Mr. Hoffman stated that he came upon another car on the wrong side of the road. The lights of this car were very dim and to avoid collision, he pulled into the bar pit, the coupe overturning. Hoffman, a young man who was riding with him on the side of the car was also injured and had to be taken to the hospital. It is thought that his condition was serious.

WORLD'S LARGEST LAMP

The world's largest electric lamp, a monster 50,000 watt experimental bulb built recently is like a radio tube in appearance. At the top of the bulb a radiator made of metal fins carries off intense heat generated by the white-hot tungsten filament, which has a temperature of 5,500 degrees Fahrenheit—practically as hot as molten steel. The bulb is filled with nitrogen gas, whose circulation cools it and carries upward into the radiator evaporated or thrown-off tungsten particles from the filament, thus preventing blackening of the walls. Although the present lamp is intended simply for a test by its designer such huge lights ultimately may find use in motion picture studios.

Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Bryant returned home from Clovis Sunday. Mr. Bryant is recovering from a stage of typhoid fever.

Low Prices and Fine Crops, Where Water Is Plentiful Attracts Eastern People.

Every day brings many new homeseekers to Muleshoe from the Eastern part of Texas and Oklahoma. They are coming to "The Land of Underground Rain" where crops never fail and where the land is rich and can be had at a minimum price.

Since last Saturday, sixty-two prospective buyers have been in Muleshoe, and several have purchased farms, and will move here by the first of the year. Others have returned to their homes in the East to finish the gathering of their crops there in order to return later. The shallow water belt near Muleshoe is attracting many who wish a small place for dairy and poultry purposes, where crops of feed and truck may be irrigated in the event of dry weather. Many are cotton farmers and are looking for cotton farms where the soil is not a menace. They are finding desirable places, no matter what the size.

New roads have been graded through Sudan, and in addition to this is also on the market which is second to none for wheat raising and stock raising.

Visitors at this time of year are seeing what Bailey county can raise in the way of corn, maize, sudan, alfalfa and vegetables. The dairy and poultry industry is on the increase, and many of the new homeseekers are experts in this line. They are all enthusiastic over the country, as a variety of feed may be raised in any quantity, which is a big item in the poultry and dairy business.

Longview News

As I (the Reporter) did not report the Longview News last week, I will give some of the past week's happenings.

I just neglected the news last week, but will try to report something every week from this on.

In spite of the cold weather, the people of Longview entertained the surrounding communities on October 14th with a good Singing Convention.

Due to the cool weather, we didn't have as many present as we were expecting, but had a large crowd, including several good singers from different parts of Texas and New Mexico.

We wish to thank the merchants of Muleshoe and Sudan for their liberal donations to the Singing Convention. We also thank the ladies for the well-filled baskets they brought.

The Longview school closed Friday, October 12, for one month. We lacked one week finishing out two months, but the trustees saw best to close for awhile. We are very proud of the progress that our children made the first two months and with the cooperation of the patrons and pupils with the teachers we will have a real school.

Of one thing I was positive, and I held to that opinion today: General Braddock was convinced that whatever he won must be achieved by his personal efforts. He never took a personal effort. He talked with Mr. Shirley, the commander's secretary, who said he would make a verbal report of what I had learned while in Duquesne. Whether he ever did submit the information I brought, I cannot say, but I believe that he did because of his fear that the campaign was being mismanaged. I can easily imagine Braddock listening to my important information and giving it only a passing consideration, or else forgetting it entirely. That night the army camped at Bush creek, where Scarouady once had a village.

We were now within three easy marches of Duquesne, even though the army moved sluggishly; and I could not perceive any reason why we should not attain our objective. After all, I told Gist and Cromit that the worst death was ever the price paid for a large body of men, more or less strangers to their environment, pass through a virgin country. I told them that on an every level battlefield of European sickness stalked every army.

Cromit had not much to say because of the blanketed fever that weighed upon him. Gist spoke guardedly and said that while some phases of the campaign were not to his liking still he ought to take the army for granted and committed to the Turcotte creek course.

While we were talking Sir John St. Clair and several officers came along and St. Clair called to me and said, "You men must know this country. You will come along with us to reconnoiter."

We fell in behind them and were soon descending the steep bank to a characteristic of the country's streams. Nor was the opposite bank any more inviting.

St. Clair studied the bank thoughtfully for a minute and then, said to his officers:

"This is very bad. The army has lost heart because of cold. Beyond the country beyond is as bad as this left. It will allow any spirit that's left."

"It will be impossible to take the artillery and wagons across the bank this bank, Sir John, unless we spend much time preparing both banks," said one of the engineers.

"That is very plain," muttered St. Clair. "And that's the devil of it." "If you can get your guns and wagons across, I can soon take you to a ridge that leads to the river and up to Gist. Once you are on the ridge, you won't have much trouble; and you'll find the country open and not fitted for ambushes, or surprise attacks."

As he was serving as guide to General Braddock and was well known in colonial affairs, I was naturally attracted to St. Clair. He suggested he try to find a more favorable crossing. He told there was not much chance as the bank continued to rise, but he did lead them to where the approach to the creek was less difficult, and pointed out a thimble tumbled elevation as being the best place.

The chief engineering problem was to cross the creek and ascend the opposite bank. One young lieutenant said if he could have the use of a hundred soldiers, he could ease the wagons and guns down one slope and haul them up the other by means of the log cables carried by the army.

Another, who had charge of the oxen, guaranteed readily to make runs of logs and thereby greatly expedite the passage of the guns and wagon-train.

Gist called on me to repeat what I already had told Mr. Shirley. I stated that if the army would hold a narrow strike straight for Duquesne it could not be attacked with any degree of success even if the Indians could be induced to attack at all. I quoted Captain Beaulieu to that effect. As they did not cut me short I added, for good measure, that there would be great danger at both crossings of the Monongahela and that it would be practically impossible to avoid an ambush, that Beaulieu already had planned to plant an ambush along the river road.

Sir John seemed to be strongly impressed by my statements, much more so than he would have been had I made a similar talk at Alexandria, or Will's creek. When we returned to the camp, we fully believed the morning's march would remove us from all fear of a masked attack. The conversation among the officers all pointed to this wise maneuver, and our spirits greatly improved.

After Sir John had talked with Braddock, Gist was sent for. Cromit and I left Braddock's camp with the few beavers who were sent to find the Dilwood girl.

Wagoner Morgan was one of the first tent-makers to arrive, despite the sad condition of his horses. He informed us that our little friend was sharing a kettle with two soldiers. We soon had the tent pitched and made her known to the women but still wore her masculine garb, which was very sensible of her. I took her aside for a little talk and she told me she served as a water moid. In fact, she seemed to be more downcast than when we were fighting for our lives in the French camp. She finally seemed to cheer her up, and pointed out how thankful we should be for our deliverance from Pontiac's savages. "That was the frying-pan," she sighed. "I tell you, I feel bad luck, mister. I'll jump on us when we pass through the thick woods. Them soldiers don't know any more about Indians than us as if there was no such cove."

"You shouldn't say such things. You'll take the heart out of the men if they hear you. I ain't a fool even if I come from a family of witches," she angrily retorted. "I'm talking to you, not to the soldiers." Then with instant repentance: "I didn't go to speak to you like this, mister. But these women here, I'll see you tomorrow and get all they talk about in the elks and fine clothes they'll have when we march into Duquesne. You'll come and talk again with me, mister. You've done no such thing for me."

"I'll talk with you. I've done nothing. You're hitting the cart ahead of the horses. If not for you, I never could have left the Duquesne stockade."

"I tell you it was the Indian who drove out of the bank," she said. "After you had told him of my danger and had planned for us to scale the water gate and to you waiting of the horses. If not for you, I never could have left the Duquesne stockade."

"Not if we follow the ridge road. Yes, if we follow the ridge road."

"Then I'm glad it's the ridge. It member, Web, how we used to play at fighting Indians and always planned to run into an ambush and make a very narrow escape? Lord that seems a million years ago. We didn't want any open ridge marching in those days. Nothing but bloody fighting in the shadows of the forest and the Curly cedars. And how we used to recruit firemen! How Joe would squeal like a pig when he was scared. And how Joe would scream like a pig when he was scared. And how Joe would scream like a pig when he was scared."

Grant's First Nomination

In 1864 the Republicans had nominated and elected a Democrat as vice president. In the hope of securing Northern Democratic support for the winning of the Civil War.

Four years later, with that Democrat in the White House as the result of Lincoln's assassination, the senate, after a long quarrel between Johnson and the radical Republican faction in congress over southern reconstruction problems, was going through an impeachment trial to get rid of Johnson as Chief Executive.

And simultaneously at Crosby's Opera in "The Great Band-Wagon Journeys" — that called itself the National Union Republican convention — was busy nominating another Democrat for President.

Johnson's political leaning and affiliations always had been Democratic. The one vote for President he had previously cast in his life had been for James Buchanan in 1854. And he had lived long enough in Illinois to acquire residence there he would have voted for Stephen A. Douglas rather than for Lincoln in 1860.

But his brilliant military leadership in the Civil War had made Grant a name and an asset of considerable value. The course he was called upon to play in political events in Washington following the war soon allied him with the Republicans. He was drawn into the Democratic ranks during the war, against the President. Therefore, the general was an ardent advocate of Johnson's impeachment, and any Democratic leanings he may have had vanished.

Overwhelming Republican demand for his nomination quickly materialized in numerous local and district meetings and conventions. So strong was the Grant sentiment by May 20, the day on which the party convention opened in St. Louis, that the gathering was virtually only a ratification meeting which was able to finish its transactions in the unusually short time of two days.

John A. Logan of Illinois, recent national commander of the U. S. A., made the speech nominating Grant in the name of the loyal citizens, soldiers and sailors of the great republic of the United States of America; in the name of loyalty, of liberty, of humanity, of justice; in the name of the United States of America.

The vote for Grant was declared unanimous amid loud continued cheering, which was intensified by the low tones of the French and the French length portrait of the general, bearing the legend, "March him." Then followed songs, revues, and a white dove released into the hall.

That symbolism was to find further expression in the concluding sentence of Grant's formal acceptance of the nomination. "Let us have peace," he said. "The war is over. Let us have peace. Grant and peace or Blair and revolution."

Before the canvass was over some influential Democrats demanded that Lincoln's name be withdrawn as a candidate or at least take a back seat in the campaign. Up to this time he had done most of the stumping, while Seymour remained relatively inactive. It was the custom with most Presidential candidates of that day. Then Blair was silenced, and during the closing hours of the convention Seymour took the stump with vigor.

Seymour was a strong and able figure and probably the best man his party could have nominated, but his record was not only opposed since Lincoln's war policies made his record vulnerable to Republican attack. The fact that he was somewhat bald, with a receding line of hair over his ears, rendered him also a singularly apt figure for biting caricature by the most brilliant of contemporary cartoonists, Thomas Nast of Harper's Weekly. Nast invariably pictured Seymour with his horns of hair standing up straight like wild birds, which gave him a satirical appearance. Upon occasion the caricaturist made this conception more vivid by adding horns and a tail.

Considerable excitement was caused during the campaign by the South by emergence of a mysterious white-robed and masked order, the Ku Klux Klan, which, it was alleged, operated in the name of the Republican vote. The Republicans countered with activities of another secret order, the Loyal League, which operated effectively in unarming and unarming the colored voters. At the North, also, Republican marching clubs of Boys in Blue, uniformed similarly to Lee's army, were active. In the name of Abraham Lincoln, held sprit torch-light processions.

Alleged irregularities in the south, where all these things were in operation, no longer were seriously considered. The uncompromising position of the chief justice on that issue probably was the reason for the Republican nomination to oppose Grant.

So that difficult campaign road went to another man, who not only did not want to undertake it but at first vigorously refused. He, though, was a life-long Republican and a man against the idol of the hour in a contest that was almost sure to prove hopeless.

The Grant-Seymour Campaign

The Democratic ticket of 1868, in 1864, represented a combination of conservative East with radical West, and the leading place on the ticket went to one who had not actively sought it but was drafted after a protracted deadlock.

Horatio Seymour, the wartime governor of New York, who was permanent chairman of the Democratic national convention at Tammany hall 90 years ago, strenuously opposed nomination of himself for President. Just as Chairman Thomas J. Wash of Montana four years ago in the same city opposed his own nomination for the vice presidency.

Seymour could have had the support of his own state, New York, from the first, had he wanted it, but he persisted in refusing to be considered a candidate when his friends desired to put him forward for the nomination. The convention, when North Carolina and Virginia had cast their votes for him, the chairman peremptorily rejected the idea of his own candidacy.

The large plenty of offers eager for the prize. Though President Andrew Johnson had been elected by the Republicans and was in the midst of his second term, he was encouraged to believe his prospects of being made the Democratic standard-bearer were good. Likewise Chief Justice Roger Taney, discovering that he could not by any chance be the Republican nominee, fished eagerly from the Supreme court bench for the Democratic nomination.

But "Gentleman George" Pendleton of Ohio, father of the "Ohio Idea" for greenback currency inflation, was the leading candidate, having the full support of his own state, Young Greenback" was the sobriquet bestowed upon him by his supporters, who were at the convention in force.

Then in a dramatic moment on the third day his staunchest supporters, the entire Ohio delegation, switched their votes on the twenty-second ballot to Seymour. The result was a surprising Pendleton lead, on the first 15 ballots, and probably would have got the nomination but for the two-thirds rule.

NEW DAY DAWNS FOR DAIRY FARMER

Dairymen of the United States produce the dairy products equivalent to the requirements of the nation for about 365 days a year, says the October 15 Oklahoma Farmer-Stockman. All we need to import is enough for two days. These facts make it evident that too great a stimulation of production would result in overproduction.

The fact is that the dairy industry in this country has reached a stage of development where its future must be carefully considered if we are to avoid trouble.

High production per animal should be the constant aim of the dairyman. In the United States the average production of all cows is about 4,500 pounds of milk a year with more than a third of the 22,000,000 cows producing at a loss. In contrast the cows in the dairy herd improvement association in 1927 averaged 7,410 pounds of milk with 293 pounds of butterfat.

The greatest progress in the dairy industry lies not in increasing the number of dairy cows but in increasing the production per cow. Superior records are attributable to closer culling, better breeding, and feeding. If all our dairy cows produced as much as those on test in the associations, we could dispose of one-third of them and still maintain our present supply of dairy products at an enormous saving in feed, stable room and labor. Only 2 per cent of the dairy cows are under test, and the day will come when at least 10 times as many will be tested.

The weeding out of scrub bulls is even more important than disposing of low-producing cows, and low-producing pure breeds should be weeded out as surely as scrubs.

FULL-GROWN PULLETS ALWAYS BEST LAYERS
 Utopian schemes may or may not interest poultrymen, but an uncommon situation exists this fall which is almost ideal for their industry. This is brought about by high egg prices, with the trend still upward, and by bumper crops which will cause low feed prices.
 "As a result of the unusually excellent prospects for poultry products farmers will want more than ever to have their pullets fully matured and well finished before the birds start to lay this fall," declares J. B. Hayes, extension poultry specialist at the College of Agriculture, University of Wisconsin.
 "It is almost impossible to have the pullets too fat at the start of the laying season, and if they are not in good heavy condition the young birds cannot stand up under continuous egg production. Small and thin pullets never make good winter layers. If the birds start to lay too soon they will seldom be fully feathered or full grown."
 The grain feed should be the main part of the ration, he explains, until the birds are brought into the house, and if they are not well finished at that time grain should be used liberally in connection with the laying mash. While the time of putting the birds in winter quarters will depend on the maturity of the pullets, it is always desirable to have them in the laying houses two weeks or a month in advance of the laying period.
 Mr. Hayes stressed three conditions which make the forecast for poultry-keeping unusually favorable. These are: number of eggs in storage is low; movements of eggs from storage to the market was early this year and bumper crops of all grains will cause low feed prices.—Farm and Ranch.

THE BAR-RAIL INSTEP
 A drunkard of long standing has been reformed by an operation which removed a bone that was pressing against the brain. The Detroit News also reports a number of cures effected by the removal of a brass rail that was pressing against the foot.—Kansas City Star.
 A village parson's daughter eloped in her father's clothes.
 And next day the village Blatter came out with an account of the elopement, headed: "Flees in Father's Pants."
FAIRY STORY
 Once upon a time a General Manager called in his Office Boy and said: "Young man, I'm going to fire you. You don't shoot craps, smoke, cuss, go to ball games, or flirt with my stenographer. If I keep you here you'll get my job."

Ford Production
 It is understood now that Ford is on a basis of production that is turning out 5,500 cars per day. This production will be rapidly increased to a maximum of 10,000 per day by the first of the year.
 In addition, it was announced over the stock ticker yesterday that every Ford assembly plant in the world is in operation. These foreign Ford assembly plants are of especial importance to the automobile industry of America. This means that Ford is again pioneering, breaking into new fields in a way which will doubtless help popularize American automobiles in every foreign country in the world.
 Henry Ford is an industrial revolutionist. Without assuming to give him entire credit for ideas which have become generally accepted in industry, it is nevertheless a fact that he stands as the greatest personal example of the new ideal industry, which is to give the people a thing that is good at a price and let the profits take care of themselves. All industry, particularly those successful in the automobile field, have come to the way of thinking in which Henry Ford was the leader in thought and act.
 To get this point clear, let us go back a little. When the automobile industry was young, all of the conservative manufacturers sought to make profits by curtailing output. This resulted in the formation of a clique which acquired the Selden patents covering the gasoline engine. It was the purpose of the combination of manufacturers to restrict each manufacturer under patent licenses to the production of a maximum of 5,000 automobiles per year.
 There was the old way of developing industry. It was to stifle competition, to get good prices for automobiles by not making enough to supply the demand.
 Henry Ford personally contested this principle by taking the case to the highest court, where it was broken as being in restraint of trade. This marked the beginning of mass production in automobile manufacture. This released Henry Ford to carry out his ideal of production at a price in uniformity and not only marked the beginning of Ford's enormous success, but made money for every other substantial automobile manufacturer in spite of his own efforts to the contrary.
 Ford took the leadership in mass production, in producing in unity and quantity without respect to competition, and we have seen every other successful automobile producer follow exactly in his footsteps.
 Now another point. Ford made the automobile a democratic institution. He acted on the theory that the automobile was a utility and should be produced for the use of the masses of the people, while the other manufacturers went on the theory that it was a luxury of restricted saleability. Suppose the other manufacturers had waded out. The driving of an automobile today would have been prohibited by laws of prejudice in many localities, and good roads as we now have them would not have received the popular support necessary for their construction.
 We repeat, Henry Ford alone is entitled to the credit for having made the automobile a popular institution; a democratic institution. That old model T was sure a democrat and it caught hold of the people with a popular grip. It was the medium through which our favorable uniform laws for the operation of automobiles have been put into effect, and we have good roads penetrating into every state in every corner of the Union. These are the things which, above all else, made the automobile industry the great industry that it is today.
 We do not look upon him as a superman. We do look upon him, however, as one of the great leaders in industrial thought and act—a man with the right idea who is entitled to credit in this respect because his right idea has added to health, happiness, contentment and prosperity of millions of people, directly and indirectly.—Wall Street Messenger.

WANDERING TEXAS HAT TRAVELS TO FAR PLACES
 Aberdeen, Scotland, Oct. 14.—A wandering cowboy hat from Texas has reached Aberdeen, somewhat the worse for wear, but still going strong.
 The perambulating hat started on its wandering from Dallas, Texas, more than a year ago, and has journeyed through the United States and Canada and across the Atlantic. Battered and punctured, it is adorned with tags bearing greetings from one town to another, lines of doggerel and directions keep the hat from moving.
 Wherever the hat goes it must be carried as a personal belonging of the traveler to whom it is entrusted, and must not be posted. It traveled to Great Britain in the motorship King James and went north with a woman tourist.
 C. T. Chester and family, of near Fort Worth, were visiting friends northeast of Muleshoe last week-end.

How To Mark Ballot

Many inquiries have been received as to the ballot in the November elections. Many people have never voted in a Presidential election, and some have the impression that the names of the Presidential candidates appear on the ballot. Some weeks ago the Journal ran "A Lesson in Civics" but it seems that many have forgotten this lesson. For the benefit of the ones who wish to be better informed about the November election we are giving you this lesson again.

The President is not elected by popular vote. The names of the Presidential candidates do not appear upon the ballots used in the Presidential election. When you go to the polls in November, you will not find the names of Herbert Hoover and Al Smith on the ballot. You will not vote directly, technically speaking, for either. You will only vote for the PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS.

Under our Federal Constitution, each state is entitled to as many Presidential Electors as it has Senators and Representatives in Congress. Texas, for instance, has two Senators and 18 Representatives in Congress. Texas, therefore, will have 20 votes in the electoral college for President. Each state has two Senators. Each State has its size or population, but the number of representatives depends upon the population. For instance, New Mexico has one representative in Congress and New York has 33. Each State has two Senators. New Mexico, therefore, has three electoral votes and New York has 47.

Each party elects its Electors in each state. For instance, in Texas, the Democrats have selected the names of 20 Democrats to appear upon the official ballot. November as Presidential Electors. Likewise, the Republicans have selected the names of 20 Republicans. There is also on the ticket this year, the Communist party, Socialists party. These tickets will appear in parallel columns on the same ballot. Any person desiring to vote for Al Smith will scratch the names of the Electors of the other parties. The same applies if voting for Hoover, or any of the other candidates.

The names of the Democratic and Republican candidates for U. S. Senator, Congress, Governor, and other State, district, county and precinct offices will likewise appear in the Democratic and Republican columns respectively. Any one may vote a straight Democratic ticket, if he or she desires, in which case he or she will scratch the entire Republican column. He may vote a straight Republican ticket, if he or she so desires, in which case he will scratch the entire Democratic ticket. Or he or she may vote a mixed ticket, if so desired, in which case he or she will leave such names in either column as he or she may desire to vote for and will scratch the other names.

If the Democratic Electors receive more votes than the Republican Electors, the Democratic Electors will cast 20 votes in the electoral college for Al Smith for President. If the Republican electors receive more votes than the Democratic electors, then the Republican electors will cast the 20 votes for Herbert Hoover for President. The candidate who receives a majority of the Electoral votes will be elected President of the United States.

The Electoral votes are cast in the following manner: The successful electors in each state meet in January following the election, in the state capitol, and cast the vote for President. They prepare a certificate showing the name of the Presidential candidate for whom they voted. One copy of the certificate is mailed to the President of the Senate and one copy is taken by one of the electors in person, selected for that purpose, and delivered to the President of the Senate. In February, the Senate canvasses the returns and announces the results, declaring that person elected who has received a majority of all the electoral votes.

"HUMANS"

A woman's piercing shriek suddenly startled a party of surveyors at dinner in a North Virginia forest. 'Twas a calm, sunny day in 1750. The cries were repeated in quick succession. The men sprang through the undergrowth to learn their cause.

"Oh, sir," exclaimed the woman as she caught sight of a youth of eighteen, withal a man in stature and bearing; "You will surely do something for me! Make these friends release me. My boy—my poor boy is drowning, and they will not let me go."

It would be madness; she will jump into the river, said one of those holding her, "and the rapids would dash her to pieces in a moment."

Throwing off his coat, the youth sprang into the water, scanned the whirling currents and spotted a child's dress. In a moment he was in the rapids.

"Thank God, he will save my child," cried the mother, and all rushed to the brink of the precipice. "There he is, oh my dear boy."

But all eyes followed the youth, who with strong heart and hope, was in the midst of whirling eddies far below. It seemed he would be dashed against rocks in the whirlpools capped by angry foam. Twice the child went out of sight, appearing again near a dangerous part of the river. Three times near the grasp of the child, strong eddies tossed him from young surveyor redoubles his effort and presently a strong, right arm holds the child aloft; but cries of horror arose as man and child went over the falls to vanish below in seething waters.

"There they are," the mother shouted a moment later. "See they are safe." Rescuer and rescued emerged from the boiling vortex—the child senseless but alive—both drawn by willing hands from the water's edge.

"The blessings of thousands besides mine will attend you," said the grateful mother to the strong young man. And these "blessings of the thousands" came, for the strong young rescuer was George Washington. The young surveyor dared—and won.

"The Great Sarah" Bernhardt famous actress, once said: "I have never played 'Phaedra' without fainting or spitting blood; and after the fourth tableau of 'Theodora' in which I kill Marcellus, I am in such a nervous state that I return to my dressing room sobbing. If I do not weep I have a hysterical fit which is much more disagreeable to those around me, and more dangerous to the vases and other things near at hand."

Madame Bernhardt made this statement in support of the power of the mind over the body. The late and beloved actress always threw herself completely into the terrible but awe-inspiring realism of her roles.

Thomas A. Edison's first phonograph would not register the letter "s" as the first part of a word. Edison described his repeated efforts to make the phonograph reproduce an aspirated sound, and added: "From eighteen to twenty hours a day for the last seven months I have worked on this single word 'specia.' I said into the phonograph, 'specia, specia, specia,' but the instrument responded with 'pecia, pecia, pecia.' It was enough to drive one mad. But I held firm, and I have succeeded."

Never did man better demonstrate the valuable lesson involved in three words, "work and wait."

Once when Marshal Ney was going into battle, looking down at his knees which were smiting together, he said "You may well shake; you would shake worse yet if you knew where I am going to take you." That was Ney's type of grit.

A Baltimore woman lost a valuable diamond bracelet and supposed it stolen from her cloak. Years later she washed the steps of the Peabody Institute, pondering how to get money to buy food. She cut up an old, ragged cloak to make a hood, when, lo! in the lining of the cloak she discovered the diamond bracelet. During all her poverty she was worth $15,000, but did not know it.

NEARBY AND YONDER By T. T. Masey

A Canine Cemetery

THE village of Hartsville, some twenty miles north of New York City, boasts a cemetery for dogs—the first in America, established in 1894. This resting place for departed aristocrats of dogdom comprises about five acres, is laid out in winding walks, planted with shrub and trees and contains several hundred interments.

Single plots measuring two by three feet, sell for $24; the operating company will furnish caskets a price ranging from $10 to $25. Cement vaults may be purchased if desired, prices varying from $75 to $100; interment charges range from $2 to $5. Many beautiful monuments—some with inscriptions carrying a photograph of the departed dog, quite expensive, one is said to have cost $1,300 for the grounds.

The opening company seeds the graves, plants flowers and keeps it in perfect order. Many of the graves of these departed pets are regularly watered with bonquets of freshly cut flowers.

The Largest Gold Mine

BACK in the mid-seventies a mad gold rush to the Black Hills of South Dakota—that region over which the Indians tribes, the Crow and the Sioux, fought desperately until the latter won in a final clash near the mouth and it finally passed by treaty to the custody of George S. Gold—the attention of the universe.

As a matter of fact, the largest producing gold mine in the United States and the one from which has come the bulk of South Dakota's production, is located at Lead in the heart of the Black Hills. It has produced more than 2,400 feet in depth and it contains upwards of 90 miles of tunnels, drifts and crosscuts. This great Homestake mine has produced more than 2300 ounces worth of the yellow metal, continues to produce it at the rate of $3,000,000 per annum and still has something like 13,000,000 tons of ore blocked out and remaining in the mine. As a side line, this mine also produces considerable silver—$200,000 worth, for instance, valued at approximately $5,000,000, in 1923.

Bonsuccess Market

JUST as Montreal—which the Indians dubbed Hochelaga and the French explorers changed to Montreal—was the site of the first settlement in the month which rises high behind it with its domes and spires and historic background impresses one as being a different sort of a city, so also does ancient Bonsuccess market there smack strongly of other days and give off distinctly French-Canadian atmosphere.

The annual attraction of this quaint square of ancient land springs from extraordinary gatherings of queerly assorted provincial farmers and others who assemble to barter strange wares on market days. In addition to the customary array of fowl, hares, there also come all manner of homemade and hand-made articles such as native-grown tobaccos, old-fashioned, hand-woven rag carpets, needles, cloth buttons, dices and odd nicknacks. Justing through this good-natured crowd listening to the babbling warbling of the peculiar gestures among the barterers as the trading progresses and seeing on the numerous types of characters affords an experience that is both interesting and entirely out of the ordinary.

Montreal's oldest church—Notre-Dame de Bonsuccess—1773 resting on the same foundation as that the city had, was founded in 1677 and is one of the oldest and oldest churches with the market and vies with it for attention. There is a classic statue of the Virgin seated with the messenger of revelations, pictures to old men who follow the son has been the patron saint of French sailors in the port of Montreal for more than 250 years.

Improved Uniform International Sunday School Lesson

Lesson for October 28 PAUL'S LAST JOURNEY TO JERUSALEM

LESSON TEXT—Acts 20:1-31:17. GOLDEN TEXT—Remember the words of the Lord Jesus how he said, it is more blessed to give than to receive.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Paul Tells His Friends Good-by. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Our Pastor Does for Us. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Paul, Shepherd of the Churches.

1.—Paul's Visit to Greece and Miletus (20:1-10). Two incidents marked this trip: 1. The Jews laid wait for him (vv. 1-5). This plot obliged him to retrace his steps through Macedonia instead of choosing a more rapid sea voyage. 2. Fellowship with the disciples at Troas (vv. 6-10). He met with them around the table of the Lord and spoke words of encouragement. While preaching here, Eutychus in a deep sleep, fell from a window and was killed. Paul restored his life, thus giving to the disciples a sign of divine power which was greatly needed at that time.

2. The present state of things (vv. 22-27). Having reviewed his ministry, he now points out clearly, (1) His immediate purpose was to go to Jerusalem (v. 22). (2) Bonds and afflictions were to increase his pain (v. 23). Despite these he went forward with undaunted courage, knowing that God was leading him. (3) His fixed purpose (v. 24). He was determined to complete his ministry at whatever cost—even giving up his life. (4) His consciousness of obligation discharged (v. 25-27). Knowing that they should see his face no more, he called them to record that he had not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God, therefore was free from the blood of all men.

3. His charge to the elders (vv. 28-35). (1) The ground of (v. 28). The flock for which they must care was purchased by the precious blood of Jesus and they had received their commission from the Lord. (2) The impending evils (vv. 29, 30). Evil teachers would arise from their own number. Glibious wolves would devour the flock. The most deadly foes of the church are those ministers and Sunday-school teachers who are unfaithful to their trust. (3) Incentives to faithfulness (vv. 31-35). His own example of watching night and day for three years is held up before them.

III. Paul Tarrying Seven Days at Tyre (21:1-6). His destination was Jerusalem. He was pressing hitherward with all speed, but on account of the unloading of the ship he was obliged to wait at Tyre for seven days. During this delay he searched out the disciples who lived in that city. While here certain disciples said Paul should not go to Jerusalem. The information that these disciples received by the Spirit was doubtless the same as that given to Agabus (vv. 10, 11). Agabus told exactly what the Spirit said which sets right what the Tyrian disciples seemed to say. We should give heed to prophesying, but should prove their utterances. Let all who claim to speak with the Holy Spirit give the exact words so that they can be subjected to legitimate tests. The same Spirit which showed to these disciples that suffering awaited Paul, revealed unto him the same suffering and sent him forward into it.

IV. Paul Tarrying in Philip's House (vv. 7-14). Resuming their journey they paused briefly at Ptolemais to greet the brethren there, after which they went to Caesarea. Here they took up their abode with Philip who had so successfully wrought in the early days of the church. His four daughters doubtless are mentioned to show that the Spirit's gifts are not confined to one sex. V. Paul at Jerusalem (vv. 15-17). The brethren at Jerusalem gladly received him and his companions. Paul's lodging place was with an old disciple.

Little Things Little foxes that spoil the vineyards: Little communions with the world, disobedience to the still small voice in little things; little indulgences of the flesh to the neglect of duty; little strokes of policy; doing evil in little things that good may come; and the beauty, and the fruitfulness of the vine are sacrificed.—J. IMPORTANT TO MOTHERS OF UNDERWEIGHT CHILDREN

"Two Tablespoons of Karo in a Glass of Milk doubles its Food Value!"

THIS statement is made by one of America's greatest child specialists.

"Karo," says this physician, "is not only a delicious sweet, but the ideal food for the underweight child. Karo can be added to the diet without spoiling the appetite for other foods—and it improves the taste of milk."

Karo has a high energy value—there are 120 calories per ounce in it—almost twice the energy value of eggs and lean beef, weight for weight.

Further—Karo is easily digested—giving children muscular energy immediately.

Serve the kiddies plenty of Karo in milk, on cereals, on sliced bread—and watch their weight improve.

Economy—compare Karo, pound for pound, with the price of other staple foods. Isn't Karo economical?

What's Doing In West Texas

A new school house at Allmon embracing three class rooms, an auditorium, teachers office and library, and costing $14,000 for the building, and $1,500 for the equipment has been turned over to the school district by the contractors.

Plaintiff is to have a new eight story Hilton Hotel on the corner of Sixth and Austin streets. Construction will begin this week, and is expected to continue for six months, at which time the building will be completed.

Big Springs is to have a new church. The Church of Christ denomination is to be the owner of the church, and will build the place of worship on South Main Street, of buff colored brick veneer at a cost of 15,000.

The first 4-H Club for Boys and Girls has been organized in Turkey for the school children. Miss Ruby Adams, county demonstration agent organized the club and will meet with its members twice each month.

Machinery for the laundry being installed by E. H. Turner in Rotan is being set as it arrives. This is to be one of the most modern equipped small laundries in the country, and capable of doing first class work.

The Coleman Gas and Oil Co. is making a $40,000 addition in the form of a six inch welded line laid from the city to the Santa Fe junction and a mile south. Another reservoir is to be constructed to the 10 inch trunk line of the Lone Star Company.

Approximately 4000 head of spring lambs have been shipped from Farrisworth lately. Six carloads of lambs were shipped by E. W. Biggers, and five carloads by J. W. Rogers. The farmers in this section are finding this a profitable sideline.

Giles Gardner, champion wheat raiser who lives near Snyder has received two ounces of drought resisting wheat, namely, Nonpar, Novawa and Gleywas Early Wheat from the Experimental Farm in Perth Australia for propagation purposes.

The Fifth Annual meeting of the Texas State Teachers Association will meet in San Antonio on November 30 with a heavy bill of well known and interesting speakers on the program, including Dr. Rollo G. Bergolds of Teachers College, Columbia University.

Building permits in Lamesa have exceeded a quarter of a million dollars since the first of June this year. There is a great demand for rental houses. Plenty of labor to take care of the building now in progress is available.

W. P. Weaver, county agent of Mills county, states that he will be available to any group of farmers in the community who want to learn tax-raising, if they will secure a level and select leaders. Farmers of Mullins are taking advantage of the offer.

The $125,000 bond issue for the purpose of building a new court house in Callahan county was carried by a 125 majority recently. The new temple of justice will be erected in Baird.

MOLASSES FOR CHICKENS

Recent tests by poultry investigators at several experiment stations indicate that cheap grades of cane molasses may be used to good advantage in poultry rations, according to the Oklahoma Farmer-Stockman of October 15.

Considerable work on the value of molasses for growing chicks and laying hens has been carried on by A. R. Winter at the Ohio State university poultry plant. His efforts show excellent results from the addition of a small percent of molasses to the regular rations.

With laying hens, the substitution of 5 percent of cane molasses for an equal amount of corn in the ration resulted in better egg production, less mortality and better hatchability of the eggs produced. Hens receiving the molasses consumed more water, and it was noted that the molasses appeared to have a laxative effect. Tests indicate that five percent of molasses seemed to give as good results at higher amounts, and when the molasses was increased to more than 10 percent, the hen suffered diarrhea.

Rations containing 5 percent of molasses produced slightly better growth and less mortality than similar rations with the molasses, when fed to baby chicks.

Several commercial feed companies are beginning to include molasses on their poultry rations. It is claimed that the cost is no greater when five pounds of molasses is substituted for five pounds of corn, than when more corn is used.

One advantage of the molasses feed claimed by the feed companies is that the finer particles of feed are held together by the molasses, thus preventing waste.
