Historical Survey Praised by Haley

Events Haley, secretary of the Texas Historical society, was here with his family the first two days of the week, spending most of the time at the J. A. Haley ranch. They returned to their home at Austin, this morning.

While speaking of the recent state historical survey in which historical resources in 15 Texas cities were catalogued, Haley termed the survey a "permanent contribution to the life, literature and history of the state."

The survey, which gave employment to 250 persons, resulted in 500,000 specific references prepared in card index form to historical information found in newspapers published from 1825 to 1934, 15,000 pages of manuscript transcribed, 10,000 clippings mounted, typed and indexed, 1,000 pages of Bexar archives translated and typed, and much more assorted and filed. The survey was conducted by the University of Texas, indexed and 350 Texas history books conveniently indexed.

Sheriff Has No Hair on Chest; Does Have Nerve

Sheriff Francis has joined both the day and night force—either that or he will sleep standing up.

Another lead for this story might be that the sheriff has plenty of intestinal fortitude but no hair on his chest. The doctor had to shave it off yesterday afternoon so he could apply a heavy brace of adhesive tape to protect the veteran officer's broken ribs.

Sheriff Francis was "jogging along" on a gentle pony at his ranch south of Midland when the animal suddenly "boogered" at something and went out from under his rider. Francis landed on his right shoulder, breaking two ribs.

He got back on the pony, rode a half mile to the ranch house, got in his car and drove to town, then walked to the doctor's office and had the tape applied. Today he was going about his business but said there was "no use" in trying to sleep. In the first place "you couldn't lie down on the bed and if you did you couldn't get up."

Germany Will Arm for Defense and France Can "Take It or Leave It"

By WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS
BERLIN, May 29.—Germany intends to provide herself with that degree of armaments which her national defense requires. France's stand to the contrary notwithstanding.

This was made unmistakably clear by Baron Konstantin von Neurath, Reich minister for foreign affairs, in the course of a conversation I had with him at his office in the Wilhelmstrasse here.

The baron does not like interviews. His pet antipathy is direct questions. But he gave this full permission to publish the gist of what he said.

As the world disarmament conference, opening at Geneva, May 30, now seems doomed, leaving Europe face to face with an almost certain armament race, Baron von Neurath's views assume particular importance.

Surrounded by nations each possessing a vast armada of military planes, the baron said, Germany lacks a single such plane. Berlin could be bombed from every direction at any time and Germany could not help herself.

Germany does not seek offensive weapons, he continued. She wants no heavy artillery. The biggest gun she asks for is 15 centimeters, approximately 6 inches. Other nations have 8, 12, 14, 16 and 18-inch guns. Germany is not permitted tanks. Other nations have them up to 20 tons. Germany wants no such land battleships. All she asks is to be allowed tanks up to six tons.

Germany has no anti-aircraft weapons with which to defend her frontiers from outside attack.

Certainly considers her demands are extremely reasonable. Both British and American spokesmen have so expressed themselves to the baron, he said.

Germany asks for can not be considered dangerous to her neighbors. They would be of little value save for purely defensive purposes within Germany.

She needs arms, but the minimum deemed essential for the national defense.

Unworried by French Stand

The categorical nature of the French note to Great Britain declaring that it is now useless to continue the further separate diplomatic negotiations on disarmament, since Germany has announced vast increases in expenditure on her army, navy, and air ministries, did not seem to worry the baron, who said that he would not be disturbed by such a stand.

In talking such stand, the German foreign minister observed, perhaps France hoped to create a situation in an armament race when the necessary to back down. If such were the case, France would be disappointed.

Perhaps that might have happened there had the baron, when Reichstag had more influence, but now, when things are different, Germany's position would not be modified in the least. She will not demand more, but certainly she will not demand less.

Scuffs at War Talk

I remarked that in the United States and elsewhere abroad there seemed to be a growing fear that Europe might be headed toward another conflict.

The baron replied that nobody wants war and he does not believe there will be one. Any statesman who lets his country in for another war, he said, would be a fit subject for an asylum of lunatics.

If there is another war in Europe, he went on, it would mean the end of Europe, which can not survive another conflict. There is a single problem, he said, the European powers today, he insisted, which can not be settled by peaceful methods. A little good-will on the part of all.

Just what is going to happen now, so far as disarmament is concerned, Baron von Neurath said, nobody knows for certain. The problem is still amenable to settlement by agreement.

No Objection to Alliance

I suggested that already there is talk of a revival of the old Anglo-French entente cordiale and of a formal defensive alliance.

The baron's attitude was, Well, why not? Germany has no idea of attacking either country and therefore does not object either to a new entente cordiale or a defensive alliance between France and Great Britain, especially if it will make France feel any better.

He did not believe, however, that it would make her feel any better. France has been asking for security for years and, despite all that has been done to add to her security, she still is not satisfied.

Like Dickens' famous character, she always asks for more. As Baron von Neurath does not believe the League of Nations is of much value as at present organized, Germany will not return to its fold. It should be completely reorganized, in his opinion, to make it non-political. In such form it could accomplish much good.

Clus League Failure

Experience has proved it will not work as a political organization, the baron holds. It failed in Manchuria. It failed in the Chaco. It failed in the Peruvian-Colombian conflict.

In attempting the impossible, it inevitably fails, and each failure detracts from its prestige, thus making it still less potent for its present effort.

Germany will co-operate in so far as she is able, from outside the League, before the war there were great iron and steel mills preparing war material for France.

On the German side there were similar mills preparing material for Germany. Soon after war started, the Germans secured possession of the whole Briey basin.

This helped them to prolong the war, but no serious attempt was made by the French to bombard this sector. In fact, it was not seriously threatened at all until the American troops launch-

Baron von Neurath, above, explains the idea Germany wants heavy offensive war machinery; Germany wants, and will demand, defensive armament, however, he explained.

EUROPEAN ARMS TRADE FLOURISHES DESPITE SCANDALOUS REVELATIONS

NEA Service Staff Correspondent
LONDON, May 29.—Wars and rumors of wars have caused streams of gold and silver to flow into the pockets of the world's armament makers, out, at the same time, in the United States and Europe, veritable brick-bats have been hurled about their devoted heads.

The world has become a far less pleasant place in which to spend their dividends. For since 1918 there has been a steady campaign of peace organizations to show just how callous, greedy and inter-national are these same armament makers who always wrap themselves in a cloak of hundred per cent national patriotism.

Before the World War, the men who manufactured the materials for mass murder had things pretty much their own way. In their patriotic pose, they pointed out that they made the stuff which enabled their respective nations to defend themselves against a possible enemy. But this claim has been stripped from them since then because it has been shown that with great impartiality they sold their wares, not only to their own country, but to all comers.

Shot Down by Own Shells

Hugh Dalton, speaking in the British house of commons in March, 1928, charged that the Australian, New Zealand and British troops in the Gallipoli campaign in the World War were shot down by shells the Turks had bought from a British armament firm.

Speaking in the French chamber of deputies on February 11, 1932, Paul Faure charged that French troops were shot down by guns which the Bulgarians and Turks had bought from a great French armament firm.

Export Munitions Trade

World trade, as a whole, has shown a steady and very large decrease. World export in munitions has shown much less decrease. 1929 is taken as the index for 1928, by 1933 world trade had fallen to 36. But export trade in munitions had fallen only to 75. And export trade in munitions only tells a small part of the story, because in many big countries the munitions factories have been very busy arming their home lands to the teeth.

Shareholders and Workers

A German statistical institute, which studies this armament question from a purely business standpoint, estimates that the sections of the Versailles treaty, forbidding export of arms and munitions to Germany, has forced some 150,000 men to seek other employment and has cost vast sums to share-holders in German arms and munitions plants. Despite the fact that it assumes that Germany, Hungary and Austria have not been allowed to engage in the business and that they have strictly complied, the institute estimates that in the years since the war the production of war material has increased by anywhere from a fourth to a third more than in the crucial pre-war year of 1913.

An even greater scandal

the mystery as to why the Briey iron basin on the frontier between France and Germany was not bombarded. On the French side of the frontier, before the war there were great iron and steel mills preparing war material for France.

On the German side there were similar mills preparing material for Germany. Soon after war started, the Germans secured possession of the whole Briey basin.

This helped them to prolong the war, but no serious attempt was made by the French to bombard this sector. In fact, it was not seriously threatened at all until the American troops launch-

Galveston Is Wide Open, Hodge Reports

Galveston is as typically marked today as it was around 1900, when the city's historically famous "Galveston plan" was the envy of Texas cities busy adopting it—only the place is now wide open, whereas the old plan was built around control of liquor and gambling.

So explains J. Howard Hodge, Ritz theatre owner, who with Bill Van Husa has returned from a several days fishing trip to the island.

Hodge said one place, in the center of the elite section of the business district, is as well furnished as a brilliant casino, and caters to the patronage of the select. There is an air of gentility that pervades it, even though one can have any drink he has ever heard of—or can get mixed anything his imagination conceals or his system demands.

There is no more noise than one hears in the finest restaurant. Music is well selected, of a slow tempo and played with nice regard for acoustics.

Fishing? Hodge did not have much to say about that. His luck was not astounding, he said, although he and Van Husa, using an outboard motor boat and plenty of tackle procured by Van Husa's brother of that place, drove out 19 nautical miles and caught all they could eat. The bay was empty.

CLARIBEL TRIP IS VOTED THE BEST

Back from Caribbea, N. M., where they sang and read in the great cavern, students voted the Saturday-Sunday trip the best the school had arranged in a series of annual trips.

The first night was spent at Elks River village, where reservations had been made for approximately 100. Swimming, boating and dancing resulted in the evening. The cavern launt began the next morning at 10:30. There were 486 in the party, 320 of whom were from Texas. Midland's group numbered more than 100, counting those who accompanied the students.

Students read "The Chambered Nautilus" and sang "Come Unto Me."

The decision is expected to receive a popular verdict in Cuba when violent anti-American sentiment because of America's insistence on the right of political intervention has resulted in many recent riots.

CLARIBEL TRIP IS VOTED THE BEST

Back from Caribbea, N. M., where they sang and read in the great cavern, students voted the Saturday-Sunday trip the best the school had arranged in a series of annual trips.

The first night was spent at Elks River village, where reservations had been made for approximately 100. Swimming, boating and dancing resulted in the evening. The cavern launt began the next morning at 10:30. There were 486 in the party, 320 of whom were from Texas. Midland's group numbered more than 100, counting those who accompanied the students.

Students read "The Chambered Nautilus" and sang "Come Unto Me."

JEWISH YOUTH RUINS JINX TO MAKE HISTORY

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN BOWL, NEW YORK, May 29. (AP)—A little black-haired whirlwind from Chicago, glitter-eyed Barney Ross, wrote a brand new chapter in ringdom's fantastic history last night as he added Jimmy McLarnin's welterweight crown to his own lightweight championship and ended the domination the Vancouver Irishman has held over Jewish ringmen for the past half dozen years.

Crowd of 65,000

He carved his new record into the books in the boldest, most daring manner, the way no one said it could be done, but out-skagging McLarnin, the dynamite, through 15 savage rounds, to win the decision of Referee Ed Forbes, after two judges had failed to agree on the winner.

Ross, estimated at $5,000, paid $225,000 to see a match that sounded the knell for the depression in boxing, stood for several minutes as Forbes raised Barney's head and roared their approval of the boy from Chicago's ghetto who succeeded where his illustrious predecessor, Benny Leonard, failed against Jack Britton in 1922.

Peppin Decision

In the minds of that huge throng, the eighth round, the dynamic little Ross tore into the bigger, heavier McLarnin and punched with him, welcoming every exchange as few men ever had dared to do.

He started blood seeping from Jimmy's nose in the fourth round, with left hooks that cracked into the champion's head with the snap of a black snake whip.

Both Upset

In the ninth he got off the floor after a left hook half belted, half-pushed him from his feet, to thunder back into McLarnin with a retaliating southpaw smash that dumped Jimmy unceremoniously on his haunches in the resin.

Neither took a count in the round that turned the tide momentarily for the Irishman, who, in his thumping prime smashed out K-

President's Son Drives Ford V-8

Like many another man who loves the open air, James Roosevelt, Boston business man and son of the President, favors motor cars of the sport type. Mr. Roosevelt is pictured above with his Ford V-8 de luxe phaeton. The top is down and the car is ready for a run through the New England countryside, now beautiful in the first warm days of spring. Mr. Roosevelt not only drives his Ford V-8 de luxe phaeton, but also owns a Ford V-8 cabriolet, which can be closed in when the weather is inclement.

Knapp, Sid Terris, Al Singer, Jov Sainger, Ruby Goldstein and even the great Benny Leonard himself, before colliding this night with a different type of Jewish fighter—a boy with a paw of steel and the courage of a crusader.

Rural Schools Are Renovated

Painting and repairing of rural schools has been started, with all of the buildings to be improved during the summer. County Superintendent E. H. Barron said today. Relief labor is being used, the school districts furnishing the materials.

The Valley View school and the teaching there are being repainted and repaired. Painting and repairing is under way at the Stokes school. Work at other buildings will follow immediately afterward, according to present plans.

Band Instruction Is Being Offered

Special band classes will be conducted by Director Russell E. Shrader beginning June 19. Classes will be of one hour in length and will be held on a regular schedule of four days a week, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, for a period of six weeks. Plans are being worked out with two other high schools in this district for a band camp at the close of the summer.

A nominal charge for band instruction will be charged.

In order that the band may open school next fall with a strong showing, it is necessary that many of the members of the beginner's classes have opportunity to complete their preliminary training before that time. There are also many members of the high school band who could profit by special training during the summer. Work will be counted toward high school band credit for graduation. All college students according to the summer there are many communally activities where the services of an organized band would be materially helpful. The summer band classes will satisfy this demand and be ready for such occasions as the Fourth of July celebrations.

Classes will be made up in two main divisions according to the training of the students. The members of the regular high school band will study in the advanced class; the members of the junior high school band will continue their present study in another group, but will advance more rapidly because of the additional time spent on the work. At the end of the course these band details will be open to promotion into the high school band. There will be reed and brass sections for the advanced classes in addition to the main class.

Any student who wishes to have private lessons on any band instrument may arrange for them with the instructor.

The summer band classes will use the high school building. Arrangements will be made for the coolest rooms for practices and band rehearsals.

The high school band library will be used for the advanced class with some new music of a difficult nature for special study. Text books in classes for music credit must be supplied by the student. Every student must have a music stand.

European Wars

Czechoslovakia has more than taken the place of Austria, with 4.9 per cent.

League Survey

There are authoritative checks on these figures, because the League of Nations every year sets out an elaborate series of statistics on exports and imports of arms and munitions. Owing to the labor involved and the difficulty of getting the figures, the tables are always behind the current year. Thus the latest figures issued are only for 1931. But they show exports of arms totaling $16,050,000 and exports of munitions totaling $18,931,300.

There are no authoritative figures showing how much each country has spent on home production of arms and munitions. But in countries like Great Britain, France, Italy, Czechoslovakia and Poland, which have vast public and private factories, the production was undoubtedly many times what was exported.

Novice Forced to Create Character Despite Bandages

All the difficulties that confront a novice intent on achieving even a fair measure of success on the screen were multiplied a hundredfold in the case of young Billie Seward, contract player who appears in Columbia's "Once to Every Woman," which will open at the Yucca theatre Wednesday.

In this, her first important screen assignment, Miss Seward was obliged to create a very important characterization with her voice alone. Though blessed with more than her share of beauty, she is swathed in yards of bandages from the opening scene to the last and not even one brief "shot" of her face appears.

Miss Seward found she was cast as a patient in a hospital in the screen adaptation of A. J. Cronin's novelette which appeared in the Cosmopolitan under the title of "Kaleidoscope in K." Readers of the story will remember her as the girl who undergoes an operation almost dies under the hands of the faltering Dr. Seby. It is a small but important role in the picture—but one that could better use her dramatic skill than her beauty.

Fay Wray is cast in the picture in the chief feminine role opposite Ralph Bellamy.
