honorable doctor wants a drinking young partner. No surgeon of renown wants to trust his knife or his anesthesia to an alcohol infected hand and brain and none do it long at a time.

The day has come when the public does not have to, hence, will not trust its business, money, health or life to men and institutions run by liquor drinkers.

No worthwhile girl ought to be willing to trust her body and soul and future children to a booze fighter.

These statements are facts. Ask your preacher, or lawyer or doctor or banker or surgeon. Open your eyes and study your own town and its homes. Liquor destroys property because it destroys character and wastes money.

Young men and women must want homes and borrow money to buy or build. Young men and women must rear healthy, Christian families and save money and invest it. Borrowers and investors are both essential.

Liquor drinkers are dangerous risks as borrowers and very few liquor drinkers have any money to invest. Hence, our economic, interest in an honest, sober, sane and thrifty citizenship.

An individual, company, or corporation advertising like that in every town would solve the problem of educating the public to the values of prohibition and make the wall of the wetts and the efforts of the bootleggers weak indeed. -San Angelo Standard-Times.

Did You Ever Stop to Think? By EDSON E. WAITE Shawnee, Oklahoma.

Frederick B. Patterson, president of the National Cash Register Company, says:

"Business always is looking for the unusual man—the man who does the unusual thing under unusual circumstances. It is not so difficult to pick a man who stands out in the crowd. In the course of a changing condition business needs men who have been thinking in terms of precisely such situations as we face at this moment. Successful business is a question of having thinking men at the helm."

"The unusual man in good times, is far ahead. He observes the trend of things the world over. He is both a student of men and a student of conditions. I do not mean that he should have been able to put his finger exactly on the date when the pendulum began to swing away from our accustomed prosperous conditions. But he should know that things were in a course of change, and in good times he was building a structure that could weather the winds of adversity that blow in so-called bad times."

"Business men want men of this calibre—creators of principles that will fit the new order. And it is not so easy to find men of this type, because humanity, after all, follows along pretty much the same course of thinking in commerce and industry. In days of prosperity it takes as level headed a man to keep the ship of trade on an even keel as it does to ride out a storm of depression. This seems to be a pretty hard lesson to learn, but until we learn it we shall go on meeting new world conditions by applying old principles and methods. The unusual man will be able to match his wits against constantly changing conditions and keep himself poised and balanced."

BEGIN HERE TODAY
Adventure enters the life of Celia Mitchell, 17, when she learns that her father has supposed dead and she is wealthy. She leaves her unpretentious home in Baltimore to live in New York with her mother, John Mitchell, and her aunt, Mrs. Parsons.

Temporary obstacles often increased a man's ardor. Hadn't she played that game frequently? She moved to her dressing table and began working with cosmetics as she framed a course of action. In a few moments traces of the tempestuous outburst had been removed. A subtle touch of eye-shadow made her eyes more brilliant and gave them a hint of wistfulness. She drew fresh lips with a stick of carmine, dusted her face and shoulders with fragrant powder. Under lamplight these restoratives would pass unnoticed.

The action soothed Evelyn as nothing else could have done. When she had finished she surveyed herself with satisfaction. Like other vain women Evelyn Parsons felt fortified by her beauty and thought no man could resist it.

She would make Mitchell ask her to marry him tomorrow. Oh, how she could do that! It had been exasperating to have the goal within reach and then rudely snatched away, but there would be no such slip tomorrow.

Back in Evelyn Parsons' mind was the thought that Celia would pay for this interference. Anyone who interfered with the widow's plans was quite likely to pay.

She was singing softly the refrain of an English ballad as she returned to the room. It was a song Evelyn had heard Mitchell say he was fond of.

"Milda, bring something cool to drink," she said. "I thought it would be refreshing."

"Isn't Evelyn the perfect hostess, father?" Celia said. "She never forgets anything."

"You're quite right," Mitchell agreed. His eyes swept Mrs. Parsons as she sat gracefully into a wicker chair. She had chosen a seat where the path of light from the living room touched her hair and made it a golden halo.

The maid appeared bearing a tray of tall glasses and pitcher in which ice clinked invitingly. She served the beverage, then withdrew.

"You don't know how often I think of this porch afternoons and evenings when I'm in town," Mitchell spoke up. "It's a great place you've got here, Evelyn."

"Celia and I live out here. Don't we, dear?"

"Almost. Here and in the garden."

"A man's a fool to tie himself down in a city all his life!" John Mitchell said this as though he were arguing with himself. He balanced his agless absent-mindedly and the fragile crystal was in imminent peril. He remembered just in time.

"I don't think you ought to stay in town during this hot weather," Celia said firmly.

"Oh—utterly impossible to get away now. Besides, see how I impose on Mrs. Parsons' hospitality!"

from where his voice came. Mitchell stood in the pathway through the hedge. His hands were on his hips. He might have been watching her for some time.

Her face, red from exertion, colored more darkly.

"I didn't see you," she said. "Good morning. I'm afraid I'll never learn how to serve!"

"You don't throw the ball high enough," Mitchell repeated. He walked out to where she stood, took the racket and ball in his hands. "Here—like this!"

The white sphere cut sharply across the net to the opposite corner of the court.

"Perfect!" cried Celia.

"I haven't had a tennis racket in my hands for years," her father said, looking down at the object. "Getting too old for the game."

"Not when you can serve a ball like that! Oh, I wish I could make them spin that way! Mine won't even go over the net."

"Have you got another racket?"

"There are some in the house. Wait—I'll be back in two minutes!" Celia turned and sped down the pathway. In a short time she was back, breathless and eye shining. She carried three tennis rackets.

"Help yourself," Celia urged. Mitchell tried them, selected one and walked to the opposite side of the net. He had already put aside his coat and hat. For some time he returned balls and called out suggestions as Celia practiced.

Later they were opponents in a game. It ended in the man's favor. They played a second, which Celia won, and then her father demanded time out for rest.

The girl's embarrassment was gone. She asked questions, tried to correct faults Mitchell criticized. "You'll get along all right," he assured her. "It comes with practice."

Celia brushed her hair back impatiently. In her short white dress and heelless slippers she looked a child. Sunshine had turned her face and arms a ruddy tan.

A low exclamation came from John Mitchell.

"Completely forgot!" he said emphatically. "Sorry, Celia. I brought a letter down for you yesterday and forgot to give it to you. Now where did I put that—"

He began to search his pockets.

spring at his own request, he was assigned for duty as an infantry officer with the 318th Regiment, 80th Division.

Saw Plenty of Action
The division went overseas in May of 1918 and was not long in seeing into action. In command of the second platoon of K Company in the 318th Regiment, Schoble took part in the second Somme offensive and in the St. Mihiel and Argonne offensives.

It was on October 5, 1918, that Schoble received the injuries that cost him his sight. Leading his platoon in a divisional attack on the Bois d'Orons, before Battice, he was painfully wounded when a high explosive shell burst close to him, a fragment of the shell passing completely thru his head. Despite his injury, he maintained consciousness long enough to see to it that command of his platoon was properly passed to a sergeant; only when this had been done would he consent to be taken back for medical attention.

Then came long and painful months in various military hospitals. His left eye had been torn out, and the doctors had to reconstruct most of the left side of his face. For a time it was hoped that he could keep the use of his other eye, but the optic nerve became infected and it finally went blind.

In the spring of 1920 Schoble was finally discharged from the army with the rank of first lieutenant and released from the hospital. Instantly he plunged into his work for the blinded war veterans and in 1922 he decided to return to the university to complete his education.

Many honors have been given Schoble for his war record. In 1921 when Marshal Foch visited Philadelphia, the famous French soldier went out of his way to pay special tribute to the blinded Pennsylvanian, and later General Pershing paid a similar tribute to him at a big Legion convale.

Nearly Killed in Auto Accident
Incidentally, Schoble came back from the war only to run into another narrow escape from death in peace time. Several years ago the automobile in which he was riding near Philadelphia, driven by his brother, was wrecked and for several days Schoble's recovery was believed doubtful. He fought his way back to health, however, and went on with his work.

Today Schoble is head of an insurance business in Philadelphia. He is honorary member No. 1 of the Penn Athletic club, and lives in Wyncoke, Pa. He is a member of the Presbyterian church.

IMPORTANT CITY TAKEN BY REBEL ARMY

RIO GRANDE DO SUL, Brazil, Oct. 20.—The capture of the important town of Itarare, on the Sao Paulo frontier, was reported today in messages to Revolutionary headquarters.

The advance troops of the rebel army marching northward on Sao Paulo and Rio de Janeiro took the town after a sharp battle in which government forces were routed, the advices said.

The insurgent troops captured much war material and many prisoners in fighting near Itarare, it was reported. Meanwhile, federal aviators flying over rebel territory from Sao Paulo rained bombs on the railway station at Jacuaruaya, an important transportation point in Parana state some 50 miles south of the Sao Paulo border. The bombing raid failed to do much damage.

The capture of Itarare, as reported here, would strike a severe blow at the defense of Sao Paulo and be an important victory for rebel troops in their most difficult and most vital campaign to capture Sao Paulo and the capital. Itarare is located on the Sao Paulo-Parana border, about 100 miles from the coast. It is a railroad center and Federal troops have been concentrating there recently, having turned back several rebel attacks.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Oct. 20.—A Federal victory over rebel troops at Cambuquira, state of Minas Geraes, was announced today in a communique issued by the ministry of justice.

There were a number of insurgent casualties, the communique said, although there were no federal losses.

The government reported the situation in other Brazilian states "unalarmed" today.

STUDENTS TO HEAR INDIANS IN PROGRAM

Millie Durgan, who was captured by Kiowa Indians at a point near Newcastle, Texas in 1884, when she was only 13 months of age, will appear at the Cisco high school Wednesday at 8:45 a. m. it has been announced by R. N. Chick, superintendent. Now 68 years of age, Millie Durgan is known as Mrs. Sain-toh-Oodie Goombi and it was only three weeks ago that she learned of her real identity. Mrs. Goombi comes here with a group of Indians who are traveling under the direction of Harry A. Stroud, manager of the Lawton, Oklahoma chamber of commerce.

Mrs. Goombi, who cannot speak English, will be accompanied by her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. George Hunt. Mr. Hunt will act as interpreter and Mrs. Hunt will assist in singing when Kiowa songs are presented.

Other features of the entertainment will consist of piano and voice numbers by two beautiful Comanche girls dressed in buckskin costumes. One of the young ladies presents songs interpreted into the sign language which is said to be most interesting and attractive. Charles Tsoodle, champion war dancer of the Kiowa tribe will give an exhibition of various dances to the accompaniment of tom-toms.

Mrs. Goombi's life story will be told in three parts. Mr. Stroud, who uncovered the details of her capture and her life, will tell how the story was discovered and checked in every detail. Mr. Hunt will give some side-lights on the woman's life and the story will be climaxed with her own version which will be presented through the interpreter.

Her life is filled with romance, drama and perhaps tragedy. She saw the last of the great Buffalo herds and was with the Indians when they were driven into the fastness of the mountains in their final hours of freedom. She saw the conquest of the white man triumph and finally the end of Indian freedom.

Not only are all children in the public schools urged to attend this program because of its educational value but patrons will find it extremely interesting.

The program will be free. Mr. Chick said. Students of both the high school and of various grades will attend.

A THREE DAYS' COUGH IS YOUR DANGER SIGNAL

Coughs from colds may lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a medical discovery with two-fold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Of all known drugs creosote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for coughs from colds and bronchial irritations. Creomulsion is guaranteed effective in the treatment of coughs, colds, bronchitis and minor forms of bronchial irritations, and is especially for building up the system after flu or flu. Money refunded if not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist.

BOY SCOUTS START DRIVE FOR COUNCIL

Under the leadership of W. W. Wallace, Cisco is now engaged in a campaign to raise its quota for the support of the Oil Belt council of the Boy Scouts. Eastland and other cities in the council have already made their campaigns for this purpose. The work which the council is doing in the interest of the boy life of this section was demonstrated clearly at a recent "circus" presented at the high school auditorium.

At the conclusion of this article is a blank for voluntary council membership application which the Daily News is printing as a contribution to the campaign in line with the policy to help along all worthy movements for the good of Cisco. It will save the local committee of busy business men much time and effort if those who wish to contribute to the support of the council will fill in the blank and send it to Mr. Wallace or other members of the committee here.

The following editorial by A. V. Napier in the Verde Copper News, Jerome, Arizona, clearly sets forth the reasons why the Boy Scout organization should be given the whole-hearted support of the press and public.

Why Mention the Boy Scouts?

"Why do you give so much space to the Boy Scouts?"

He had contributed a lengthy article on a moral subject of considerable general interest and it had not been used in the Verde Copper News. He thought we should have held out the Scout news to publish his article. The editor would like to print everything that everybody wants printed, but with limited space, someone has to exercise his best judgment in the selection of matter, so the editor just does the best he can in selecting his own matter.

"The Boy Scouts are just a bunch of kids," the author above mentioned said. "Nobody cares about what they do."

But the editor has never seen a Boy Scout drunk nor in jail. The only time we ever saw a Boy Scout in police court was when the boy gave testimony against a hit-and-run driver.

The editor lived with Boy Scouts for several years. If he wanted to hire a boy for any responsible position he would insist on his being a Boy Scout.

Scouting builds into a boy's make-up strong fibres of character. It makes him staunch of heart and strong of mind. It has proven itself to be a builder of true manhood. Every Boy Scout is an influence for good when he lives. Every Scout organization helps to encourage and preserve the lessons of clean living, of manly courage, of industry and thrift, of the obligation of helpfulness to those needing help, and of all the things that make for right living.

Scouting makes real Americans out of thoughtless youths. If every boy in America were a member, our country soon would have the finest citizenship in the world. If every boy in the United States were a Scout there would be few if any gangsters and gun men at the end of twenty years. If all the boys were Scouts there would be no need for any newspaper to publish lengthy articles regarding the nation's morale.

But Scouts have other training besides moral development. They are trained in life saving. In the Florida disaster last year Boy Scouts saved hundreds of lives. They are active not only in time of disaster, but in every day life. They are taught first how to take care of themselves. They are then taught how to take care of others. The Boy Scout motto: "Be Prepared" is, if applied to life in general, the greatest possible factor in success.

We might leave out the editorials to make room for contributions which patrons desire printed, or we might, just might, mind you, curtail the advertising matter to make room for something else, but so long as this editor has any voice in the matter the Boy Scouts can have any thing within the bounds of reason.
