1718—Because of the scarcity of water at the Rio Grande, the San Jose Mission was removed on May 1 to the west bank of the San Pedro about three-fourths of a mile northwest of the present parish church of San Antonio.

1822—On April 29 Stephen F. Austin arrived in Mexico to obtain confirmation of his land grant in Texas from the Congress. He remained there a year.

1832 — The state legislature made an entire change in the colonization law on April 28. They repealed the general colonization law of 1825 and modified the terms of sale to Mexicans, extending the rights of colonists and excluding natives of the United States.

1846—The inauguration of the first state government took place on May 2 in the House of Representatives at Austin. President Anson Jones retired, and J. Pinckney Henderson was installed as first governor.

MINNEHAHA KILLED
BY BROTHER-IN-LAW

Real Fate of Bride of Hiawatha Is Revealed.

Washington. — Minnehaha, the lovely Laughing Water, was murdered by her brother-in-law. Such at least, was the fate of the bride of Hiawatha, according to new details of the Iroquois legend gathered by Dr. J. N. B. Hewitt, ethnologist of the Smithsonian institution.

Her real name is unknown, and it certainly was not Laughing Water, but that does not affect the significance of the story which Mr. Hewitt is placing, step by step, on a historical basis. He is working with details furnished nearly forty years ago by a blind Iroquois ritual leader who was one of the last to have kept uncontaminated the story of his people.

According to this version, which checks in details sufficiently to indicate considerable historical validity, Hiawatha was the child of a Mohawk woman who became the second wife of an Onondaga who had a son by a previous marriage with a woman of his own tribe.

A Ruthless Gangster.

This stepbrother of the future apostle of the Iroquois was, from all accounts, a ruthless gangster who, operating with a band of ruffians, terrorized his own tribe by the typical gangster methods of today. Anybody who opposed him in tribal councils or elsewhere was promptly "put on the spot."

Even in his youth Hiawatha, Mr. Hewitt finds, had decidedly liberal leaning which were to crystallize into a gospel of social action only after tragic and mystical experiences. He was disgusted with the gang rule of his stepbrother, Wa-ta-do-da-ho. He tried to organize a rival party, but could obtain no followers for obvious reasons.

The one man whom Wa-ta-do-da-ho did not dare to "put on the spot" was Hiawatha, owing to a curious combination of circumstances. The Iroquois child took the tribal affiliation of his mother. Hence Hiawatha was not an Onondago but a Mohawk. If the stepbrother had brought about the murder of a Mohawk he would have brought upon himself the vengeance of that powerful tribe.

He compromised by murdering his stepsister-in-law and her children. She was an Onondaga and her children were Onondagas, and it was no concern of the Mohawks what happened to them. One of these children was a daughter already married and about to become a mother.

Started His Wanderings.

But when Hiawatha returned to his lodge to find his loved one slain, he became temporarily insane and started the strange wilderness "Pilgrim's Progress" which, had the white settlement of America been delayed for a century, might well have been one of the most significant in human history.

At this point, says Mr. Hewitt, the story of Hiawatha becomes so overloaded with legendary and supernatural happenings that it is entirely unhistorical. But at some time in his grief-crazed wanderings the future apostle came under the influence of the great Daganawida, the Christ-figure of the Iroquois epic, and the partnership resulted in the establishment of the strange politico-religious system, based on the doctrine of human brotherhood, which entered into the League of the Iroquois.

Three Russian Youths
"Stroll" Over Continent

Moscow.—An astonishing walking feat was recorded here. Three Soviet youths have just completed a "stroll" across 18 republics and provinces, through dense forests and trackless wastes, in bitter cold and burning heat, covering in all a distance of over 5,600 miles—and though they are hailed as "sportsmen" their names are not put in print. Their journey started at Leningrad and finished at Khabarovsk, far eastern Siberia. It took the three young men five months.

African Termites as Builders

The termite ants of Africa build giant anthills of stone, made of clay mixed with a secretion. Many of them are larger than the majority of native huts, says Collier's Weekly. In several cases motor roads have been cut through the middle of them. One termite hill was so large that it furnished all the stone to construct a mission building.

Best Teachers Spare

Rod, Survey Shows
New York.—The grade A teacher spares the rod and does not keep Johnny in after school, Dr. Nellie M. Campbell, of Teachers college, Columbia university, reported in a survey of classroom behavior problems.

She said that she found that teachers who are highly successful in classroom control use fewer punishments and more rewards. Teachers rated A in control of pupils meet the behavior problem by reasoning and social approval, she said.

Harvest festivals in Texas of one sort and another are to be among the most interesting of Centennial celebrations. Violet Slaton, pictured, queen of the 1935 National Tomato Show at Jacksonville, is displaying some of the luscious products which have brought recognition to Texas as a tomato-growing state.

The 1936 National Tomato Show will be held in Jacksonville May 31 to June 6.

Officials of Tomatoes, Inc., enterprising concern with headquarters in Jacksonville, leading tomato section of the nation, are in the midst of elaborate plans for the third National Tomato Show.

The first observance of Tomato Week was held in 1934, a century after tomatoes were introduced in Massachusetts and accepted as a food in America.

Jacksonville is planning for its Tomato Week many interesting attractions featuring the popular product. For one thing, a national tomato recipe contest will be conducted with the idea of securing recipes for a tomato cook book.

TRAFFIC TIPS
By the NATIONAL SAFETY COUNCIL

HOLD THAT LINE!

One sure way of collecting murderous glances from pedestrians, frequently accompanied by sizzling epithets, is to come to a stop out over the intersection cross walk.

Such action stamps the motorist as either selfish, indifferent, or incompetent. He blocks the pedestrian flow and by his example invites other drivers to creep up even with him.

To get by him pedestrians must either pass in front or behind. If they pass in front they endanger themselves by getting out into the intersecting traffic. If they go around behind, the driver who has edged over the line may suddenly decide to back up.

When pressed for an alibi, the line crowder usually claims he couldn't stop in time which, of course, is no excuse whatever. He was either going too fast or his brakes were defective—or else he just didn't care.

The motorist who can't estimate speed and distance isn't qualified to drive. If the brakes are weak he should heed the warning and have them adjusted before a serious crash results.

Know Your Man

By ANN C. HORTON

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

THE salt of the earth, people called Eric Stanton at twenty. "Helping his mother, keeping the place shipshape, working his way through college, spilling his kid brother—"

"I like to work," Eric grinned. "And Bud's all right, the rascal. He's only ten; give him time. I'm glad he's easy-going."

Eric sold cars and earned his way through college through part time law reading. At thirty he passed his bar examinations close to the top. That same year Bud announced that he'd have to give up his dining room job at the frat house if he made the sophomore football team; and could Eric get him a dress suit? Eric could, and cheered loudest of all when Bud plowed up the field—lank, wide-shouldered Eric with a seamy smile on his homely face.

That spring he saw Molly Betts, the kid next door, for the first time. Really saw her. Through the gate came Molly in yellow, like a daffodil, with the western sun finding gold in her blond hair.

"Well," said he, "well! You're—you're quiet a lady, Molly." He scratched his head and peered at her from beneath dark brows.

"Thank you, Eric, for noticing it while I still have my youth . . . But phoned that you would drive me to the Delt house. There's a rush party—"

He got Leaping Lena from the garage and they bucked a good part of the way through town. On the hill up to the campus Eric stopped.

"See here, Molly. Suppose I don't take you to the dance. Suppose we go for a ride, you and I?"

She wiped away a quick smile. "I promised Bud—"

She paused, then gritted angry teeth when Eric said, "That's so. He'll be expecting you," and took her to Bud.

Molly was a month getting Eric to take a personal interest in her, another month getting him to admit it. When finally he kissed her, she was so happy that she shed tears.

"I thought you'd never wake up," she told him. "Dummy! I've been crazy about you since I was a pup."

He held her close, waiting for his inner turmoil to cease. It was the first time he had ever really kissed a girl. Later his heart skipped a beat when he thought how nearly he had taken her to a minister. But Bud's last two years would be expensive and Eric was considering a really tempting offer in Chicago with a bright future but slim present. He had only love and himself for Molly and didn't think it good enough for her.

Then suddenly, Bud wanted Molly. "I'll work like everything to get through college and get a job . . . Aren't you glad? I think she's swell!" And to Eric's white-lipped, "What does Molly say?" he replied with confidence, "I haven't told her yet. But I'll get her!" His pleasant face hardened. "I've got to!"

Eric went to Chicago, to his future. Three years of grind and he had a following, had Bud's bills all paid, started Bud in a small jobbing business he fancied. "Now," he wrote, "marry Molly and settle down. It's not fair to keep a girl waiting." He opened a law office of his own so that he'd be too busy to go home to Bud's wedding.

Months passed. Eric, nervous from suspense, planned a holiday. Then Molly wrote him to come home to a big dance; to bring a beautiful partner, blond preferred. Eric took Ann Haladay, dashing and lovely, easy-going, like Bud. He hoped her high spirits would help him through the announcement party.

Eric found it harder than he had expected to watch Molly devote herself to Bud, always as close to him as his shadow, cheerful though unwanted, for Bud was immediately smitten with the lovely Ann.

"Darling," Molly said later, "it's the last dance. Go in and take her from Eric and send him out here to me."

And when Eric came she said, "Let's go around and sit by the caddy house. People seldom go there and I've a lot to tell you."

Soon Bud brought Ann out and Molly hugged herself in silent glee. How well she knew him! But took Ann in his arms and kissed her with enthusiasm born of long, enforced restraint.

"Oh!" cried Eric. He moved to hide the sight from Molly, pressed her head against his protecting shoulder, then turned his face from the faint perfume of her hair. "I'm so sorry, dear."

Molly's two hands lifted to draw his face close again. "Don't be sorry, mister," she whispered against his cheek. "Don't be sorry. No one else is."

Sleep Called Drug

"Sleep," said John Wesley, who could do with very little, "is a drug." Napoleon, Edison, Dumas and other famous men, concurred. What they meant was that sleep is measured by quality, not by quantity. They themselves had the facility of sleeping in "waves"—ten-minute naps that were as beneficial to them as an hour or two to other people.
