BROOMS SHOULD NOT TOUCH CLOSET FLOORS

Proper Manner for Hanging Brooms.

Time and bother are saved if the cleaning tools and materials are kept together in a convenient place, preferably a special closet located where it can be quickly reached from all over the house. If possible, it is well to have on each floor a supply of some of the things most constantly used. As far as possible, cleaning tools should be put away clean and ready

Brooms, brushes and meps should be hung by strings or screw eyes fastened to the handles so that the weight does not rest on the straws, bristles or strings. Another very good arrangement for keeping brooms and mops off the floor is shown in the illustration. The picture was taken by the United States Department of Agriculture at a Virginia farm house, and shows one of the details of a kitchen improved at the suggestion of the extension agent. The back porch or entry is a good place in many homes for keeping these tools together, and at the same time out of the way and as far as possible from where food preparation is coing on.

Carpet sweepers also should be lint which accumulate in brushes, escoarse comb or old scissors. Corn strings.

(Prepared by the United States Department | brooms may be washed in hot soap-of Agriculture.) suds, but care must be taken not to let the water rust the wires which hold the straws to the handle.

Bristle brushes may be washed with lukewarm water and a little ammonia (three teaspoonfuls dilute ammonia to the quart) or borax (one teaspoonful to the quart) and then rinsed in clear water. Water is likely to injure the back of a brush and to loosen the cement by which the bristles are held in place in the less expensive makes The brush should, therefore, not be covered with water, but should be washed by sousing the bristles back and forth in shallow water; it should be dried with the bristles down or with the weight resting on the side of the brush. The drying should be done quickly, but not in an intense heat Drying in sunshine whitens light bristles. The weighted bristle brush used in polishing floors should be washed occasionally to prevent the accumulation of dirt and wax from darkening the wood.

Mops may be washed in hot suds and rinsed in clear, hot water; they should be quickly dried. Dry mops may be oiled by pouring a few drops of light lubricating oil or any good turned so that the weight does not floor oil into an old dish or a tin box come on the brushes. Making Fishballs With White Cornmeal Mush

The United States Department of Agriculture suggests the possibility of substituting white cornmeal mush for potato in making fishballs. When made by the following recipe the result compares favorably with those made with potato. They are prepared more easily and quickly.

Cornmeal Fishballs.

2 cupfuls cold white 1 egg cornmeal mush 1 tablespoonful cupful shredded butter

Pick over the codfish and soak it to remove salt, if necessary. Combine found in the homes of the well-to-do, the ingredients and drop by spoonfuls and well-nourished children in families into hot fat. Drain on porous paper, The mush must be as dry as possible. This makes 12 fishballs.

On the second morning after Dinsdale's exhibition of marksmanship Scissors jumped from his couch and announced:

"Something will happen today. I feel it. The waiting is ended. I am wakan witshasha, and I know the waiting will be ended today. Get up and be ready for whatever happens. We have much to do."

Dinsdale sprang to his feet, crying: "Show me something to do. It seems as if I had been in this cursed place a million years. What shall I

"First, eat your breakfast. The girl Is bringing it now. I must see Sorrel Horse and finish our trade."

"How do you happen to know so much about Injuns?" curiously asked Dinsdale after the girl had placed the food on a robe and had departed.

"Played with Sioux boys when I was a boy. After I became wakan I forgot per." lots of things, but what I learned about Indians seems to have remained with me. Sometimes I find myself singing some of their old songs, songs I hadn't thought of for years."

They made short work of the meal. and Scissors said: "Stick by the lodge. I'll finish my talk with Sorrel Horse very quick.'

"And you said there was work to do," grumbled Dinsdale,

"We've spent our last night here if we're ever to see Deadwood City again," assured Scissors. At these words Dinsdale became nervously alert and eager.

The inmates of the village no longer avoided Scissors, or pretended not to see him; but he knew there was only dale. one man in the village who did not wish to see him writhing under the Ogalala knives. He walked aimlessly among the lodges and approached the lodge of Sorrel Horse in a casual manner. On reaching it Scissors haltmedicine bag to the medicine pole outside the entrance.

"It is time," mumbled Sorrel Horse without looking at the white man. "The ponies are ready. Two Knives Talking will pay for them now?"

"He comes to pay. But the mcdlcine will not work until he has reached the ponies.' Sorrel Horse led him into the lodge and dropped the flap, and said:

"The young white man will be very sick when you go back to him He Two Knives Talking will stay by him break jugs on the open place outside the village. All the Ogalala will want me what you've been up to." to see the new medicine. While they watch, the white men will go among south where they will find ponies hobbled and feeding. Two guns are there and a bundle of dried meat. Now will the white man pay?"

And he pointed to an array of jugs and several kettles filled with water.

Scissors picked up a jug and found It filled to within a few inches of the mouth. He examined the stopper to make sure it would exclude all air and then handed it to Sorrel Horse and told him to cork the jug and break it by striking the stopper with his fist. killing the white man's medicine. But structions and was much cast down when nothing happened

"It is because you have no medicine of your own," explained Scissors. "Now I will give you a medicine."

And he removed the stopper and the four winds. Then with a mug he the jug to overflowing and gently inserted the end of the stopper until it stood upright.

"Now strike," he commanded.

Sorrel Horse obeyed, and this time the hydraulic pressure rewarded his he tells it to do!" joyously shouted efforts and brought a glare of triumph to his eyes. His chest expanded and he softly boasted: "They say he will have a new name.

They say he can break jugs." Scissors eyed him suspiciously and pulled forward another jug, only half full, and releasing the stopper curtly directed:

"Break that jug."

Sorrel Horse confidently struck the stopper and the jug remained intact. As the medicine man hung his head in bitter sappointment Scissors told

"I have taken the medicine away rom you so you will know it is my medicine and will not work if I do not give the vedicine back to you. Bring water and fill this broken jug."

As he spoke he fitted the two pieces with trembling hands lifted a kettle tug could hold no more Scissors revealed the climax of the medicine by teaching the medicine man how to work gently in inserting the stopper deep enough to remain in place and yet to prevent any air pressure on the mouth; only he said nothing about pressure, as the Indian would not have understood. Sorrel Horse simply understood the manipulation of the stopper was the wakan way of doing Had he been told to plug the jug while one hand was held high above his head his faith would have been as great and the mystery no more profound

"Now lift it by the handle," said Scissors.

The hand of Sorrel Horse shook convulsively and he could scarcely grip greatest mystery he had ever attempt- and sickly. ed. To have Tunkan break a jug in passed his wildest dreams of wizard- They won't be satisfied until they've ry. Even Sitting Bull, himself, could not do it.

He lifted on the handle and the jug rose from the ground and remained in- hopefully. tact. The medicine man stood holding it, his small eyes protruding, his breath coming in gasps and the sweat oozing from his copper forehead as he felt the close presence of the gods. Scissors explained the wakan way was level spot. Under his directions the medicine man lowered the jug to the ground.

Scissors took his paper and scissors and cut out two ponies, each having a white rider, and laid the pictures

"Now if your heart is clean, now if you will do as you have said by the white men, Tunkan will hear you. Break the jug by taking out the stop-

Of course the jug collapsed and the water escaped once the plug was removed. Scissors advised:

"Have the little water-girl help you hold the jug when you fill it. Be sure it stands on a level place. If a jug breaks in more than two pieces do not try to fill it. Such a jug is weak and does not piease Tunkan. Two Knives Talking goes to look after his sick brother."

Dinsdale was nervously walking about the lodge, snapping his fingers, his flushed face betraying his highly strung nerves. He was surprised to have Scissors abruptly command:

"Lie down and be sick." "What the devil!" exploded Dins-

"You have eaten too much meat and wild cherries. You are very sick. Lie down."

"You're crazy."

"You must pretend to be sick," Scissors elucidated. "Sorrel Horse will ed to watch Sorrel Horse go through show his medicine to the village this his morning custom of hanging his afternoon. We cannot be there. One white man sick; one white man watching over him."

"We're lighting out this afternoon?" hoarsely whispered Dinsdale, clutching Scissors' hand and hurting it. "Why couldn't you say that at the start?"

"I say it now. Some time this afternoon. I would like to wait until evening, but I do not dare. I am wakan, and I can hear the pounding of a pony's hoofs. Some one is riding to this village."

"Darned if I know when to take will be sick from eating too much meat. you seriously," muttered Dinsdale. Darting back to the lodge he pulled to make him well. He cannot leave things next. But if I'm sick, here his sick brother to watch Shunca-luta goes." And he flopped down on the robes. "Now while I suffer please tell

"Refore I spend time talking the village must know you're sick," said the bluffs and follow the pony trail Scissors. He ran out the lodge and called to one of the akacita and asked that the roots of sage and wild licorice be brought him so he might sing and said: the bear song over his sick friend and cure him.

The roots were quickly brought, pre sumably obtained from the medicine bag of Sorrel Horse; and word was spread throughout the village that one of the prisoners was ill. There were those who declared that Sorrel Horse was recovering his medicine and was Sorrel Horse nervously followed in when it was understood that Scissors was using licorice, the medicine the bear digs up, and was singing the bear song there was much doubt as to the efficacy of Sorrel Horse's magic.

Then to increase the tension Sorrel Horse instructed the akacita to anpointed it to the earth, the sky and nounce to all the lodges that after the sun started down the west he dipped water from a kettle and filled would break a jug on the river slope and prove that he was a favorite of the stone god and that Tunkan still flap. worked through him.

Crazy Horse was infected by the excitement and called at the prisoner's lodge after having a talk with Sorrel on the slope began yelling loudly. Dinsit was to behold Dinsdale, eyes closed. tossing his head from side to side and mumbling incoherently. Scissors sat beside him and fanned him with a fan of eagle feathers, and as he swung the feathers he softly sang the bear

"The young man is sick?" asked Crazy Horse. "He is very sick, but I shall make him well after two sleeps," replied

Scissors. "Shunca-luta breaks a jug after the sun crosses Mato Tipi." "He talks like an old woman, He cannot break jugs," scoffed Scissors. "After he tries and falls, and covers together, the cleavage being clean, and his head with his blanket, and is hidheld them in place while Sorrel Horse ing in his lodge, let Tashunca-uitco remember what the white man told and poured in the water. When the him."

skepticism Crazy Horse withdrew.

To add to the tremendous excitement caused by the medicine man's avowal three young men rode into the village shortly after the noon hour, returning from a scout between the Grand and Heart rivers. They brought with them horrible trophies in the shape of human hands and feet tied to their lances. Their arrival was greeted with the firing of guns and much yelling and howling. The three ponies wore feathers in their tails and manes to show they had ably abetted their masters. The lances were passed over to the squaws to dance before being struck up before the Strong Heart lodge to which the scouts belonged.

Alarmed by the noise Scissors his fingers about the handle. He was stepped outside to investigate. Soon on the threshold of conquering the he was back, his face looking pale

"Some poor devil of a soldier who his hands had been astounding. But strayed and got lost, or who wandered to be permitted by the stone god to off hunting," he told Dinsdale. "Butchbreak a jug and then fill it with water ered. The village is crazy, It makes and then to break it a second time sur- it bad for us. They've tasted blood. wiped as out."

"If there was one soldier there must be more behind him," said Dinsdale

"He was a soldier. They brought in enough of his clothes to prove that. Crazy Horse is in his lodge trying to figure out how many more there may be, and where they may be. I believe it means General Crook has struck the always to place the jug on a smooth, Little Missouri, or even the head of the Heart. I knew something would happen today. It's lucky for us that the scouts saw nothing of Crazy Horse's messengers to the Short Medicine Pole hills. But they'll be coming back any time now. When things beon the ground and solemnly directed; gin to break they come with a rush."

It was some time before the village quieted down sufficiently for public interest to revert to Sorrel Horse and his boast. The medicine man, when he could gain a hearing, proudly proclaimed it was his new medicine that had enabled the young warriors to make their kill. The young girl who brought in their dinner was too overcome with excitement to answer any questions. At first Dinsdale refused to eat, but Scissors insisted until he swallowed some meat. Scissors would not let him leave the couch for fear some curious savage would spy on them and discover the truth.

After the shouting and dancing had ceased, the akacita began parading through the village and crying "Shunca-luta will make a new medicine, they say. Hiyu po! (Come on!) Hiyu po!"

As the camp police passed a lodge it-was a signal for the inmates to come out and fall in behind them. Crazy Horse took his place and as the procession reached the prisoners' lodge he halted and looked inside and asked Scissors to come and witness the new medicine.

Continuing to fan Dinsdale, the picture man ceased his chanting long enough to reply. "He has had an evil dream. The ghosts are fooling him. My white brother needs the bear

And he pointed down to the patient, who groaned and tossed about. The akacita went their way, calling on all the people to follow and do Sorrel Horse due honor; the two lines of eager spectators, including Crazy Horse, made for the grassy slope.

Scissors watched their departure through the opening, and then made sure the adjacent lodges were empty. "You'll get me to hearing and seeing away the bundles of antelope skins and made a peep hole with his scissors. Only two lodges stood between them and the bluffs, and neither showed any signs of life

"Now we are ready," he whispered to Dinsdale.

Dinsdale came to his feet and started for the opening, but Scissors drew him back and closed the flap,

"Out the back end will be better." He dropped on his knees and had pulled a hide to one side when both were startled at the sound of a step by the entrance. Snatching up a kettle left by the girl he motioned for Dinsdale to gain the couch. But before Dinsdale could get in proper position the flap was pushed back and one of the akacita stuck in his head. He had noted the cessation of the sick man's moaning. He blinked his eyes to get rid of the sunlight and beheld Dinsdale stealing toward the couch. He opened his mouth to emit a yell, when the kettle struck him on the back of the head, smashing the skull. As the man fell forward on his face, half inside the lodge, Dinsdale seized his shoulders and dragged him completely in, and Scissors dropped the

"Now we must go, no matter how many are outside," muttered Scissors. They crawled under the back flap and bending low, ran by the two lodges and began ascending a dry gully. They reached the pine growth on top of the bluffs just as the Indians Horse. When he stuck his head inside | dale believed Sorrel Horse had succeeded with his jug medicine. Scissors insisted the medicine man could not reach the climax so soon, even if he forgot the warning that the medicine would not work unless the prisoners had time to reach the ponies. "Some one must have returned to the village and discovered the dead guard. Probably a couple of them left to watch us," he nervously explained.

They scrambled up another terrace and came to a faint trail running to the south. From the elevation, also heavily wooded, they could look down proved by the Indians on the slope. The entire mass was dancing and shouting wildly, and waving arms.

Plainly disconcerted by this bold | rivals, a small band of warriors. All | chaser demanded more information as these except the leader had dismounted. As Scissors stared at the mounted warrior he cried:

"American Horse! American Horse has returned. Look! He's pointing to the north, and brandishing his rifle. Now they're breaking to run back to the lodges. By heavens! The ponies are being brought up! It can mean only on; thing! Crook's soldiers have reached the head of Heart river. Crazy Horse goes to stop him from making the Black hills. They don't even wait for Shunca-luta to prove his medicine! Here's the trail! Now let's see your heels!" *

The loud outcry at the north end of the street, quickly swollen to a deafening chorus of yells and punctuated by a rapid discharge of hand guns, caused more than one citizen of Deadwood City to fear that Crazy Horse and Sitting Bull were making good their threats and were sweeping into town at the head of their copper-colored hordes. But as the clamor reached Kitty the Schemer's place, swept on by Keno Frank's gambling hall, and was added to by those in front of San Juan Joe's big tent, it took on a rude rhythm and at intervals burst into a reassuring staccato of wild cheering. Then the tents and buildings farther south, knew something momentous had happened, but that no danger was imminent.

The soldiers are coming! The soldiers are coming!" shrieked a woman from the second-story window of a store and tenement structure. This was accepted as the truth for a minute, as the woman's coign of vantage was much superior to those milling around in the street.

"No soldiers! Two men!" howled a boy from the top of a pine.

Then a solid mass of exclamatory humanity came into the view, swallowing disorganized groups as fast as reaching them, and only the ill re-

With the yell of an Apache San Juan dropped his rifle and ran forward to shake hands with the two men. Old Pyrites was another who fought his way through the mob to add congratulations.

The procession came to a halt, for the street ahead was filling with men and women and children. A man with mighty lungs climbed to the top of a freight wagon and bellowed:

"Pete Dinsdale and Scissors who we all reckoned had cashed in, escaped from the Injuns and have came back. They say Crook and his soldiers are on Heart river, that it's a race between him and Crazy Horse to see whether white or red gits here first. Sitting Bull is expected to Join 'em with five thousand bucks. Our two citizens were chased from Slim Butte to the Belle Fourche by a small band of Ogalala. They killed their horses in the race and came the rest of the way on foot. Three cheers and a tiger !"

The cheers were given; more guns were discharged. Mayor Farnum made his way to the escaped prisoners and shook each by the hand.

"We supposed you were dead," he said. "All the credit for our being alive belongs to Scissors," said Dinsdale.

"He knows more about Injuns than Crazy Horse does." "I'm wakan," spoke up Scissors.

'Used to play in a Sioux village years ago. What I did was nothing. But if Crook doesn't make this gulch ahead of the Ogalala you want to prepare for a lot of trouble." "Make room so they can get in somewhere and rest," cried San Juan. Still cheering, but not so boisterously now that Scissors had given his warning, the crowd parted and the gambler led the two men into the tent and toward the hidden entrance of his house. But Scissors at once responded to his environment and with paper and scissors ready began searching for customers. It seemed to Dinsdale that a mask had dropped over Scissors' face the minute he got back among the tables; and never did he de such a trade as now. Instead of profiles he cut out on the village and the slope. That lodges and poples and other bits of their escape was now known was | Indian village life. These were eagerly snapped up as souvenirs by men who did not know whether they were to be victims of Teton cruelty, or live Then Scissors made out some new see to welcome Crock. And each pr

San Juan Joe conducted Dinsdale to the rear room, and after sending a boy for a tray of drinks and making sure his guest was comfortably seated he exclaimed: "Well, this knocks me! Can't make

"To h-l with Jim Omaha! Haven't seen anyone that could be him. Give me the yarn."

Dinsdale told of his meeting the man Easy and winning his money: how he and Scissors ran away from Easy's gang only to fall into the hands of the Indians at Bear butte. After sketching his experience among the Indians he dolefully added: "And that little pleasure trip cost me four thousand dollars and leaves me without even a grubstake."

"Four thousand is nothing," scoffed San Juan. "There is a big game waiting for you. A very big game. You didn't lose your nerve at Slim butte?"

"Not my gun nerve," grimly retorted Dinsdale. "And what I want first of all is two Colt forty-fours. I brought a new Winchester forty-four from the Butte. But I feel undressed without my hand-guns."

"You shall buy as good a brace as there is in Deadwood City. That means, as good as any in the world. You did mighty well to pull old Scissors out of the fire."

"Now get this right. He pulled me out. Sabe? He's an entirely different man among Injuns. I believe he's Infunized until he's more red than white. Not only knows their lingo like a book but he knows their different songs and secret societies. He says he used to live near one of their big villages and played with red youngsters when he was a boy. That was before his mind went back on him. In here he's halfwitted. Matching wits against Sorrel Horse, the medicine man, he's as smart as a Yankee peddler."

"I knew from pictures he cut out that he knew a lot about their village life. They caught him early this summer and he was with them quite a while."

"I don't reckon he'd been in any danger at all if I hadn't been along. But to get back to my present trouble. I'm broke-'

"'Horseshoe' Webb will work on the inside with you."

"Just how? What are we to do? Explain," curtly demanded Dinsdale.

"He's hired as one of the guards. You'll be hired as another. There will be ten other guards. We've planned iti so you two, working with the three of us, who will be in ambush, can take care of the ten guards and not shed a drop of blood."

"That's all right. Now who are the others?"

"I make the third man. Bud Roach from Crook City is the fourth. I can't tell you who the fifth man is.

"Then it's all off and I'll forget all about it, just as I promised," declared Dinsdale

"You'll know everything once we've got the stuff. Even Horseshoe Webb or Roach doesn't know Number One, the leader."

"Don't like it. Never did like going it blind. When I tie up with a man to do risky work I want to know his face, his heart. I want to know him down to the ground," firmly demurred Dinsdale

"But you know me. If I vouch for the chief that ought to be good enough for you. Webb and Roach know me, I'm Number Two in the partnership. I give them their orders. But they're ignorant dogs. They might talk too much when drunk. Say they did and I got into a pickle. The chief, upknown, is left free to get me clear. You're different, of course. If you'd come from Rapid City when sent for, the chief would have been willing, perhaps, for you to know him before we work it. But it's too late now. After we've corraled the gold you'll know him and like him.

"Dinsdale, that's the way the game lays and you'll have to take it or leave it. I'm sorry, but I can't tell you any more. If it was for me to decide I'd put all the cards down face up. The chief will be there and will hold the ribbons. You'll meet him immedia our after we've got the stuff."

Dinsdale swallowed his drink and pursed his lips thoughtfully. Finally he siapped his hand recklessly on the table and decided. "All right. I drop. I'll go it blind, banking on you. I'm broke and haven't any choice. But it's the last time I work without knowing every man who's sitting in. Safest way is to go
