OPEN DEATH VALLEY TO MOTOR TOURISTS

Winter Months mitted to S

Salt Lake City, U noted as the most dangerous and one places on this earth, tu on the American continent, is opened up to tourist sight-seeing traffic. Automobile busses criss-cross the great sunken desert and transcontinental tourists may, in comfort, cross the mysterious valley which used to mean death to the emigrant who, beguiled by its numerous mirages and its stretches of salt, which looked like cool water, attempted to cross its desert wastes.

May 15 is to see the last tourist of the season out of the valley. Hereafter, the season will open in the fall, but always, by May 15 the last tourist must be out of the place. For Death valley, so pleasant in the winter, becomes a perfect inferno with the return of the summer sun and temperatures run up to as high as 140 degrees and more. A modern hotel has been built at Furnace creek, and this will be headquarters for the tourists.

Pullman cars are operated to Death valley junction, and gasoline motor cars on the Death Valley railroad go to within 12 miles of the entrance to the valley itself. From this point the automobile busses operate to and through the valley of death. The Death Valley railroad. Tonopah and Tidewater railroad and Union Pacific railroad is the combination which has opened up Death valley to tourist traffic.

Many Perished in Valley.

Death valley's significant name was given it by the very first party of emigrants to look down upon it from the surrounding mountains. There were 80 men, women and children in the party. They thought they saw a silvery stream of water and attempted to cross. When they reached the stream it was just white salt and not a drop of water. With the full fury of the summer sun heating the sandy furnace to 140 degrees, and no water, the trek became a panic. Wagons, cattle, everything was abandoned and groups spread along the Panamint mountain range at the western edge trying to find water or egress from the inferno.

About a dozen of the party got through Emigrant Wash, found sweet water and survived. That was in 1850. In 1860, ten years later, a prospecting party under Dr. Darwin French, found wagons, guns, cooking utensils, children's toys, etc., lying just where they had been abandoned. They also found human skeletons, some within 300 yards of a water hole. The skeletons were buried by the party.

There are many graves scattered over the desert. Few names are on the markings. "He ran out of water" is the usual lettering.

But when one of that first party of emigrants got to water he found in his hand a piece of pure silver ore. He remembered breaking the shiny "rock" from a ledge of the same material.

That little piece of silver was made to a sight for the finder's rifle. And matter was immediately reported to Fort Worth, Texas .- Married six times during the last year and a half without having obtained a divorce, Thomas W. Wharton, twenty-three years old and scion of a wealthy Texas family, has been declared insane by a jury, which recommended incarceration in an asylum. Wharton is a son of A. B. Wharton and a grandson of W. T. Waggoner, multimillionaire banker and rancher.

ACQUIRED SIX WIVES:

Both father and grandfather were in the courtroom of Judge Emmett Moore when the jury returned its verdict. Attorneys and physicians had been employed by the family in its effort to prove that the young man is mentally unsound. His mother was the late Electra Waggoner Wharton, several times married and divorced. Only a few days ago Mrs. Doris Edna Day of Abilene, Texas, latest of his six wives, filed a suit against Wharton for $150,000 damages.

Testimony developed that Wharton's first marriage was to a California girl in 1925, whose name was not disclosed, while the other marriages were to Isa Riley, June 1, 1926, at Palm Beach, Fla.; Mary Melton, November 9, 1926, at Dallas; Irene Rolfe November 24, 1926, at Bartlesville, Okla.; Leora Murray, October 15, 1925, Colorado Springs, Col.; Doris Edna Day, December 4, 1926, at Abilene,

Unmoved by Trial.

Young Wharton, appearing at least ten years older than his twenty-three years, apparently took little interest in the proceedings and was unmoved when the verdict was returned. Testimony by Drs. Henry T. Smith, Jack H. McLean, Wilmer Allison and R. O. Braswell was to the effect that Wharton had become mentally deranged through excessive use of liquor and frequent participation in wild parties. "Up to the time Tom was fifteen years old he was one of the brightest, healthiest and handsomest boys I ever say," Doctor McLean said on the stand. "But two years ago his condition became terrible and he has grown worse. His emotions are developed far beyond his intellect and will power and his condition is direct ly traceable to his excesses."

"The great trouble with this young man," the doctor testided. "is that he has never had anything to do. He was like any other boy, with a lot of energy and ambition, but since he was not put to work he expended his surplus energy in a dissolute life and this is the result. He was given an unlimited expense account and all he had to do was to kill time and spend a fortune any way he pleased. So he isn't altogether to blame. It is this very thing that is America's greatest problem today, but if wealthy parents won't make their sons work, nothing can be done about it."

Grandfather Big Rancher.

W. T. Waggoner, the grandfather, owns one of the largest ranches in Texas and early in life knew what it was to be poor and to work hard for a living. Oil wells, located on his ranches, have made him a millionaire

THE SUMMER COW

"Moo, moo," said Mrs. Cow, "I'll tell you what I am going to call myself.

"I'm going to call myself the summer cow."

"Moo, moo," said Miss Cow, "You didn't give me the chance to ask you. I hope you didn't think I was rude or that I should have asked you before. "But you know I was lazy about getting around to the question."

"Oh, that's all right," said Mrs. Cow. "If you hear what I am going to call myself-or rather why I am going to call myself the summer cow (which name I've already told you), then you will see that I hardly could think you rude.

"You see the reason I want to call myself the summer cow is because I heard a lady say that a summer day like this made her feel so sleepy and so lazy and that all the summer sounds she heard made her feel lazy, too.

"She seemed to think that it was because it was a summer day that she felt this way, and so I said to myself, I did; yes, I said to my cow self:

"'Mrs. Cow, why not change your name and call yourself Mrs. Summer Cow?

" 'Why not?' I asked myself once again.

"And then I answered myself, and I said to my cow self:

"'Why not, indeed? There is no reason why not. It is a very good idea. You can be as lazy as you wish, and you can just call yourself a summer cow, and it will seem so suitable and right and correct and all that sort of thing.

"So I just chose the name of Mrs. Summer Cow. Or rather I have just chosen It.

"And I think I will stick to it for a long time.

"Of course I will have no trouble sticking to it when the summer is

Doctor Rensoli also plans a general drainage of swamp land and the free introduction into rivers and streams of larva-destroying fish. A commission with full power to act in the cases of immigrants affected by malaria will be recommended.

The plan calls for a yearly appropriation of $3,000,000 to carry on the work.

Each Package Weighed

Alike, Sizes Differed Seattle, Wash .- Striking examples of the disparity in specific gravity of two objects was shown here when the steamer Northwestern from Seward, Alaska, docked. In her cargo were two items weighing exactly the same, but which for size seemed all out of proportion. One was a five-pound box of tin ore from newly developed mines up the Kuskokwim river measuring five inches each dimension; the other five pounds, of eiderdown, the minute feathers plucked from breasts of a species of Northern duck. The bag of duck feathers measured three feet thick by six feet long.

China Shy of Machines; Hires Men for All Work

Peking .- Labor-saving devices are scarce in China, where manpower is abundant and wages low.

Two men working with a large, twohandled saw, will spend a day cutting one plank from a rough fifteen-foot timber. A mechanical saw, which would do the job in a matter of minutes, is looked upon with disfavor by the Chinese employer.

Peking's streets are sprinkled the year round by men with tubs and shallow bamboo baskets on the end of a pole. They have been sprinkled in that manner for generations from wells at intervals along the streets. Thousands of men would be thrown out of work if modern methods were substituted for the old practice.

The jinricksha pullers' guild and the wheelbarrow-pushing water peddlers oppose the encroachments of street cars and waterworks upon their business.

Moberly, Mo .- A new record for a rural community like this one was established in November when four sets of twins were born out of a total of 23 births, breaking all previous records along that line. The twins were born to Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Grove, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Earl L. Bloss, and Mr. and Mrs. War ren Benton.

tian. 1. The Importance of the Home. The oldest and most important institution in the world is the family. It is the foundation stone upon which all other institutions are built. In the measure that the home is kept pure and strong will the church, society and the nation be pure and strong. II. The Makers of the Home. The foundation upon which the home is built is marriage, and the makers of the home are the man and the woman united in holy wedlock. III. The Obligations of the Members of the Home.

1. The husband (Eph. 5:25-32). (1) The husband is to love his wife

(v. 25). Observea. The measure of this love is the love of Christ for His church. Christ loved the church so that He gave Himself for it. His was a self-emptying love. The obligation enjoined then on the husband is to manifest that self-emptying love toward his wife. b. The purpose of this love (vv. 26, 27). The purpose of the husband's selfemptying love is the perfection of his wife's character.

c. The ground of this love (vv. 28-30).

After all, the ground of the husband's love for his wife is his own self. He that loveth his wife loveth himself.

(2) The husband is to be joined unto his wife (v. 31).

When the time comes for a man to establish a home, he leaves his father and mother and is joined to his wife. This results in the creation of the new unity of society.

2. The wife (Eph. 5:22-24).

She is to be subject to her own husband. This is not an arbitrary matter, but it is according to the divine arrangement. It is to be "as unto the In order to understand this, we must grasp the figure which the apostle introduces of Christ and the church. Christ's loving the church is without ulterior motive, as true love "seeketh not its own." Since Christ gave Himself for the church, He thus lifted the church into union with Himself and became to it Lord in the power of His love. The church responds to this love by lovingly recognizing the Lordship of Christ. Just as the church graciously comes under the guidance and direction of Jesus Christ does the

No Fear Now of Offense!

So Sweet and Clean Inside! No Offensive Vapors From the Pores

Once a person realizes the wonderful properties in cascara, no other laxative in the market would ever be considered. It's no trick to "clean out the bowels." Dozens of things will do that. But a little natural cascara purifies the system clear through. Cleanses even the pores or your skin. Renders perspiration as in-offensive as so much dew! The old-fashioned way was "salts." They get action, but they take the mucous membrane along with the waste matter Mineral oils are gentler, but they leave the bowels with a film of poisons for the blood to carry off through the pores. But when you cascarize the system, you get rid of all the poisons by normal muscular action of the bowels. If you have the habit of taking medicine for constipation, or even for autointoxication, stop it. For a candy cascaret is a delightful form in which to take casas a derighten form in which to take easy cara; children love them, and the taste tempts most grown-ups to have "more." And what a comfort to know you are in that clean, wholesome condition that does away with any need of deodorants, even in warmest weather! Try a cascaret tonight-see how you feel next day, and for days after! With the skin fresh and fragrant. All druggists, 10c and 25c.

Mothers, Do This-

When the children cough, rub Mus-terole on their throats and chests. No telling how soon the symptoms may develop into croup, or worse. And then's when you're glad you have a jar of Musterole at hand to give prompt relief.

As first aid, Musterole is excellent. Keep a jar ready for instant use. It is the remedy for adults, too. Relieves sore throat, bronchitis, tonsillitis, croup, stiff neck, asthma, neuralgia, headache, congestion, pleurisy, rheumatism, lumbago, pains and aches of back or joints, sprains, sore muscles, chilblains, frosted feet and colds of the chest (it may prevent pneumonia)

To Mothers: Musterole is also made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole.

Better th

wife respond to the love of her husband. Headship of the man is the divine order. Headship never suggests "boss-ship" nor governorship. Observe with reference to this subjection-

(a) The motive (v. 22). "As unto the Lord."

(b) The ground (v. 23). "The husband is the head of the wife." (c) The extent of (v. 24). "In everything."

3. The children (6:1-3).

The divine purpose in the union of the male and the female in the bonds of holy wedlock is the propagation of the race. When God pronounced Hls benediction upon the first pair He said, "Be fruitful and multiply."

(1) Obedience to parents (v. 1). The ground of this obedience is the fact that the parents stand in the place of God to the child. (2) Honor the parents (v. 2).

Obedience to parents is limited to the period of immaturity. When the children take their place in the establishment of new units in society they are no longer under obligation to obey their parents. Two gracious promises are attached to this commandment, that it may be well with thee and that thou mayest live long on the earth

4. The parents (v. 4). Doubtless the word "fathers" was intended to be inclusive of the "mothers.

(1) Provoke not your children to wrath.

This doubtless means that in the exercise of parental authority there should be avoidance of irritation.

(2) To bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Nurture doubtless means to educate and admonition means discipline.

Speaking of peasant embroidery in general, what a craze there is for it this season! "They say" the recent visit of Queen Marie of Rumania to our "ain countree" accounts for this manifest interest in the handiwork of the Balkan women. At any rate the fashion program for spring and summer emphasizes the importance of peasant frocks, smocked profusely at neckline, waistline and wrist, with full sleeves done in gay native embroidery designs.

So now's the time to begin to "study up" on the art of smocking. A white voile frock done in boil-fast cotton is a treasurable possession and it is worth beginning now to embroider it so as to have it completed ready for wear during the warm summer days Crowns of ruffled narrow grosgrain ribbon find their way into many a toque for spring, such as the model to the left.

Color combinations are outstanding in the latest hat arrivals, and blues in their entire range are especially cited. The last handsome model in this picture employs alternating sections of navy and gobelin faille silk. Sometimes as many as six or seven

CHAPTER XI -11-

Lydia Giggles

The days flew lightly by, lightly for Lydia, too, in spite of the heavy secret she carried of Levine's plotting. The day before they broke camp, Lydia's old squaw appeared and asked for Charlie Jackson.

Charlie and Kent were cooking dinner.

"Dear me," said Miss Towne, "tell him to take the poor thing away, Lydia. "He must feed her, first," exclaimed

Lydia, leading the old Indian over to the cooking shelter.

Kent and Lydia exchanged glances as Charlie led the squaw-Susie, he called her-into the woods, after Lydia had heaped her old arms with food. Kent and Gustus had put the dinner on the table and they all were seated at the meal when Charlie returned.

"What did she want, Charlie?" asked Olga.

"You wouldn't care if I told you," ceplied Charlie, grimly. "But," he burst forth suddenly, "some day you whites will pay. Some day the Japs or the Jews will do to you Americans what you've done to us.

"Look here, Lydia, Levine is up to some new cussedness. Old Susie came on him in council the other night with six of the worst half-breeds in the reservation. She lost her head and began to jaw him so she didn't find out what it was about. And he's getting the last of my timber now. Lydia, you've got to help me. When you get home, talk to Levine."

"Getting the last of your timber !" exclaimed Kent.

"Yes, the law lets 'em get the 'dead and down' stuff and who's going to swear it's fresh stuff that he cut this summer and will get out next winter?" "But how does he come to be taking your wood? Why don't you go to see him yourself?" asked Kent. "I can't answer either of those questions," replied Charlie, sullenly. The two young whites thought of the attack on Levine, and looked at each other apprehensively. "Won't the Indian agent stop him?"

asked Lydia. "He! Why, he's deep in the mire himself with Dave Marshall. My God, Margery Marshall went to New York on a blind Indian boy's pines! Lydia, save my pines for me! They belong to my tribe. My father was going to Washington three years ago to tell the President about the graft when they shot him from ambush. If I put up a fight, they'll shoot me. Lydia, won't you help us?"

Neither Kent nor Lydia ever had seen Charlie thus before. He was neither arrogant nor sullen. He was in her lap and Adam at her feet, when Billy Norton called. He stopped for a chat in the garden with her father, before coming up to greet Lydia.

"He is awful homely. A regular old farmer," she thought, comparing him with the elegant Gustus and with Kent's careless grace.

"Hello, Lyd! Awful glad you're back !" He sat down on the step below her and Lydia wrinkled her nose. He carried with him the odor of hay and horses.

"How's your mother?" asked Lydia. "I'm coming over, tomorrow."

"Mother's not so very well. She works too hard at the blamed canning. I told her I'd rather never eat it than have her get so done up." "I'll be over to help her," said Lydia, "We had a perfectly heavenly time in camp, Billy." "Did you?" asked her caller, indifferently. "Going to try to sell fudge, this winter, Lyd?"

"I don't know," Lydia's tone was mournful, "Daddy hates to have me.

"Oh, All Right." Replied Lydia Crossly.

Now I'm growing up he seems to be getting sensitive about my earning money.

"He's right, too," said Billy, with a note in his voice that irritated Lydia.

sense of indignation that made her less patient than usual with what she was growing to consider the foibles of the male sex. At any rate, she precipitated her carefully planned conversation with Levine, when the four of them were seated on the back steps, after supper.

The others were listening to Lydia's account of her investigating tour with Charlie.

"I shouldn't say it was the best idea in the world for you to be wandering through the woods with that young Indian," was Levine's comment when Lydia had finished.

"I don't see how you can speak so," cried Lydia, passionately, "when this minute you're taking his pine wood."

"Lydia !" said Amos, sharply. "Let her alone, Amos," Levine spoke quietly. "What are you talking about, Lydia?" "The Indians are people, just like us," she cried, "and you're treating them as if they were beasts. You're robbing them and letting them starve! Oh. I saw them! Charlie showed the poor things to me-all sore eyes, and coughing and eating dirt. And you're making money out of them! Maybe the very money you paid our note with was made out of a starved squaw. Oh, I can't stand it to think it of you !"

Lydia paused with a half sob and for a moment only the gentle ripple of the waves on the shore and the crickets were to be heard. Levine, elbow on knee, chin on hand, looked through the dusk at the shadowy sweetness of Lydia's face, his own face calm and thoughtful.

"You're so good and kind to me," Lydia began again, "how can you be so hard on the Indians? Are you stealing Charlie's logs? Are you, Mr. Levine?"

"I bought his pine," replied Levine quietly.

"He doesn't believe it. He thinks you're stealing. And he's so afraid of you. Why does he feel that way, Mr. Levine?"

"Lydia! What're you saying!" exclaimed Amos.

"Keep out, Amos," said Levine. "We've got to clear this up. I've been expecting it, for some time. Lydia, years ago before the government began to support the Indians, they were a fine, upstanding race. The whites could have learned a lot from them. They were brave, and honorable, and moral, and in a primitive way, thrifty. Well, then the sentimentalists among the whites devised the reservation system and the allowance system. And the Indians have gone to the devil, the slivers.

"Only, I don't dare to think about those enthusiasm. She sewed the fringe on the rugs, on the front porch. Sitting starving old squaws, or the baby that so, she could see Margery when she appeared far down the road. On the "That's right," agreed Levine, com-

One of the not unimportant results of the camping trip was that Lydia rediscovered the pine by the gate. It was the same pine against which she had beaten her little fists the night of Patlence's death.

She liked to sit on the steps and stare at it, dreaming and wondering. For the Indians and the pines were now unalterably associated in Lydia's mind. The life of one depended on that of the other. Strange thoughts and perhaps not altogether cheerful and wholesome thoughts for a girl of Lydia's age.

So it was probably well that Margery about this time began to show Lydia a certain Margery-esque type of Levine." attention. In her heart, in spite of her mother's teachings, Margery had always shared her father's admiration been a grudging, jealous admiration that seemed like actual dislike. But as Margery developed as a social favorite and Lydia remained about the same quiet little dowd, the jealousy liking. Therefore, several times a week, Margery appeared on her blcycle, her embroidery bag dangling from the handle bars. The two girls would then establish themselves on cushions by the water and sew and chatter.

One day Lydia said, "I wish we had hardwood floors like yours." "What kind are yours?" inquired Margery. "Just pine, and kind of mean, splin tery pine, too.

"Upstairs at Olga's all the floors were that way," said Margery, "and they had a man come and sandpaper 'em and put kind of putty stuff in the cracks and oil and wax 'em and they look fine." "Gee!" said Lydia, thoughtfully.

"I'll do it! And I'll cut our old living-room carpet up into two or three rugs. Lizzle'll have to squeeze enough out of the grocery money for fringe. I'd rather have fringe than a fall coat." Amos, coming home a night or so later, found the living-room floor bare of the shining floor through the doorway. Then, without preamble, he asked, "Did you talk to Levine, Lydia?"

"Yes," she said. "He-he just doesn't see it any way but his, Charlie! He insists that the only way to save you Indians is to make you work for a living."

"He's doing it all for our good, huh?" sneered Charlie.

"He doesn't pretend. He says he wants the land. He's paying for it, though."

"Paying for it !" cried the Indian. "How's he paying for it, do you know?"

"No. and I don't want to know! I'm tired of hearing things about Mr.

"I don't care if you are," said Charlie, grimly. "You might as well decide right now whether you're going to take for Lydia. In her childhood it had him or me for your friend. You can't have us both."

"I wouldn't give up Mr. Levine for anyone on earth." Lydia's voice shook with her earnestness. "And I don't see why I have to be dragged into of the banker's daughter gave way to this business. I've nothing to do with it."

> "You have, too! You're white, and it's every white's business to judge in this. You'll be taking some of the profits of the reservation if it's thrown open, yourself."

"I will not !" cried Lydia. -47 wouldn't want an inch of that land." Then she caught her breath. Some thing within her said, "Wouldn't, ehnot the vast acres of cathedral pines, you thought of as yours, at camp?" She flushed and repeated vehemently, "Not an inch !"

Charlie smiled cynically. "Listen, Lydia, I'll tell you how Levine pays for his Indian lands."

"Oh, Charlie! I will try," cried Lydia. "I truly will."

"I knew you would," said Charlie, huskily, and he turned back abruptly to the camp.

Lydia stared about her. Supposing, she thought, that she owned a hundred acres of this pine land. She forgot Kent and concentrated every force of her mind on sensing what land ownership would mean. And auddenly there stirred within her a desire for acreage, for trees, soil, stream and shrub, a wide demesne that should be hers and her children's forever.

"Are you really going to talk to Le-Kent roused her from her vine?" reverle.

"Yes! Didn't I promise to?"

"Lots of good it'll do," grunted Kent. "And if you tell him we overheard him in the woods, I'll be sore." "I don't see why."

"Because, after I finish high school, I'm going to tell him I know, to make him let me in on the deal. Look here, Lyd, don't tell him I was with you, anyhow."

"Oh, all right," replied Lydia, cross-"For goodness' sake, don't let's talk about it any more. I don't see why men always have to be plotting ! I'm going back to camp and help pack."

The driver arrived with the carryall at nine o'clock the next morning. and at mid-afternoon, Lydia was dropped at the gate, where Adam took possession of her.

The house seemed small and dingy, Lydia dropped her suitcase in the kitchen.

"I've just got to train old Lizzle." she said, "so that she won't leave her old carpet slippers and her apron in the middle of the kitchen every time she goes out. I do wish we had Mission furniture instead of this everlasting old mahogany. I just guess there's got to be some reforming in this house, this summer."

Amos came in the gate shortly after six. Lydia was waiting for him at the front door. He looked suddenly chabby and old to Lydia and she kissed him very tenderly. It required all the supper hour and all the remainder of the evening to tell the story of the camp and to answer Lizzie's and Amos' questions. There were several episodes Lydia did not describe; that of the half-breed counell in the wood, for example.

Lydia was sitting on the front

Astonished by this outburst, Billy turned round to look up at Lydia. She was wearing her Sunday dress of the year before, cheap cotton that she had outgrown. The young man at her feet did not see this. All he observed were the dusty gold of her curly head, the clear blue of her eyes and the fine set of her head on her thin little shoulders.

"You always look just right to me, Lyd," he said. "Listen, Lyd. I'm not going to be a farmer, I'm-"

"Not be a farmer!" cried Lydia. "After all you've said about it !" "No! I'm going in for two years' law, then I'm going into politics. I tell you, Lydia, what this country needs today more than anything is young, clean politicians."

"You mean you're going to do like Mr. Levine?"

"God forbid !" exclaimed the young man. "I'm going to fight men like Levine. And by heck," he paused and looked at Lydia dreamily, "I'll be governor and maybe more, yet."

"But what's changed you?" persisted Lydia.

"The fight about the reservation. mostly. There's something wrong. you know, in a system of government that allows conditions like that. It's against American principles."

Lydia was impressed. She forgot that Billy smelled of the barnyard. "Well," she said, "we'd all be proud of you if you were President, I can tell you."

"Would you be !" Billy's voice was pleased. "Then, Lydia, will you wait for me?"

"Wait for you?"

"Yes, till I make a name to bring to you."

Lydia flushed angrily. "Look here, Billy Norton, you don't have to be silly, after all the years we've known each other. I'm only fifteen, just remember that, and I don't propose to wait for any man. I'd as soon think of walting for-for Adam, as for you, anyhow."

Billy rose with dignity, and without a word strode down the path to the gate and thence up the road. Lydia stared after him indignantly. "That old farmer !" she said to Adam, who wriggled and slobbered, sympathetically.

She was still indignant when John Levine arrived and found her toast-

"But how about Charlie's pines?" insisted Lydia. "What makes him think you're stealing them? And he says that when the pines go, the tribe will die."

"I paid for the pine," insisted Levine. "An Indian has no idea of buying and selling. It's a cruel incident, this breaking up of the reservation, but it's like cutting off a leg to save the patient's life. Sentiment is wasted.'

Feeling very proud to be able to grant his friend's request, he rose and approached the American.
