When I was ranching west of Sanderson in the 1990s, I had a friend and neighbor named Temple Stumberg who ranched farther west in the House Top Mountains in Brewster County.

Now I had gone to high school with Temple back on the 1940s at Sanderson so we were not newly acquainted.

During this period ranch labor was a nonexistent.

It Happened Out West

The "Chotas," the U.S. Border Patrol, kept us from working Mexicans. even though we managed to get a few days in before getting caught.

We both had a regular hand which made working stock possible.

I had a full time Mexican cowboy while Temple had and elderly local on his payroll. This made a crew of four to round-up a pasture. When forced to do things short handed you sometimes accomplished it.

Back to our original story.

We were going to round up a pasture on the back side of the mountain. This required us hauling our horses to the Longfellow line camp, where we would meet and have coffee before daylight.

Good plan! Then the human factor became involved in our story.

On the day of the planned work, I got my man up, we loaded our horses and drove to the Longfellow line camp. We arrived about 4:30 a.m. to find Temple and his man already there.

A word about Temple's foreman, his name was Hewitt Baugess, he was a World War II veteran about 70-plus years-old but in excellent health and mental ability.

As we entered, one hollered, "the coffee is on the stove", the other hollered, "the sugar is on the table."

Being among friends I had no thoughts of "hanky-panky"

I got my mug of coffee, stopped at the table and put in a spoon full of sugar and stirred it.

With out tasting my coffee, I walked into the front of the room and took a big gulp of coffee. I almost threw up as someone had swapped the sugar bowl for the salt bowl. I had got a cup of salted coffee.

After the laughter quit, everyone denied being the guilty party. All day, one would ride up and ask how I liked salted coffee.

Slices of Life

By Jill Pertler

There isn't much that makes my husband nervous. Heck, he's raised four teenagers, which included teaching three of them (so far) to drive. Anyone who can do that can do anything. Or practically anything. I'm confident in him. He isn't. Not always. Not last weekend. Not when it comes to new chores involving a new boat.

Summer's waning and in my part of town that means one thing: time to take the boat out of the water.

We've been lucky boat owners for more than a decade. Except this year things were a bit different. We traded in our boat for a pontoon. A pontoon is larger and more formidable than a regular boat, so we were unsure how complex and arduous the task of getting it out of the water and into storage might be. At least my husband was concerned. He was the one who had to complete the demanding parts of the job. I was mostly responsible for emotional support and wiping down the vinyl seats.

The first step in getting a boat out of the water is getting the boat out of the water. This is done by backing a trailer into the water so you are able to drive the boat up onto it. Maneuvering the boat and trailer into their respective positions can be a challenge resulting in propeller dings, boat scratches and wet feet. In the past we've experienced all three.

I'm happy to report our current encounter included none of the above. Whew. Our toons slid out of the water like they were greased in butter.

After winterizing the motor and cleaning the interior and exterior, we were ready for the next dreaded step in the process. We (by we I obviously mean my husband) had to pull the boat to a storage garage and back it into its assigned spot. The door to the storage space is tall. Our pontoon easily fit underneath. That's the good news.

The other news relates to width. The difference between our boat and the doorway was about a foot, leaving six-inches of leeway on either side. Six inches is not much when you are moving a 22-foot boat backwards up

Heard Around Town

Did you ever wonder why God calls out flawed people to be his servants? The answer is simple. It's because flawed people are the only kind of people there are in the world.

an upward-sloped driveway. It was like threading a needle, except instead of thread we had a boat that weighed more than a ton.

Luckily we had friends helping us.

One told my husband to go right. The other left. Slowly, slowly he backed his way into the garage. It took some doing, and about 10 minutes of maneuvering (which felt like seven hours) but we got the job an done (again, by we I mean my husband).

By the end of it all I was out of breath and sweating. This had been no small feat. We detached the hitch from our SUV to pull the trailer out from under the pontoon and then reattached it again and drove home to drop our friends off before turning right around to return the rented trailer and call it done for the season.

The trailer rental place was a couple miles down the road. The finish line was in sight. We both breathed a collective (albeit premature) sigh of Our adventure wasn't over yet. Just as we turned from our driveway onto the road we heard a solid thump from behind the vehicle. My husband put his foot on the brake. We exited to find the trailer had unhitched itself, leaving a disconnect between the trailer and SUV.

Could the day get any longer? Before we had the chance to react to our circumstances, fate stepped in. In a good way. A nice bearded man in a pick-up truck came upon us and asked if we needed help (as if that was even in question). The nice man proceeded to help my husband push and prod and lift the trailer so it fit snugly on the hitch ball while I continued to provide the ever-important emotional support.

They got the boat re-hitched and after a couple of profuse and quick thank-yous, the nice man was gone. We never even got his name. It's comforting to know that in modern times good Samaritans still exist.

After that, things went without a hitch. We got the trailer returned and have vowed not to think about pontoons or trailers until next spring - when it will be time to complete the whole task in reverse and put the boat back in the water.

Can't wait.

When he's not tending his store on Route 66 in Amarillo, Crocodile Lyle is probably taking some New Zealanders along America's Main Street.

"I've been a Route 66 guide for several years. I rent a bunch of Mustang convertibles

Rolling in Chicago for my Along groups from down under and we travel the whole by Tumbleweed Smith length of the highway, from Chicago to San Diego. It takes about three weeks. I tell 'em stories along the way and some of them are true." Crocodile was a scout leader for thirty-five years. A scout gave him the nickname Crocodile and it stuck. His real first name is Bob. He is an ex-Marine who saw duty In Viet Nam. He grew up in the panhandle town of Booker where his dad had a car dealership.

"It's in the northeast corner of the panhandle. It's three miles from Oklahoma and forty-five miles from Kansas. It's not really the end of the earth but you can see it from there."

When I visited him in his store and studio in the old San Jacinto district I told him it was hard to find a parking place nearby.

"There's one reason for that," he said. "It's Route 66. There's a lot of antique shops around here and locals come down to go to the junk stores. One of them told me he buys junk and sells it for antiques. There are four art galleries down in this area."

Crock is an artist.

"Well I'm an abstract expressionist. That's my first choice. I do landscapes, still life, figure studies, but my first love is abstract. And I make mosaics from paint chips off the cars at Cadillac Ranch.

"My latest claim to fame is making jewelry out of those paint chips. They're four or five inches thick and I thin them down. They fall off on the ground. Kids knock them off 'cause they crawl all over them and the wind blows them off. I just pick them up and recycle them. They estimate nearly a million people a year go out there and spray paint the cars. It's weird, man.

"I mean people from all over the world come to Amarillo and one of the M rules is you've got to go to Cadillac ranch. And they're on motorcycles, in Mustangs, Corvettes, and old cars. They're out there."

He's been making the jewelry nearly three years.

"It has put me on the map. I now have it in thirty-three states, eight European countries, Canada, China, Japan, Australia and New Zealand. I make rings, bracelets, necklaces, earrings and all kinds of stuff. I'm not getting rich but I'm paying the rent."

He used to write about Route 66 for a monthly publication. One story was about him and his son riding their motorcycles the entire length of the highway.

Upgrades in Radiology Department Illustrate Commitment to Quality, Hometown Care at LMH

Lillian M. Hudspeth Memorial Hospital has long been dedicated to providing high-quality healthcare that's close to home.

That commitment starts with the quality of its employees and providers and extends to its services and technology.

Take Hanna Blesing, RT(R), Radiology Director, as an example. Hanna started working at LMH in the business office during high school.

After completing her associate's degree, she returned to LMH in the radiology department as an X-ray technologist and was eventually promoted to radiology director. As Blesing likes to say, "the hospital is my home."

"I love working at this hospital," Blesing said. "Our goal is to offer the best care for our friends and neighbors, along with the latest imaging technology. The imaging staff is very passionate about what we do and we're excited about many of the advancements we're making to improve care for the community."

The advancements, according to Blesing, are no small matter.

LMH has recently invested in substantial upgrades in the imaging department, with new CT, ultrasound and X-ray technology.

The new CT, a 128slice scanner from Siemens Healthineers, replaces a 64-slice system.

This is a significant upgrade for the hospital, and it's important; the more "slices," the more detailed the image, and that helps physicians make a more accurate diagnosis.

Another area of improvement compared to the previous CT scanner is the scanner's low-dose technology, which delivers impressive radiation dose reduction made possible by using Siemens Healthineers' most advanced ADMIRE iterative reconstruction.*

"Everyone is exposed to natural radiation in daily life," Blesing said. "Medical radiation exposure is a concern for many patients, and rightfully so. Our new CT scanner has special applications to help reduce the amount of radiation a patient receives during an exam."

With such high-tech equipment so close to home, Sonora-area residents don't need to travel far for highly detailed imaging exams.

That eases the minds of patients, as well as physicians. For example, according to Dr. Michael Blanc, an interventional cardiologist who sees LMH patients each Wednesday, patients are lucky to have access to such advanced radiology services.

"Few hospitals of any size match LMH's diagnostic imaging resources," Dr. Blanc said. "A significant investment has been made in the technology, and I feel as confident sending my patients here as I do to facilities in San Angelo, San Antonio or elsewhere."

According to CEO
John Graves, LMH is proud to invest in the latest imaging technology to better serve area patients.

"Our goal is to offer advanced technology with the quality of care our community expects and deserves," Graves said. "I want patients to know that they can request to have their doctors and specialists refer them to LMH, and we're going to 'wow' you with excellent care."

A provider referral is required for many imaging services, including CT and MRI. Comprehensive imaging services offered at LMH include: CT, MRI, bone density, digital mammography, digital X-ray, ultrasound and echocardiograms.

To learn more about imaging services or to set up an appointment, call 325-387-1171.

To help women have a better understanding of breast and cervical cancer and the best way to prevent these cancers, Texas A&M AgriLife Extension Service in Sutton County is hosting a Friend to Friend party on October 24, 2017, from 10:00 a.m. to 11:00 a.m., at the Sutton County Civic Center in Sonora.

The party will include a presentation on breast and cervical cancer by a medical professional.

Additionally, there will be a discussion of the obstacles women may encounter when trying to access mammograms and Pap tests locally.

Participants will have an opportunity to visit with exhibitors that conduct these screenings, and their professional staff will also be available to help participants with scheduling screening appointments.

Moreover, information will be available on how those who qualify can access financial assistance if the cost of the screening prevents them from getting a screening.

Cervical cancer is the easiest female cancer to prevent.

A Pap test, which screens for cervical cancer, is key to early detection as well as prevention. It is one of the most reliable and effective cancer screening tests available.

With a Pap test, doctor's look for any cell changes on the cervix that may develop into cervical cancer if not treated appropriately.

For this reason, it is recommended that women begin Pap tests as early as age 21.

So, who should be screened and when should they be screened?

According to the American Cancer Society's guidelines, women between ages 21 and 29 should have a Pap test every 3 years. A doctor may also suggest an HPV test if the results of a routine Pap are abnormal.

For women between the ages of 30 and 65, a Pap test plus and HPV test are recommended every 5 years, but it is also okay tchave a Pap test alone every 3 years. If a woman is over age 65 and has had regular cervical cancer testing with normal results, she should not be tested for cervical caner.

Once testing stops, it should not le started again.

However, vomen with history of a serous cervical pre-cancer hould continue to be tsted for at least 20 years fter that diagnosis, even itesting continues past ag 65.

If a woman's terus and cervix were rmoved for reasons not relted to cervical cancer an she does not have a hispry of cervical cancer d serious pre-cancer, she iso should not be tested

Women with a hitory of serious pre-canceivili need to visit with the doctor about their screning needs.

Texas A&M AgriLie invites all women to join together for a morning of fellowship, refreshments and learning about women's health during the Friend to Friend party.

Hegar distributes revenue

Texas Comptroller Glenn Hegar on Oct. 11 announced he would send cities, counties, transit systems and special purpose taxing districts $660.4 million in local sales tax allocations for the month of October, 1.6 percent more than in October 2016.

Allocations are based on sales made in August by businesses that report tax monthly.

In other news, Hegar on Oct. 10 announced his office's release of the Certification Revenue Estimate for fiscal biennium 2018-2019.

The Comptroller's Office expects revenue available for general spending in 2018-19 to total about $107.33 billion, an amount that would support the $107.23 billion in general-purpose spend ing called for by the 85th Legislature and result in a final balance available for certification of $94 million.

Market turbulence. energy price fluctuations, potential changes in national economic policy and the eventual cost of Hurricane Harvey contribute uncertainty to this estimate, Hegar said. Texas is in the early stages of storm recovery, and full impacts to the state's economy and revenues have only begun to take shape and likely will change in the coming months, Hegar stressed.

Focus: school bus safety

With National School Bus Safety Week being observed Oct. 16-20, the Texas Department of Public Safety urges Texans to comply with laws prohibiting drivers from passing school buses.

It is illegal to pass any school bus that is stopped and operating a visual signal, either flashing red lights or a stop sign. Drivers who violate the law could face fines as much as $1,250.

"Motorists should always be alert and practice safe driving habits when traveling near school buses or anywhere school children gather, including bus stops," said DPS Director Steven McCraw. "Texas parents can rest assured that DPS will not tolerate those who recklessly endanger children by ignoring the law."

More than 42,000 school buses transport approximately 1.5 million Texas children every school day, according to an estimate by the Texas Education Agency.

AG cheers EPA law repeal

Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton on Oct. 10 praised a decision by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to repeal the Clean Power Plan, an Obama-era regulation that Texas, West Virginia and 22 other states opposed.

"The Clean Power Plan," Paxton said, "would have subjected Americans to higher electricity costs and could have weakened the nation's power grid."

Annual Star Party at the X Bar Ranch Marks 15th Anniversary

FREE Public Night Scheduled for Thursday, October 19th

For one week each October over the past 15 years, astronomers from across Texas, other US states and Canada call the X Bar Ranch home.

"There are several people who have made all 15 events," said Stan Meador, with X Bar Ranch Nature Retreat. "Many more have only missed one, and most of those had pretty good reasons to miss as they really don't like doing

Over 130 people have registered to attend this

The dark skies of the region are something that most locals take for granted, but folks whose hobby is taking in the stars above largely live in areas where good dark skies are drowned out by the increasing glow of light. Thus, with the dark skies and infrastructure developed to host such an event, the X Bar Ranch and Eldorado Star Party is a known destination and event that draws astronomers from far and

Each year attendees enjoy sharing their passion and welcome locals from surrounding communities for a free Public Night held on Thursday night. Anyone interested in coming out to see what a star party looks like and to have the unique opportunity to look through some amazing telescopes should come to the X Bar Ranch Nature Retreat before dark Thursday evening, October 19. It is better if guests can see the field with all the equipment set up before it gets too dark. Then after dark, the attendees are happy to let local guests look through the scopes.

Directions to the Star Party: Three miles south of Eldorado, turn right (west) onto FM 2129 and take that road approximately 20 miles to the event entrance. It is just to the south of the X Bar Ranch Nature Retreat Live Oak Lodge entrance. Look for orange road cones near the event gate.

Overall, the event raised approximately $16,200.

Although this special once a year occasion is meant help ensure the ongoing generosity of the Sonora Lions Club locally, the success of this year's event demonstrated the ongoing commitment of a time-honored tradition of celebrating unity and goodwill between all people in the community.
